Some members of the House may look upon this as an experiment, and I must say for myself that until I had more fully studied the question I was inclined to be of a similar opinion. But after hearing Captain Lundborg's testimony and explanations before the Committee on Naval Affairs during the last and present Congress, in conjunction with the testimony and unqualified indorsements of his system by the most eminent living authorities, and having given the subject most careful study and investigation, I feel now justified in declaring most emphatically that the term experiment, in the general acceptation of the word, is a misnomer when used in connection with the building of a vessel upon Captain Lundborg's design, for there can be no experiment in it, none whatever.

Every vessel without exception, be its shape ever so singular or fantastic, is amenable to certain laws, which if disregarded must cause failure, while, on the other hand, if these laws are not infringed upon, failure in the broad sense of the word is entirely out of the question. The experience of ages has proved that the theoretical calculations, determining the behavior of a vessel at sea, are correct. Indeed, it could not possibly be otherwise, since the rules for such calculations are derived purely from mathematical conclusions. They infallibly give true results, and any failure which might occur can always be traced either to errors in the calculations, which, if rightly performed would at the outset have shown the faults in the design, or to mechanical mistakes in the ship not having been built strictly in conformity with the design.

Captain Ericsson's Monitor presented a most radical deviation from the old type vessel, and the building of her was consequently looked upon as an experiment by everybody, except those very few whose scientific attainments enabled them to form a just opinion. But the great inventor knew that his design did not conflict with the laws of science, and the result did not disappoint either him or the American people. This invention, made by a countryman of Captain Ericsson, is also based upon the same immutable laws, in complete accordance with the rigid principles of science; and, therefore, we may safely assume that failure is impossible. Any other conclusion would simply be a contradiction of the laws of science. The building of the bridge between New York and Brooklyn, the Washington Monument, and all other great engineering works ever made, were quite as much experimental as will be the building of this ship.

The vessels now building for our Navy are quite as much experiments as can possibly be the building of a ship on Captain Lundborg's plan, while the vessels proposed in the pending bill, armored and protected cruisers, are experiments in the broadest sense of the word. Captain Lundborg's system involves nothing which can not be foretold with absolute certainty by science, correct and infallible, as proved through the experience of all ages; while the armored vessel is built upon conjectural theories and based upon assumptions without having ever yet been brought to any reliable practical test. Yet we are ready to spend large sums of public money upon these doubtful experiments, while the building of a vessel on the Lundborg plan is no experiment at all. But let us take the worst possible view of the matter; let us for a moment suppose that Captain Lundborg and all the eminent scientists and experts who have indorsed his system are totally wrong—an assumption which is simply absurd—that science in short is no science at all, but only a heterogeneous mass of conjectures, what then would be the actual loss under such circumstances by having built the vessel? The calculation is quickly made:

The cost of a vessel of 3,000 tons displacement would, as before stated, not exceed $1,200,000. Of this sum the engines would cost fully one-half, and they could always be utilized in other vessels, and so could the masts and sails, the anchors, the cables—everything, in fact, which, together with the engines, would make up the greatest portion of the cost of the complete vessel; while finally the hull itself, the cost of which would only be a small fraction of the whole, could probably also be used for some purpose. The actual loss would, therefore, in the worst imaginable contingency be confined to a sum considerably less than one-half and probably not even one-third of the total cost of the vessel. One-third of $1,200,000 is four hundred thousand, which sum consequently would represent the possible loss; but this sum also includes the labor.

Let us now compare this with the risk incurred by building the proposed armored ships. The armor of one of the 6,000-ton vessels will weigh not less than 1,500 tons, and the price of such armor plates may be assumed to be about $500 per ton. That of the Miantonomoh cost, as stated in the report of the Select Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, $535 per ton. The cost of the armor plates for one of these armored ships will therefore amount to $750,000, and for the two vessels to $1,500,000. Add to this the cost of the protective armor for the three cruisers, which may be assumed to cost at least $750,000, and we have an aggregate of $2,250,000 to be expended upon armor plates for these vessels. The whole of this large amount will actually be jeopardized in a purely experimental way, liable to entire loss at any moment if the experience of an actual battle, an experience which is now totally wanting, should prove armor on ships to be worthless, and to be abandoned for something else in keeping with new theories.

Almost every dollar expended on armor plates would then be lost, for the ponderous masses might perhaps not bring even the price of scrap-iron. The comparison as to the possible risk will then take this form: The risk on the Lundborg ship will be $400,000, while the risk on the proposed new ships will be two $2,250,000. But this comparison does not after all give a true conception of the case. More fairly it may be stated thus: In building a vessel on Captain Lundborg's system we incur a very remote risk of losing $400,000, with the expectation, amounting almost to the certainty, of gaining something of inestimable and imperishable national value; while in building the proposed armored and protected cruisers we run a very great risk of losing $2,250,000 at any moment, with a fancied public utility depending upon precarious conditions of continuous peace among the naval powers and the absence of radical changes which may be expected.

But the incredulous, skeptical, and ignorant always antagonize and resist the introduction and progress of improvements in every branch of science and industry. To this rule our non-progressive rulers of the American Navy, whether Secretaries or line officers or advisory boards, are not an exception. They seem to oppose any and all innovations with the same apprehension as they would if a personal right was in jeopardy. When anything new is presented, no matter how meritorious, they cry out "experiments!" "cranks!" and at once retire within their charmed circle of obsolescence.

It may be contended that we are obliged to go abroad for the skill and ability to reconstruct our Navy. I am not willing to admit that assumption. Have our executive authorities made any effort to discover and secure the requisite skill and ability in this country, outside of the technical corps of the Navy Department? Has our Government given any encouragement or offered any inducements to develop this talent? On the contrary has not the policy been to repel and reject all advice and suggestion from outside parties, no matter how wise and important? Has not the Department always given encouragement and support to the technical corps in its suspicions and jealousies toward civilian naval architects? This Government has given no encouragement or recognition to anybody, no matter of what distinction, for superior knowledge, skill, and ability.

John Ericsson was tabooed and ridiculed when he first submitted his proposition to the Government to build the Monitor. There were some officers of our Navy who even predicted that the vessel would not float when launched, and it was only through the influence and efforts of patriotic private citizens and the exigencies of the times that the Monitor was built. Ericsson was compelled to break through the armor of the technical corps of the Government before he could get recognition and be permitted to become a benefactor to his adopted country. Are we going to have another illustration of this illiberal and narrow policy? I trust not. This amendment now under consideration contemplates avoiding that. If it becomes a law, I predict that the American Navy will no longer be the subject of ridicule and derision among the naval powers of the world.

But if we assume this matter to be in any degree experimental, what then is the duty of Congress? In view of the testimony of eminent and skillful experts, its immense importance and value to the country if successful, the small risk in making a practical test, then every consideration of wise policy demands without delay the construction of a ship of this type. It has been a well-established practice of Congress for half a century to appropriate public funds for purposes of experiments for both public and private benefit. The Twenty-seventh Congress, in the days of strict construction of the Constitution, appropriated $30,000 to test the electro-magnetic telegraph invented by Professor Morse. From that period to the present every Congress has appropriated public moneys for experimental objects for almost every conceivable purpose, and the amounts aggregate millions of dollars. Then with preponderating expert testimony approving, with public expediency urging, with the public exigencies demanding, and with abundant legislative precedent sanctioning, and in the highest interest of economy, public safety, and national honor, wisdom, duty, and sound statesmanship, all require and demand the enactment of this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the committee will not adopt this amendment. This gentleman, Mr. Lundborg, whose name appears in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, who is so much opposed to taking up the inventions of foreigners, is a Swede. He appeared before the committee and was heard at considerable length. We were, some of us, considerably impressed with his arguments, but the experts to whom we submitted the plans did not advise the building of this vessel, and the Committee on Naval Affairs thought it was their duty not to prescribe the model for the vessel, but to leave the responsibility in that matter where it properly belongs—with the executive department of the Government. When Captain Lundborg appears before the Department he will no doubt have a fair hearing.

Mr. FINDLAY. I will ask the gentleman was not Captain Ericsson a Swede?

Mr. HERBERT. I think it is the duty and the right of the American Government to go anywhere and everywhere that the best possible plans can be had, and utilize all the information that can be got, come from where it may. Although I have mentioned the fact that this gentleman is a Swede I do not say that is anything in the world against him or his plans. What I say is he should go to the executive department. We were not willing to tie the Department down by adopting a particular plan.

Mr. BALLENTINE. I desire to inform the honorable gentleman from Alabama that Captain Lundborg is a citizen of the United States, and so was Ericsson. When Captain Ericsson submitted his design to build the Monitor there were officers in our Navy who predicted it would not float when launched, and it was only through the influence and efforts of patriotic private citizens and exigencies of the times that the Monitor was built. Captain Ericsson had to break through the technical corps of the Government to get recognition and be permitted to confer a boon on his adopted country.

But I wanted to let the gentleman from Alabama know that this gentleman is not a foreigner; although he was born in Sweden, he is to-day a citizen of the United States. This amendment is in the interest of the civilian naval architects of the country. If we can not find the necessary skill and ability in the technical corps of the Navy to build these vessels let us get the help of the civilian naval architecture of the country. This amendment contemplates doing that thing; and if the amendment becomes a law I predict the American Navy will no longer be a subject of ridicule and derision among the naval powers of the earth.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Was not the Monitor private property? Was it the property of the Government when it fought the Merrimac?

Mr. BALLENTINE. I do not know.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, this bill, in my judgment, is one of the most important that has been brought to the consideration of this Congress, and can not fail to attract the earnest attention of the American people.

It has long been a matter of astonishment that the American Congress has contemplated with such supreme indifference the dilapidated and utterly inefficient condition into which our once proud navy has been allowed to fall. When the Republic was in its infancy, and while still struggling for its existence, no flag floated with more confidence than our starry banner, and the heroic deeds of the American Navy during those years can never be recalled without emotions of pleasure and pride. The renown of our Navy spread through the world and received unbounded praise. From that high eminence we have suffered an ignominious fall, and to-day it can hardly be claimed that we have a navy worthy to be so called. If this Congress shall succeed in putting under headway any plan that shall result ultimately in giving the country such a navy as our wants and standing demand, its work in that regard will receive the just plaudits of the nation, and will be remembered with much gratitude through all coming time.

The bill now under consideration, when shorn of the objections to which I propose to call attention, will, in my judgment, "promote the general welfare of the American people," and if it shall become a law, when so amended, will place us in the way of realizing much that the American heart desires.

The objections to which I allude and would strike out of the bill are to be found:

First. In section 4 I would strike out the following:

Provided, Contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quantity, can be made with responsible parties; otherwise the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase the same, or any portion thereof, and to import it.

Second. In section 6 I would strike out the following:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may buy abroad and import such shafting and other material or machinery as he may be unable to procure in the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy may purchase abroad only such shafting and other special materials as it may be impossible to obtain in the United States in time for use in the construction of the vessels herein provided for.

Mr. Chairman, we have all the material in our own country necessary to construct these vessels, and why should we go to the foreigner to buy that which we already have? Our mechanics and ship-builders are as intelligent and skillful as the foreigner. Why should we go to him for his labor? To go abroad for anything entering into the building, construction, and armament of these vessels is not patriotic, it is not just to our own people, it is not American, and I can never consent to do it. Whenever our people have been brought in contact with the cheap labor of Europe they have risen in their might and repelled it with just indignation. I need hardly to ask you to remember the discontent aroused among the coal-workers of Pennsylvania when a few years ago the mining corporations threatened and in some cases actually did import contract labor to take the place of our citizens in their mines. Nor need I, perhaps, call to your mind the degrading influence imported Chinese labor has had upon American labor on the Pacific coast.

The sections in this bill to which I object propose instead of bringing the cheap labor of Europe here that the Secretary of the Navy shall go to cheap labor in Europe with America's money and buy in part these proposed ships of war, a proposition I am sure the American people will denounce as a blow at their industries and an injustice they will be slow to forget.

It is our duty to care for our own workmen without regard to what can be done by the pauper labor of Europe.

The proposition here suggested to go abroad for material and armament for these war vessels is but an entering-wedge of the pernicious doctrine of free trade and will not be tolerated by the freemen of America.

If we have regard for the prosperity of our people we will never allow the Secretary of the Navy to go abroad to buy a farthing's value in material, labor, or armament for these vessels.

When the European comes to our country to make a home for himself and his family we extend to him a hearty welcome, but our citizens are not willing to adopt a policy which in any respect is more beneficial to the foreigner than to ourselves.

Any measure which has a tendency to reduce the wages of labor should not be advocated for one moment in this House.

I believe it is the patriotic duty of the Government to build our war vessels and all other vessels at home, even though to do so will cost more in wages to workmen than to go abroad.

The building of ships is a great industry and the Government should encourage those engaged in it.

It will be anything but pleasant for the American people to behold the Secretary of the Navy of the United States in the workshops of Europe making contracts to build ships of war for the American Navy. Such a spectacle would hardly be creditable to the self-respect of our people.

Permit me to illustrate how important it is to our people to foster and encourage the art of building ships.

To build a first class iron vessel costs about $550,000. Five per cent. only of this cost is for material. The balance, or 95 per cent., is for labor. This labor begins with the miner and his drill, the woodman and his ax. It passes through many other grades and kinds of employment and receives wages ranging from $2 a day for the laborer to $20 a day paid to the skilled designer. When a ship is built in our own yards all this money is kept at home. It goes to the mechanic and laboring man, to the merchant and professional man. It furnishes the wages and the profits by which our people are enabled to procure homes, to educate their children, and to cultivate the arts of peace. It also represents the property upon which taxes are levied and collected to support the Government.

For one I am not willing to take this money, no, not one cent of it, to a foreign country and pay it to their cheap labor. It belongs to our own people and should be kept here.

In the name of the millions of freemen of Pennsylvania I protest against such a policy and earnestly hope that the objections to which I have referred may be stricken from the bill.

I appreciate fully how important it is to plant our flag boldly and strongly upon the sea, and I am sure the day is not far in the future when it will be there to stay.

It is our duty to build up a navy; but it must be an American navy, built in our own country by our own people and of domestic material.

Then, indeed, may we begin to see the dawn of that period when our country shall stand forth among the nations of the earth a beacon-light to cheer the world, and our flag shall be recognized as an emblem of the superior greatness and dignity of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I hope we shall now have a vote. There is nothing in the bill about foreign materials.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to strike out the last word.

I propose, Mr. Chairman, to vote for this bill as it comes from the committee. I did intend to offer an amendment to it, but I am conscious of the fact that very few amendments offered to any bill coming from any committee of this House ever receive much consideration here. I wish to call attention, however, to the fact that there is a large section of our country which is equally as important in every respect as our seacoast, but for the protection of which no provision is made in this bill. I mean our frontier upon the northern lakes.

It was only this morning that the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] referred to Commodore Perry's famous message, "We have met the enemy and they are ours," and it was on the waters of Lake Erie that the war of 1812 between the United States and England was settled. Yet, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Navy Department, while they recommend the construction of ships for the protection of our seacoasts, make no recommendation for the protection of that great northern frontier extending for nearly 2,000 miles. In the year 1840 the Congress of the United States made an appropriation for one war ship for our northern lakes. That ship has now been in commission forty-six years, and I do not think that during the whole period there has been $10,000 expended upon her for repairs. I have risen on this occasion merely to call the attention of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to this subject, and to suggest that when he brings in a bill in the future for the increase of our Navy it might be well for him to remember that we have a coast on the northern lakes which needs protection as well as the seacoast, and that the people living along that northern border pay a larger proportion of the taxes that go to maintain and keep up your Navy than is paid by those on your Atlantic coast.

Mr. HERBERT. There is nothing in this bill to prevent the use of these vessels on the lakes.

Mr. SCOTT. You can not get them there.

Mr. HERBERT. They can be built there.

Mr. MCADOO. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me a suggestion, the condition of things is totally altered since the war of 1812. The changes in the relative population of Canada and the United States since that time make it almost impossible that we should have another war on that border.

Mr. SCOTT. You can not tell about that.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BALLENTINE; and it was agreed to—ayes 37, noes 36.

The Clerk completed the reading of the first section of the bill.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the first section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to contract with the Pneumatic Dynamite-Gun Company of New York for one dynamite-gun cruiser, as follows: Said cruiser to be not less than 230 feet long, 26 feet breadth of beam, 7½ feet draft, 3,200 horse-power, and guaranteed to attain a speed of 20 knots an hour, and to be equipped with three pneumatic dynamite-guns of 10½-inch caliber, and guaranteed to throw shells containing 200 pounds of dynamite or other high explosives at least 1 mile, each gun to be capable of being discharged once in two minutes, at a price not to exceed $350,000; said contract to be made only on condition that there shall be a favorable report made by the existing naval board on the system; to be paid for as the work progresses, and upon the report of such board or boards of inspectors as the Secretary of the Navy may for that purpose appoint, reserving 30 per cent. on all such payments until the whole work is completed and accepted by the Secretary of the Navy.

The Pneumatic Dynamite-Gun Company shall furnish bonds satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy for the faithful performance of its contract, and for the refunding of the money paid hereunder in case of the non-performance of the same, and shall further agree with the Secretary of the Navy upon a limit of price which shall not be exceeded in any future contracts which the Government may desire to enter into for the purchase of the company's guns.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, since the original bill was perfected this matter has been brought to the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs and they have unanimously recommended that an addition be made to this bill in the precise language of the amendment which I have offered. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that we ought to purchase this gun and gunboat at a cost of $350,000. It is the invention of Lieutenant Zalinski, of the United States Army, one of our own citizens. It is a pneumatic gun, which is guaranteed by its inventor and owner to throw a projectile of dynamite a distance of one mile; which, when at an elevation of 10 degrees, will strike a blow of 6,500 pounds to the square inch and will of course destroy any vessel that it comes within 21 feet of. It has been experimented with for a long time and is considered to be a complete success, and, as I have said, the owner of the gun guarantees that it will accomplish this result, and that guarantee is provided for in the amendment which I have offered.

I have offered it here because this is the proper place for it in the original bill. It is also in the substitute which the gentleman from Alabama has under his charge, and which I understand he proposes to offer later; but I hope that the original bill as reported by the committee will be adopted by this Committee of the Whole and by the House. Of course it may not be, but if it should be, I contend that it is important to have this provision included in it. I offer the amendment in good faith, and hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] will not object to it, because it can do no harm, even if it has to be stricken out afterward by the adoption of the substitute.

It makes the bill, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] suggests, that much better; and it can not possibly do any harm. If we should conclude to adopt the original bill to construct ten ships, instead of five as the substitute provides, then we should want this amendment to be in the bill. I do not know what may be the temper of the House on this question. The committee as constituted by a majority of the House thought it not best to support the original bill; in that respect I think they made a very serious mistake. But if following our individual judgments we should decide here in Committee of the Whole to adopt the original bill, then a provision of this kind would be necessary. I hope therefore it will be adopted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. As I understand, this provision simply authorizes the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to make this contract?

Mr. BUCK. That is all; and it is provided that he shall take a bond from the inventor and owner.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This matter was investigated somewhat by our committee and was favorably considered, but we thought it best that, if this board should be appointed, the matter should be left to them.

Mr. BUCK. The amendment proposes simply to appropriate $350,-

000, to be expended for this purpose if the Secretary of the Navy deems it proper. If this provision should become law I am inclined to think it would revolutionize the question of armament of all war vessels, for this invention is, in my judgment, altogether the most deadly projectile ever discovered. It would destroy the largest ship of war afloat by throwing a charge of 100 pounds of dynamite, which, falling within 21 feet of the vessel, would certainly sink her.

Mr. HERBFRT. As I understand, this amendment is precisely the same provision that is in the substitute; is it not?

Mr. BUCK. Precisely the same, word for word.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope it will be voted down. There is no necessity for it if we adopt the substitute.

Mr. BAYNE. Suppose we adopt the original bill, would it not be best to have this in?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not think we shall do that.

Mr. BAYNE. Is not the chairman of the committee in favor of having the original bill in as good a form as possible if we should adopt it?

Mr. HERBERT. There is no doubt about that; but I do not care to discuss that question now.

Mr. BUCK. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will allow the amendment to come in. It will not do the least harm in the world.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BUCK, it was agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read the following:

SEC. 4. That the armor used in constructing said armored vessels and for completing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties; otherwise the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase the same, or any portion thereof, and import it. Such armor shall be accepted only after passing such tests as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and inserted in the contracts.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to amend by striking out in the section just read all after the word "manufacture," in line 3, down to and including the words "import it," in line 8. The clause which I propose to strike out is in these words:

Provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties; otherwise the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase the same, or any portion thereof, and import it.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion in the same line which I see he is pursuing?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. FINDLAY. The object of the gentleman is evidently to require that the armor which is to be used for the purpose contemplated shall be manufactured in this country and nowhere else.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My amendment will secure that object. The first portion of the section will then read:

That the armor used in constructing said armored vessels and for completing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture.

Mr. FINDLAY. I understand the gentleman's object—that the armor shall be made in this country.

Mr. BOUTELLE. My amendment provides for that.

Mr. FINDLAY. I suggest that the amendment would be much simplified if it merely struck out at the beginning of line 8 the words "and import it." The previous part should remain in. It will then read:

Provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties; otherwise the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase the same, or any portion thereof.

The provision in line 3 requiring this armor to be "of domestic manufacture" will remain; and consequently under the section, if amended as I suggest, the Department will be required to purchase armor of domestic manufacture.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Not with that proviso.

Mr. FINDLAY. Not with the proviso, undoubtedly. If you strike out the proviso——

Mr. REED, of Maine, rose.

Mr. FINDLAY. Excuse me a moment. If you strike out the proviso there is nothing in the section which will provide for the purchase of this material, which of course can be done outside of the contract, if necessary, whereas if you strike out what I propose you will prevent the importation of such material and confine it to domestic manufacture.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Permit me to call the attention of the gentleman from Maryland to the lines in the preceding section of the law. He will see the Secretary of the Navy is there empowered to make contracts, or take such course as may be necessary for that purpose. And then in section 5 it is provided—

That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause one or more of the new vessels hereinbefore provided for to be constructed and one or more of the said monitors to be completed in one or more of the navy-yards of the United States.

Mr. FINDLAY. There is no power in that for him to purchase abroad or import material from abroad.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not wish him to import from abroad.

Mr. FINDLAY. Neither do I, and that is what I wish to prevent, especially after you provide in this section 4—

That the armor used in constructing said armored vessels and for completing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is provided for.

Mr. FINDLAY. The part of the proviso I leave in provides that the Secretary is authorized to purchase the same, or any portion thereof, or to make contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Practically, how can the armor be purchased except under contract? It is not kept in stock.

Mr. FINDLAY. Undoubtedly not. That is true, but still at the same time if this section is passed with the words I have suggested left out, that is, if those words, "and import it," are struck out, there is nothing by which the Secretary of the Navy could make purchase of this armor abroad.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is nothing if the proviso be taken away.

Mr. FINDLAY. There is no use of the proviso except for the power to be vested in the Secretary of the Navy to make contracts.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Contracts abroad?

Mr. FINDLAY. If you strike these words out—that is, the words "and import it"—you will give him no power to make contracts abroad. You may infer that from what power you do give him. You will have a barren, naked proposition if you adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; it provides it must be of the best obtainable quality of domestic manufacture.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Strike out all after the word "otherwise."

Mr. FINDLAY. Certainly you should leave something in there by which he may be guided in obtaining the article.

Mr. HISCOCK. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] will accomplish the purpose certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHEELER addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HERBERT. I hope we are not going to get into a political discussion here upon this question. It will not further the bill, and there is an amendment before the House for consideration. The question is, ought that amendment to be adopted?

Now, this section of the bill provides that this armor shall be of domestic manufacture; that is to say, it is mandatory, with the proviso that contracts for furnishing the same at a reasonable time, and at a reasonable price, and of proper quality can be made. I do not have any doubt whatever about the fact that this armor would be procured here under this bill.

But there is a limitation that simply provides against any combination on the part of the iron men or of anybody else so that the Department or the Government shall not be placed in their power. The Secretary is directed in express terms to get it of domestic manufacture if he can, at a reasonable price, and certainly no gentleman here would desire that an unreasonable price should be paid. It is simply a provision put in there for the protection of the Government.

I admit what the gentleman from Ohio says, that the Senate Committee on Ordnance and War Ships did report that the armor could be made in this country, and I hope it will be made in this country, because we will not be independent, so far as the means of self-defense are concerned, until we can furnish our own ships and heavy guns here. That is the purpose of the bill in every line and in every section of it. If gentlemen will examine they will see that purpose clearly. There is no sort of doubt about it, and this provision is simply for the protection of the Government.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have had my attention called by my honored friend from New York to the fact that this seeks to secure armor which can not be manufactured in this country inside of three years, and that this is only to meet an emergency which may possibly arise.

Mr. HERBERT. I was coming to that in a moment. It is a provision inserted for caution sake, so that in case it can not be done here within the time required it can be gotten elsewhere. So far as the Miantonomoh is concerned, which is now being armored, Secretary Chandler bought that armor abroad because he could not get it here within the time required. Now, suppose we could not within a reasonable time get it here; if our own people can not get the plant ready in time, the Government certainly should not be compelled to wait until American manufacturers can procure the necessary plant and material, which may take years. If they can furnish it, and I think there is no doubt of the fact that they can, why the Secretary of the Navy is required to get it from them. There is no doubt of our ability to have these vessels built within a reasonable time and out of iron and steel of domestic manufacture. If possible, this must be done; and I do not see how gentlemen would really want the bill to pass or want the Navy increased without some such provision as this in it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to have my amendment as modified reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to my honored friend from Alabama that for one I would not throw any obstacle in the way of securing the early completion of these cruisers. A condition of things may arise, and very speedily, which will suggest to this country the importance of having vessels of this character ready for service. But there is one thing equally clear that unless our domestic manufacturers are encouraged by the Government they can not, they will not establish plants equal to providing the character of armor required in completeing these cruisers; and it is in the interest of the Government ultimately that it should give such aid and encouragement to domestic manufacturers as will enable them to meet all requirements as they arise.

But we have reason to be apprehensive from the experience of the past few years that there will not be given that encouragement to our own people in the matter of producing heavy armor plates and guns which they ought to receive, and in the absence of which it is utterly impossible for us to ever realize our hopes that our own people will invent and manufacture every kind of war enginery needed to defend our country against all assaults, whether of a domestic character or whether they shall come from abroad. I recognize the force of what my honorable friend suggested, that in this emergency it might possibly be necessary to purchase certain guns or material abroad; but for one I do not want that to interfere with that policy of the United States which looks to establishing a plant in this country equal to providing whatever our Government may need in the conduct of offensive and defensive warfare.

This can only be done by giving our own manufacturers such encouragement and governmental patronage as will insure a just and proper return for the outlay and effort embarked in establishing a proper plant.

If I could conceive it possible that the bill as it is would not have the effect to stifle rather than encourage our own manufacturers I would be glad to clothe the Secretary of the Navy with power to purchase wherever in the earth he could find that material which is necessary to push forward the very early completion of these cruisers.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. My object in offering this amendment has been to encourage if possible what I regard as one of the primarily important features of the re-establishment and maintenance of a navy; and that is the establishment in this country of the machinery and the plant and the hammers that are necessary to furnish the material out of which the navy can be constructed. The establishment of a navy for a nation like ours is not accomplished when we have simply obtained ships. We want to have the ability here to construct ships. That is infinitely of more importance than the question whether we shall have a few ships at this time.

I am told by manufacturers that the only difficulty in the way of manufacturing this armor is as to the size of the hammer and the weight of certain machinery which is too expensive to be put up in this country, unless there is some encouragement that there would be use for it. These immense masses of iron and steel are not used in business operations in civil life. They are only used in the military operations of the Government. I want the Government of the United States to offer an inducement and encouragement for setting up this plant.

Mr. FINDLAY. I desire to say a single word in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

There has been a variety of efforts made at one time or another to introduce into the policy of this country the purchase of foreign-built ships; but each time that attempt has resulted in failure. Now, it seems to me the attempt, even in the very mild form in which it appears in this section, to purchase abroad the armor which is necessary for the monitors, particularly when it is followed up, in section 6 of the bill, by a provision for the purchase of engines, boilers, machinery, shafting, and what not that may be necessary for the vessels to be constructed under this bill, in certain contingencies where it is impossible for the Secretary of the Navy to purchase it or have it made in this country—when this provision, coupled with the second one, comes before this House it simply means an attempt to buy abroad what is necessary for the motive power and machinery of the Navy.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FINDLAY. In a moment. Now, I say, sir, if we are to have a navy in this country we must be able to put into the vessels all that is necessary to run them, all that is necessary to armor them, all that is necessary to make them effective, and that we have only half a navy if we are to build ships and then go abroad and buy what is necessary to run them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman has anticipated my question, which was, whether it is not as important to be able to construct a navy as to have it.

Mr. FINDLAY. That is what I am contending for. And I go further. If it be requisite to appropriate a large sum of money for the purpose of establishing the plant by the Government of the United States in its own navy-yards, necessary to turn out the guns and the armor requisite to make the ships effective, I am ready to vote that sum. There seems to be an impression a navy, by the wave of some magic wand, can spring out of the sea like an exhalation. Why, sir, it is a tedious process. The ocean on her sterile and uncertain bosom produces no fruit of her own. All that is there comes from the land, from the forests and from the mines. And even, sir, if in some pitying throe she should cast up her dead and deliver them to us, if all the fleets, argosies, armadas that ever floated on her bosom and now lie in the oozy bottom of the deep were to come up and with weather-stained wings should again rustle upon the face of the sea, not a stick or spar would be of any use in our modern naval service. It is true in that strange resurrection much of the United States Navy would come up. But of what use would it be to us?

We might as well settle on the policy now and here by laying the foundations of our future navy broad and deep, not merely to stand upon our bottom, as was suggested by a distinguished gentleman, but to stand on our bottoms, which make a still surer foundation. The time has come when we should not be nibbling at this thing, when we should not be building half and buying half, but when we should determine upon a policy right now and here by which we can build the whole and furnish the whole by American enterprise and genius, which I hold to be equal to anything required of us in any emergency.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH addressed the Chair.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the friends of this bill will allow a vote. If we have too much talk it can not pass.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Only a moment. I was unhappy if I conveyed the idea to some of my friends here that I advocated the provision of this section. It is manifest to my mind that if we adopt this section the steps in the direction of providing sufficient plant in this country and of giving sufficient encouragement to American enterprise will be indefinitely postponed. I do not think there is any such pressing want now as should authorize or compel Congress to make such a provision here which looks to reasonable prices and raises the question of economy. Nor is there anything here that requires the Secretary of the Navy to recognize the necessity in procuring plans and giving contracts to encourage our own industries enabling them to provide for what is absolutely essential to give us anything having the semblance of a navy.

I can not fully reconcile myself to voting for that clause as it stands unless my friend will couple with it a provision to compel the Secretary of the Navy to proceed at once to make contracts for whatever may be required in the matter of constructing our Navy, and to see to it that these plants shall be established under the encouragement of the Government, if they can not be established otherwise.

Mr. LONG. Have you any doubt that in case the Secretary of the Navy should find that he could purchase the armor abroad much cheaper than at home, even if it could be produced at home, he would feel that the consideration of price would compel him to prefer the foreign article?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have not a doubt of it.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, for the remainder of the session, on account of important business.

To Mr. GLASS, indefinitely, on account of indisposition.

To Mr. PETERS, on account of sickness.

INCREASE OF THE NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a motion to limit debate.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is a very important proposition that we are now on. Do I understand the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to say that armor can not be procured in this country for the purposes which this section is intended to cover?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; I do not say that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then why should the Secretary have such a privilege with regard to this matter?

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to answer him right here?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will.

Mr. HERBERT. The Secretary of the Navy will be obliged, in order to procure the armor in this country, to make contracts for large amounts of it to carry out the provisions of this bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Precisely.

Mr. HERBERT. And this contemplates that he shall make those contracts with persons who will enter into an agreement to furnish the armor, but in order not to put himself at the mercy of combinations who might charge him whatever they chose this provision is inserted, that the contracts shall be made on condition that the contractors shall agree to furnish the armor in a reasonable time and at a reasonable price. These provisos are put in here simply for the purpose of protecting the Government against combinations.

Mr. FINDLAY. Will there be no competition among the contractors?

Mr. HERBERT. Of course there will be competition among them, and this is the way to secure competition. This is for the protection of the Government.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the force of what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] says, but we are giving the Secretary of the Navy a very grave power. We are proposing that his judgment as to what is a reasonable price shall control. Now, the real thing that we need in this country is not so much armor for two or three monitors, as it is establishments which can make armor for all the monitors and all the iron-clad vessels that we may want, and we want it for the future not for the present. Yet we must make a beginning somewhere. We have got to cause the establishment in this country of plants capable of manufacturing this armor, and we have got to make a beginning. It would seem to me that this bill is a good place to begin, and to put it in such a shape that we shall have establishments that can do this work.

The idea which I got when I was on the commission for investigating this and cognate subjects, was that there were already two or three establishments in this country capable of making the necessary armor, and if the amendment which my colleague has proposed is adopted the Secretary can at once see what can be done; and if he receives any bids which he can satisfy Congress are exorbitant, why, we meet next December, and in the mean time he can reject all bids that he does not regard as proper and on the rejection of which he is ready to face Congress. But if we give him the simple right to reject on account of price, then we do not get any responsibility and we do not get any establishments for making armor. I confess I hesitated when the gentleman from Alabama made his suggestion that we were in danger of subjecting the Government to extortion. I am opposed to that. I do not believe in surrendering this Government to any great establishment, nor, on the other hand, do I believe in surrendering the power and capacity of this country to make what we need.

We have delayed this matter of a navy year after year; we have delayed it Congress after Congress; and although we made a commencement in the Forty-seventh Congress we have to-day no war vessels of any consequence except the Dolphin, and everybody knows what a struggle we have had to get even the Dolphin.

Mr. CURTIN. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIN. We shall never have a navy until we build it from the keel up and put the guns on.

Mr. REED, of Maine. True.

Mr. CURTIN. Now, I can inform the gentleman that iron for this armor imported from abroad will cost three or four hundred dollars a ton, and I can bring to the Secretary of the Navy in ten days men who would produce that armor for $175 a ton, and better armor than can be obtained abroad. [Applause.]

Mr. HERBERT. Now I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. CURTIN. I am not in favor of allowing to any Department of this Government any latitude for the use of foreign material. We should require that all our ships be built of material produced in this country and by the ingenuity of American citizens.

Mr. HISCOCK. I heartily agree with the gentleman from Maine that we should be prepared in this country to build all parts of a ship. Nevertheless I suppose it is true, and we might as well meet the question——

Mr. REED, of Maine. What did the gentleman from New York say?

Mr. HISCOCK. I said I agreed with the gentleman that we should be prepared to build all parts of our ships in this country.

Mr. CURTIN. We are prepared now.

Mr. HISCOCK. We are not prepared as to every part. So far as concerns the armor for the turrets we are not prepared to make that.

Mr. RANDALL. Permit me to say to the gentleman from Maine there is no difficulty so far as I know in some of the establishments in this country making the armor necessary for the double-bottomed ironclads, and we really need not embrace that in this provision at all.

A MEMBER. It is not embraced.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it is embraced by the language.

Mr. HERBERT. I think the gentleman will see that it is not. This provision only applies to the armor used in constructing the armored vessels.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the term "armored vessels" applies to the other vessels as well as to the monitors.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, of course.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I suggest that we do not apply this provision to the new vessels at all, but leave it to apply to the turrets of the monitors. As has been stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], there may be difficulty in getting immediately some of the armor for the turrets of the monitors, but there is no difficulty in getting in this country the armored steel-plate essential for the vessels other than the monitors.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand, we are not prepared and can not be for some little time to build the armor for these turrets. I am willing, nevertheless, to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Maine and force the preparation. We may as well get ready now to do the work as at any other time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, the best information which I have been able to obtain—and it is information which I believe to be entirely reliable—is to the effect that the manufacturing establishments of this country can within six months put themselves in condition to produce this armor which is required——

Mr. HISCOCK. No.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, I am making this statement on what I believe to be sufficient authority. The gentleman can contradict it afterward if he wishes to do so. I say the best information I have—and I have had reassurance on this subject very recently—is that if we will offer simply the inducement provided in this amendment that American manufacturers shall have the opportunity to produce the armor for these vessels, they will within six months be ready to respond. Certainly this a very small inducement.

I am also informed and know that to-day there is at one of the hotels in this city the agent of a French manufactory of armor who is here ready to make these contracts. Furthermore, I am informed that two or three officers of the United States Government in the city of Washington to-day are the representatives of an English manufactory of armor.

Mr. MCADOO. Is it not the fact that the last administration contracted with the English firm of Cammell & Brown for compound armor for the Miantonomoh?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think it likely it did.

Mr MCADOO. And the plates are now on the dock at Brooklyn, being put on the turrets.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But I tell you, no other administration, with my consent or by my vote, will be permitted to make these contracts abroad, refusing to our people the inducement which I believe is all that is necessary to make us independent in this matter.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has expired.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, it is well known to members of this House that when the hour of 5 o'clock to-day is reached, if this bill shall not have passed, we shall have no bill at this session for the increase of the Navy. Now, if gentlemen will consume time in talking instead of voting, we may as well put a stop to the consideration of this bill and go to something else.

Mr. MCADOO. That is so.

Mr. SAYERS. From 1874 up to this hour these monitors have been in process of construction. Gentlemen on the other side have complained that appropriations have not been made by previous Congresses for the completion of these monitors. The Naval Committee has reported in favor of such appropriations. We obtained from the House an assignment of two days for the consideration of this bill. One of those days, the day before yesterday, was taken from us by a vote of this House; and a majority of those who voted against the consideration of this bill were Republicans. Now, we have not quite three hours before us for the consideration of this bill. Let us vote upon this amendment; and if the House is in favor of it let it be put on the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I must say I am surprised at the extreme lameness of the excuse the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] presents. I am surprised at his introduction of it at this moment. We are discussing the bill legitimately and properly, and he is proposing an important matter like this shall be disposed of without discussion. And why? Simply because eight months have elapsed without the party which is responsible for the control of the business of the House doing anything for the construction of a navy. And he comes in here with his little excuse that the other day a majority of Republicans voted one way or the other. What has that to do with it? It was pitted against another important bill. Why did the gentleman and his associates so conduct the business of the House that the naval bill which interests your coast should be pitted against a bill which interests all the other country? Does he think he can disguise from the people the real issue? It was not a question of a naval bill or nothing; it was a question of the naval bill or another bill in which the people of the interior of the country thought themselves more interested. But after having gone eight months without bringing these matters here before the House as he ought to have done he proposes now to stifle honest and legitimate discussion on the ground the bill is in danger.

Mr. CURTIN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas intimates if we do not go this thing blindly and accept the bill without discussion we can not have any naval legislation at this session of Congress. Sir, if we are to accept conditions which will preclude the establishment of places and means for making the armor of naval vessels or go without this bill, I say go without the bill, and try next year or the next to put ourselves on a footing for the construction of ironclads or steel vessels which will compete with the stoutest navy of the world. [Applause.]

We do not know what we can do, and we do not know how far the hope excited by the agitation of the establishment of a metallic navy has led the people in the way of preparation. There by yonder eastern door of the Senate lies a single piece of metal which comes to us from the Union Iron and Steel Works of the Pacific coast, an establishment that is prepared to do the largest and best work which can be done in armored ships of any size. What are its appointments? I do not know in full, but I know that establishment has paid to one of the manufacturers of machine tools in my district $130,000 in order to have the latest improvements in such machinery, and has not given the firm in my district the monopoly of its trade.

I do know a firm in Pittsburgh which will produce you armor for ships which will resist any projectile that any naval vessel of the world can withstand.

Mr. CURTIN. Let me say they have the plate ready now.

Mr. KELLEY. They have the plate ready. It is of steel, not riveted, of three kinds, welded with the weldable qualities of each of the grades of steel.

Look at Alabama as an iron and steel producing country. Who of us four years ago knew that Anniston was a region from which the country might hope some day to equip itself for shaping its steel guns for armament? I do not say it can produce either now, but it is advancing with progress that seems magical to the master workmen and contractors of Great Britain and Germany.

Mr. BUCK. We have now but two hours and ten minutes to complete this bill. I would like to say how much I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, but I will not take the time of the committee to do it, for time is more valuable now than speech. We can spend it to much more advantage in voting. [Applause.] I appeal, therefore, to every friend of this bill to give his vote for the amendment, and give it now.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to read what I have written here in the shape of an amendment to the amendment, which I think will meet the views of all parties. It is as follows:

SEC. 4. That the armor used in constructing said armored vessels shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, and the armor used in finishing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, unless it shall be found that a part of the turret armor for said monitors can not be furnished within a reasonable time and at a reasonable price in the United States. Such armor shall be accepted only after passing such tests as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and inserted in the contracts.

Mr. WHEELER. Strike out "reasonable price"——

Mr. RANDALL. The effect of this is to allow the Secretary of the Navy to buy certain armor that it is alleged can not be produced in this country at present for the turrets within reasonable time, but that all of the other armor shall be purchased in our own country.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think that ought to be adopted.

Mr. FINDLAY. Upon what information is the statement made that this armor can not be produced for the turrets in this country?

Mr. RANDALL. By expert testimony; those conversant with the matter.

Mr. FINDLAY. Where is that information to be found?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I have heard it stated by American manufacturers themselves. I am not at liberty to mention names here, but I so understand.

I want to say that the Secretary of the Navy is as firm in purpose as any of us here in desiring to make these purchases of domestic material and of domestic manufacturers. I offer that, therefore, as an amendment to the amendment, and think that it will meet the views of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I prefer the original proposition.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, it was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BOUTELLE.

Several MEMBERS. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the armor used in constructing said armored vessels and for completing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase the same by contract or otherwise. Such armor shall be accepted only after passing such tests as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and inserted in the contracts.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 101, noes 67.

So the amendment was adopted.

Section 5 was read, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause one or more of the new vessels hereinbefore provided for to be constructed and one or more of the said monitors to be completed in one or more of the navy-yards of the United States; and if he shall be unable to contract with responsible parties to construct or complete, at reasonable prices, all or any of the vessels hereinbefore provided for, he shall cause the same to be constructed or completed in such of the navy-yards of the United States as may be best adapted thereto.

Mr. BRADY. I offer an amendment to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding to the section:

"Provided, That if practicable one of said vessels shall be constructed or completed at the Norfolk (Va.) navy-yard.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Chairman, I realize fully the importance of the passage of the bill under consideration and have no desire to take up any of the time of the committee except for a few brief moments in advocacy of the amendment I have offered. It is a well-known fact that the navy-yard at Norfolk is superior in many respects to any navy-yard in this country if not in the world. Admiral Decatur, Rear-Admiral Smith, successive boards of naval officers, and successive Secretaries of the Navy have in their reports all agreed that it is, or should be, made the great navy-yard of the country. Its climate is unsurpassed, its harbor is open all seasons of the year, mechanics can work at Norfolk out of doors all the year round; indeed it is the only great naval establishment on the whole Atlantic coast.

Now, as to the plant necessary for the construction of these vessels a very considerable portion of it is already on hand at the Norfolk navy-yard. We also have the facilities in order to establish all the requisite plant to do the work. Millions of dollars of Northern capital has been invested in our State to develop our valuable iron and coal resources, and we can more readily than many other sections of the country furnish all the iron and steel needed for the complete construction of all these vessels. As to skilled mechanics and laborers, I assert that we have at Norfolk men who are equal in that respect to any elsewhere in this country or in the world.

These mechanics and laborers are now and have been for months unemployed; idleness reigns supreme at this magnificent naval establishment, and our people who pay the United States millions of dollars yearly of internal-revenue taxes are sadly in need of work.

Under the provisions of the section as embodied in the bill, and without the amendment I have submitted, the discretion as to this construction and completion of these vessels is left with the Secretary of the Navy. I am not in favor, in consideration of the treatment by the present Democratic administration of the Norfolk navy-yard, of permitting that discretion to remain in his hands. I have no fault to find with him; but I do claim that he is under the influence of New York. We have a New York President and a New York Secretary of the Treasury and a New York Secretary of the Navy; and, sir, unless the amendment I propose is adopted, in my judgment this work will go to New York and to the other navy-yards in the North and the Norfolk navy-yard will be left out and our section of the country will not receive the consideration it deserves in the distribution of the work authorized under the bill.

I am not here, Mr. Chairman, making an appeal as far as my own party is concerned; because it is a fact well known that we have had under the present administration a clean sweep in the Norfolk navy-yard, and the question of politics therefore has nothing to do with it, so far as I am concerned. I am for justice to all sections; and I believe that the Norfolk navy-yard, with all its facilities, can do this work equally as good, if not better, than any other navy-yard in the country. It can be demonstrated to every fair-minded man that in many respects our Virginia navy-yard is the best in the United States, and as a matter of justice and fair-dealing we should have at least one of these vessels to build. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be no such restrictive provision adopted as that suggested by the gentleman from Virginia. There are other navy-yards in this country besides the navy-yard at Norfolk in which the work can be done equally well and probably better; and I will merely mention here in that connection that there is the League Island navy-yard.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Where is it? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Near Philadelphia; in which any kind of work can be done, and all the vessels, iron-clad or otherwise, can be constructed, where we have thousands of skilled mechanics and laborers ready and fit to do that work.

I have nothing to say against the Norfolk navy-yard. I believe it is a great navy-yard and a very good situation, but I am unwilling to make such a direction as this to the Secretary of the Navy. I am unwilling to take from him that discretion which would enable him to select the best locality for this work and oblige him, by legislation, to do a portion of the work in any navy-yard that may be named. Why, sir, can you doubt the ability of the League Island navy-yard, located where it is near everything that enters into the construction of an iron vessel or a wooden vessel?

I simply rose, Mr. Chairman, to protest against individualizing any naval station in which any of this work may be done. I am willing to leave it to the Secretary of the Navy, and I believe the Secretary of the Navy, in considering and making up his mind where the work shall be done, or a portion of it, will select the League Island naval station.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee rise to obtain an order to limit debate, unless the committee is willing to vote now.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let us vote on this amendment.

The question being taken on Mr. BRADY'S amendment, the chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BRADY. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 86.

Mr. BRADY. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY].

Before the count was completed,

Mr. BRADY said: I withdraw the point as to a quorum.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I offer as a substitute for the fifth section what the Clerk has at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall advertise for proposals and shall contract with responsible parties in the United States to construct or complete at reasonable prices all or any of the vessels herein provided for: Provided, That all the repairs of vessels of the Navy, so far as practicable, shall be made in the navy-yards of the United States, one or more of which shall be completely equipped for the construction of modern war ships in case of exigency.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The section of the bill for which this is proposed as a substitute provides that one or more of the new vessels shall be constructed and one or more of the monitors completed in one or more of the navy-yards of the United States. And it provides further if the Secretary shall be unable to contract with responsible parties to construct or complete at reasonable prices all or any of these vessels he shall cause the same to be constructed or completed in the navy-yards.

Under the section as it stands in the bill the Secretary may, if he choose, cause all of these vessels to be constructed and all of the monitors to be completed in the navy-yards. The experience of naval construction has been that work in the navy-yards is very much more expensive than the work which has been done outside. And in consonance with the principle on which I advocated the amendment discussed a short time ago I believe it is of the very first importance that we should encourage the establishment of private ship-building yards in this country upon which the Government may rely in case of exigency.

It is well known that for many years the British Government have adopted the principle of having their vessels very largely constructed outside of the navy-yards.

Mr. HEWITT. "English, you know."

Mr. BOUTELLE. I quoted that for the purpose of endeavoring to secure for this amendment the vote of my friend from New York, as he is always so fond of an English precedent.

In this country the experience has been, as I have said, that the construction of vessels in private yards has cost very much less than in the navy-yards. My substitute provides that these vessels shall be constructed upon proposals from private parties; but that one or more of the navy-yards of the United States shall be put in complete equipment for the construction of war vessels, so that the Government may have its own establishment in readiness, if necessary, and that the navy-yards shall be utilized as far as practicable for all the repairs required by the Navy.

I think it would be profitable for the Government not only to offer such encouragement as is afforded in giving the construction of these vessels to the open competition of private ship-builders, but I believe that we could well afford to offer a large bonus, a large pecuniary encouragement for the establishment of the great plants which are necessary to do this work. But it appears to me that we ought at least to afford such encouragement as is furnished in the construction of these few ships to the great ship-building establishments of this country, to encourage them in keeping up their plant and improving it so as to put us in a position of independence of foreign manufacturers.

Mr. MCADOO. I desire to ask the gentleman a question before he resumes his seat. Do you contemplate by this amendment that any ships shall be built in the navy-yards?

Mr. BOUTELLE. None of these. But I have provided that at the discretion of the Secretary one or more of the navy-yards of the United States shall be completely equipped for the purpose of constructing ships, so that if hereafter at any time some succeeding Congress, Democratic or Republican, shall be liberal enough to provide for building a large number of vessels the Government will have facilities in its own yards to participate in the construction.

Mr. MCADOO. I desire to say one word on this amendment. In the first place, one or two of the navy-yards, as they exist to-day, are in better condition for building or repairing vessels than any private establishment. In the second place, considering the profit derived by the contractor from the Government, it is about as cheap to build the vessels in the navy-yards. In the third place, and on the authority of eminent men in the naval service, I will say that the vessels which have heretofore been built or repaired in the navy-yards have given more satisfaction as to the working of their machinery and the durability of their hulls than any vessels constructed or repaired by private parties.

I hope this amendment will not prevail. The bill as it is now simply leaves it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy that he can build one or more of these vessels in a navy-yard and the rest can be built by contract. I have no doubt from my knowledge of that gentleman that in the exercise of his discretion he will not undertake to build all of these vessels in the navy-yards, and even if he did I fail to see anything to be condemned I hope a vote will soon be reached. A minority of the whole House, as I think, but a strong and determined one, have given us a hearing on condition. As a matter of honor I for one propose to keep faith with them. Let us start the new navy now, at any rate.

Mr. FELTON. Is there a navy-yard in the United States capable of building an iron-clad ship?

Mr. MCADOO. Yes, sir.

Mr. FELTON. What one?

Mr. MCADOO. The Brooklyn navy-yard, or the navy-yard at Norfolk, or the navy-yard in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. FELTON. I think the gentleman is mistaken. I do not think there is one in the United States.

Mr. MCADOO. Oh, yes; they have an excellent navy-yard at Mare Island, where this work can be done better than in any private yard.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know the object of this section. Here is a proposition to have all these ships built in the Government navy-yards by workmen under Government employ. Now, what is the object of that?

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman is mistaken. There is no such proposition in the bill. The bill, fairly read, simply indicates that it is the intention that not more than one of these vessels shall be built in the Government yards, but it gives the Secretary the discretion, if he can not get the work done at fair prices outside, to do it all in the navy-yards—which, however, he does not propose to do, and I have no idea that he will do.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But this gives him the power.

Mr. HERBERT. It gives him the power to protect the Government against combinations. That is the purpose, and the sole purpose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The sole purpose? It will take pretty nearly eighteen months to get up the plans, and that will bring us to a period when the public mind will be in such a condition that the state of things which seems to be provided for here ought not to be permitted. It seems to me that if we really want this legislation for the benefit of the Navy we had better not have in it this provision. It is going to be liable to misconstruction either on the part of the Secretary of the Navy or on the part of the public, and I should much rather have misconstruction on the part of the public than on the part of the Secretary.

Mr. HERBERT. Oh, I think there is no danger. While we undertake to build these ships, we must not lose sight of the necessity of protecting the Government.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama whether there would not be as thorough protection secured by open competition between the bidders as there would be by setting up the Government of the United States to compete against its own citizens?

Mr. HERBERT. There is nothing wrong in setting the Government to compete against its own citizens if they are making combinations against it. I trust that we shall now have a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BOUTELLE; and it was rejected—ayes 69, noes 93.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "or more," in line 2 of this section, and also the words "or more," in line 3. It seems to me that we do not want to enter upon a new policy with reference to this matter by requiring all these vessels to be built in the navy-yards, for that is what this means.

Mr. HERBERT. Oh, no; not at all. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then if you mean only to build up one navy-yard, say so. If you want to have one navy-yard fully equipped for the purpose of building or repairing vessels, this amendment of mine will not interfere with that.

Mr. MCKENNA. May I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. MCKENNA. If there is a necessity for one navy-yard——

Mr. HISCOCK. I don't think there is any such necessity.

Mr. HENLEY. There is a necessity, I suppose, for contract work, to make men work ten hours a day at starvation prices.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal said about encouraging home industry and American labor—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I do not want to occupy time, Mr. Chairman, or to delay the passage of the bill.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HISCOCK, it was rejected—ayes 62, noes 94.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the engines, boilers, and machinery of all the new vessels provided for by this act shall be of domestic manufacture and procured by contract, unless the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to obtain the same at fair prices, in which case he may construct the same, or any portion thereof, in the navy-yards of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may buy abroad and import such shafting and other material or machinery as he may be unable to procure in the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy may purchase abroad only such shafting and other special materials as it may be impossible to obtain in the United States in time for use in the construction of the vessels herein provided for.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "States," in line 6, to and including the word "States," in line 9. Also strike out the word "further," in line 9.

Mr. BUCK. The provision proposed to be stricken out is that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to buy abroad or to import such shafting and other material or machinery as he may be unable to procure in the United States. That provision would authorize him to purchase all the materials, engines, and boilers abroad. I have separated that from the following proviso because they are entirely different. In the one at the end of the section it is only provided that the Secretary may purchase such shafting and special materials as it may be impossible for him to obtain in this country. While I should vote to strike that out also, I do not feel so strongly called upon to oppose it as to offer an amendment striking it out, but if any gentleman chooses to offer such an amendment to my amendment, I will vote for it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will state for the information of the House that as a matter of fact the language from "provided," in line 6, down to "provided," in line 9, is a misprint.

Mr. HERBERT. No; it is not. The gentleman himself in committee offered the last proviso as an amendment in addition to the other.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The last proviso was a substitute for the other.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BUCK. The first proviso should be struck out.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is surplusage.

Mr. BUCK. I think there can be no objection to striking it out.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not object. With that clause omitted, I presume the section will read better.

The amendment to strike out from "United States," in line 6, down to and including "United States," in line 9, was agreed to.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of testing the sense of the House, I move to strike out the second proviso. I do not care to occupy time with any remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the clause proposed to be struck out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy may purchase abroad only such shafting and other special materials as it may be impossible to obtain in the United States in time for use in the construction of the vessels herein provided for.

Mr. HERBERT. We can not get along without that provision.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Navy shall not contract for the construction or completion of any of said vessels, or of their engines, machinery, or boilers, until drawings and specifications of the same shall have been provided or adopted by him; and after said drawings and specifications shall have been provided, adopted, and approved as aforesaid, and work shall have been commenced on any contract made therefor, such plans and specifications shall not be changed in any respect when the cost of such change in the execution of the work exceeds $500, except upon the written order of the Secretary or acting Secretary of the Navy; and if changes are thus made, the actual cost thereof and the damage caused thereby shall be ascertained, estimated, and determined by a board of naval officers to be provided for in the contract; and in any contract made pursuant to this act it shall be provided in the terms thereof that the contractor shall be bound by the determination of said board, or a majority thereof, as to the amount of increased or diminished compensation said contractor shall be entitled to receive, if any, in consequence of such change or changes. In every contract to be made under this act there shall be prescribed a period within which the work provided for in said contract, or specified portions thereof, shall be completed, and the completion of such work within the periods prescribed shall be insured by penal provisions. For the construction or completion of such vessels hereinbefore provided for as the Secretary of the Navy shall propose to have constructed or completed by contract, as well as also for the engines, boilers, and machinery hereinbefore provided for, he shall invite proposals from every American ship-builder and other person who shall show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that within three months from the date of the contract he will be possessed of the necessary plant for the performance of the work in the United States which he shall offer to undertake, and such contract shall be let to the lowest and best responsible bidder or bidders, after at least sixty days' advertisement, published in five leading papers in the United States, inviting proposals for the work proposed, which work shall be subject to all such rules, regulations, superintendence by naval officers during construction, and provisions as to bonds and security for the quality and due completion of the work as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe; and no vessel, boiler, engine, machinery, or portion thereof shall be accepted unless completed in strict conformity with the contract; and the authority given hereby shall take effect at once. The Secretary of the Navy shall have the power to reject any or all bids made under the provisions of this act.

Mr. EVERHART. I move to amend by inserting after the word "same," in line 4, the words "by citizens of the United States," so as to read, "until drawings and specifications of the same by citizens of the United States shall have been provided or adopted by him."

The amendment was not agreed to, there being—ayes 16, noes 77.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to inquire whether there is any provision of general law which will secure the proper distribution of the advertisements which this section provides shall be "published in five leading newspapers of the United States." Of course the newspapers selected should not be confined to one or two cities.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know whether there is any general law on the subject; but this provision is copied from previous bills.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Of course the newspapers selected ought to be published in different parts of the United States.

Mr. HERBERT. That matter will of course be looked after by the Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, we will trust the Secretary of the Navy.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BUCK. If no gentleman desires to offer any amendment to the last section I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the committee rise and report the bill as amended.

Mr. HERBERT. The understanding is that in the House I shall offer the substitute.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The substitute can not be offered in the House.

Mr. HERBERT. Oh, yes, it can.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no control of that matter.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I notify the gentleman from Alabama that the course he indicates will be objected to.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter which the present occupant of the chair can not determine.

The motion of Mr. BUCK was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments.

Mr. BUCK and Mr. HERBERT addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT].

Mr. REED, of Maine. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in Committee of the Whole the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK] made the motion that the committee rise and report the bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Alabama, as the Chair understands, has charge of the bill, being the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and having reported the bill from that committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. He did not seem to have much charge of it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BOUTELLE. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill by sections in Committee of the Whole the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK] moved that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House; and upon that motion the committee did rise and so report. Does not that give the gentleman from Connecticut the right to control the disposition of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The gentleman from Alabama, as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported the bill to the House from that committee and has had charge of it; and until there is some adverse vote of the House, some vote indicating that the gentleman does not represent the sentiment of the House on this question, he must, according to all the practice heretofore prevailing, be recognized to control the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I merely asked for information.

Mr. HERBERT. I offer a substitute for the bill and amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and then I demand the previous question.

Mr. BUCK. Does the gentleman demand the previous question?

Mr. HERBERT. I do.

Mr. BUCK. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. HERBERT. We have to do something of that kind in order to get to a vote.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman has provisions in that substitute for the purchase of the armor abroad in case the Secretary can not contract for it within a reasonable time in this country.

The SPEAKER. The substitute is offered in the House, but the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to the original bill must first be disposed of.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the substitute has never been in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

Mr. RANDALL. That substitute is in the nature of an amendment permissible in the House to the original bill.

The SPEAKER. If an amendment to the bill——

Mr. RANDALL. It is.

The SPEAKER. And contains any provisions not considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the Chair will decide it must be read.

Mr. FINDLAY. As I understand the Chair, the amendments to the original text must first be voted upon.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It contains provisions which the Committee of the Whole have stricken out of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Still the House can overrule the Committee of the Whole, and does it frequently, and refuses to agree to amendments the committee incorporated and agree to amendments it has not incorporated; but the substitute must be read.

Mr. RANDALL. The previous question has been demanded.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We want it read.

The SPEAKER. It must be read before the vote is taken. The House may not want to order the previous question until it has heard it read.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. But the amendment must be read. The ordering of the previous question is the consideration of a matter——

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to ask him this question? Is the substitute he offers precisely like the paper which has been distributed and placed upon the desks of members?

Mr. HERBERT. It is precisely the same, having only the word "thereunder" instead of "hereunder," which is a mistake.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, as hereinafter provided—

"First. Two sea-going double-bottomed armored vessels of about 6,000 tons displacement, designed for a speed of at least 16 knots an hour, with engines having all necessary appliances for working under forced draught, and costing, including engines and machinery and excluding armament, not more than $2,500,000 each. Said vessels shall have each a complete torpedo outfit and be armed in the most effective manner.

"Second. One protected double-bottomed cruiser of not less than 3,500 nor more than 5,000 tons displacement, designed to have the highest practicable speed and furnished with the best type of modern engines, furnished with necessary appliances for working under forced draught. Said vessel shall cost, including engines and machinery and excluding armament, not exceeding $1,500,000.

"Third. One first-class torpedo-boat, costing in the aggregate not more than $100,000.

"SEC. 2. That the vessels hereinbefore authorized to be constructed shall be built of steel of domestic manufacture, having a tensile strength of not less than 60,000 pounds per square inch, and an elongation in 8 inches of not less than 25 per cent.

"SEC. 3. That the President is hereby authorized to direct the completion, as hereinafter provided, of the double-turreted monitors Puritan, Amphitrite, Monadnock, and Terror, at a total cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $3,178,046.

"SEC. 4. That the armor used in constructing said armored vessels and for completing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties; otherwise the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to purchase the same, or any portion thereof, and import it. Such armor shall be accepted only after passing such tests as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and inserted in the contracts.

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Navy shall cause one or more of the new vessels hereinbefore provided for to be constructed and one or more of the said monitors to be completed in one or more of the navy-yards of the United States; and if he shall be unable to contract with responsible parties to construct or complete, at reasonable prices, all or any of the vessels hereinbefore provided for, he shall cause the same to be constructed or completed in such of the navy-yards of the United States as may be best adapted thereto.

"SEC. 6. That the engines, boilers, and machinery of all the new vessels provided for by this act shall be of domestic manufacture and procured by contract, unless the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to obtain the same at fair prices, in which case he may construct the same, or any portion thereof, in the navy-yards of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may buy abroad and import such shafting and other material or machinery as he may be unable to procure in the United States: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy may purchase abroad only such shafting and other special materials as it may be impossible to obtain in the United States in time for use in the construction of the vessels herein provided for.

"SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Navy shall not contract for the construction or completion of any of said vessels, or of their engines, machinery or boilers, until drawings and specifications of the same shall have been provided or adopted by him; and after said drawings and specifications shall have been provided, adopted, and approved as aforesaid, and work shall have been commenced on any contract made therefor, such plans and specifications shall not be changed in any respect when the cost of such change in the execution of the work exceeds $500, except upon the written order of the Secretary or acting Secretary of the Navy; and if changes are thus made, the actual cost thereof and the damage caused thereby shall be ascertained, estimated, and determined by a board of naval officers to be provided for in the contract; and in any contract made pursuant to this act it shall be provided in the terms thereof that the contractor shall be bound by the determination of said board, or a majority thereof, as to the amount of increased or diminished compensation said contractor shall be entitled to receive, if any, in consequence of such change or changes. In every contract to be made under this act there shall be prescribed a period within which the work provided for in said contract, or specified portion thereof, shall be completed, and the completion of such work within the periods prescribed shall be insured by penal provisions. For the construction or completion of such vessels hereinbefore provided for as the Secretary of the Navy shall propose to have constructed or completed by contract, as well as also for the engines, boilers, and machinery hereinbefore provided for, he shall invite proposals from every American ship-builder and other person who shall show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that within three months from the date of the contract he will be possessed of the necessary plant for the performance of the work in the United States which he shall offer to undertake, and such contract shall be let to the lowest and best responsible bidder or bidders, after at least sixty days' advertisement, published in five leading papers of the United States, inviting proposals for the work proposed, which work shall be subject to all such rules, regulations, superintendence by naval officers during construction, and provisions as to bonds and security for the quality and due completion of the work as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe; and no vessel, boiler, engine, machinery, or portion thereof shall be accepted unless completed in strict conformity with the contract; and the authority given hereby shall take effect at once. The Secretary of the Navy shall have the power to reject any or all bids made under the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 8. That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward the armament of the vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, of the vessels authorized by section 1 of this act, and of the unfinished monitors hereinbefore mentioned, and of the Miantanomoh; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to direct the application of such portions of this sum as may be necessary to the manufacture or purchase of such tools and machinery or the erection of such structures as may be required for use in the manufacture of such armament, or any part thereof: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may contract with domestic manufacturers for the construction of such portion of the heavy guns herein provided for as may not be built by the Government.

"SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to contract with the Pneumatic Dynamite-Gun Company of New York for one dynamite-gun cruiser, as follow: Said cruiser to be not less than 230 feet long, 26 feet breadth of beam, 7½ feet draught, 3,200 horse-power, and guaranteed to attain a speed of 20 knots an hour, and to be equipped with three pneumatic dynamite-guns of 10½ inch caliber, and guaranteed to throw shells containing 200 pounds of dynamite or other high explosives at least 1 mile, each gun to be capable of being discharged once in two minutes, at a price not to exceed $350,000; said contract to be made only on condition that there shall be a favorable report made by the existing Naval Board on the system; to be paid for as the work progresses, and upon the report of such board or boards of inspectors as the Secretary of the Navy may for that purpose appoint, reserving 30 per cent. on all such payments until the work is completed and accepted by the Secretary of the Navy.

"The Pneumatic Dynamite-Gun Company shall furnish bonds satisfactory to the Secretary of the Navy for the faithful performance of its contract, and for the refunding of the money paid thereunder in case of the non-performance of the same, and shall further agree with the Secretary of the Navy upon a limit of price which shall not be exceeded in any future contracts which the Government may desire to enter into for the purchase of the company's guns.

"SEC. 10. That toward the construction and completion of the vessels hereinbefore mentioned, including the vessel and guns mentioned in section 9, the sum of $2,500,000 is hereby appropriated, of which not more than $75,000 may be expended in manufacturing, purchasing, and experimenting with torpedoes of domestic manufacture, and not exceeding $150,000 may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, in improving the plant of such of the navy-yards as he may select.

"Amount appropriated by this bill, $3,500,000."

Mr. MCKENNA. I ask by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the substitute, as we all know what it is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I object.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurred on the following amendment of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Strike out in section 1 the following:

Second. Three protected double-bottomed cruisers of not less than 3,500 nor more than 5,000 tons displacement, with the best type of modern engines, furnished with necessary appliances for working under forced draught, said cruisers designed to have the highest practicable speed. No one of said vessels shall cost, including engines and machinery and excluding armament, exceeding $1,500,000, and the cost of the three vessels, including engines and machinery, shall not exceed $4,000,000. Two of said cruisers shall be provided with spars and rigging to spread at least two-thirds of full sail-power: Provided, however, That said spars shall be easily removable in case of need. The other of said cruisers shall be required to have only military masts, but shall be so constructed that masts and spars may be readily inserted sufficient to carry at least two-thirds of full sail-power. Toward the construction of said cruisers the sum of $1,100,000 is hereby appropriated. Said cruisers shall be armed in the most effective manner.

And in lieu thereof insert the following as a substitute therefor:

One cruiser of not less than 2,500 nor more than 3,500 tons displacement; said cruiser to be constructed upon designs, plans, and specifications furnished by Charles G. Lundborg, of New York, and under his supervision and direction. The said vessel shall have the highest practicable speed (not less than 20 knots per hour), full sail-power, and an armament, as heavy as may be compatible with the foregoing conditions. The cost of said vessel, including engines and machinery, and exclusive of armament, shall not exceed the sum of $1,200,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BALLENTINE. I ask for a division on that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has announced the result. Does any gentleman ask for a separate vote on the amendments of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union? If not, they will be voted on in gross.

No separate vote was asked.

The question recurred on the amendments of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 77.

Mr. BOUTELLE demanded the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 108, nays 111, not voting 103; as follows:

So the amendments were rejected.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is a very close vote; let them be read.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

Mr. BURROWS. I was paired with the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. WISE, this afternoon, and was present in the Hall when my name was called, but refrained from voting, believing the pair to be still in force. I understand that Mr. WISE has voted, and I ask to record my vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's name will be called.

The following gentlemen were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. MILLS.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. O'DONNELL.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. SYMES.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the pairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the pairs as follows:

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. WEST.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. DOWDNEY with Mr. O'HARA.

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. RIGGS with Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. RANNEY.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.

Mr. BARKSDALE with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. CASWELL.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. SWINBURNE.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. LOUTTIT, on this vote.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, for this day.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, for this day.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. CANNON, for this day.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. GOFF, for this day.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. ATKINSON, for this day.

Mr. WILLIS with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, for this day.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania, for this day.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. WAIT, for this day.

Mr. WALLACE with Mr. WAKEFIELD, for this day.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. LAIRD, for this day.

Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL with Mr. GUENTHER, for this day.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. HOPKINS, for this day.

Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. PETERS, for this day.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. MCCOMAS, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the hour for adjournment to-day be extended until this bill is disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is an evening session, I believe——

Mr. ELY. I object.

The question being taken on the adoption of the substitute, there were on a division—ayes 82, noes 70.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. It is manifest that we can not get through with this bill to-day unless we get an extension of the time. I therefore renew the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think that anybody on this side will object.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution under instructions from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HERBERT. I shall object to anything until this bill is disposed of, unless we can extend the time.

Mr. NEGLEY. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BUCK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask whether if we vote down this substitute we still have a vote upon the original, or if we vote for the substitute will we have another vote upon the original bill?

The SPEAKER. If the House agrees to the substitute that would take the place of the original bill, and the question would then be upon ordering its engrossment and third reading.

Mr. BUCK. That will be a final vote?

The SPEAKER. It is a final vote as between the two propositions. It does not dispose of the bill finally, but as between the two measures. The substitute will then be before the House.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand the objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The objection made by the gentleman from Massachusetts to the request of the gentleman from Alabama has been withdrawn.

Mr. ELY. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Indiana objected.

Mr. MORRISON. I again ask unanimous consent to submit this resolution.

There was no objection.

EVENING SESSION ON LAND-GRANT FORFEITURES.

Mr. MORRISON. I now submit a resolution under instructions from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on this Saturday evening, the 24th day of July, the House shall take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of such bills forfeiting unearned land grants to railroads as may be presented by the Committee on the Public Lands. That the evening session herein provided for shall not continue later than 11 o'clock p. m.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INCREASE OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HERBERT. I now renew my request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama to extend the time for the recess until the completion of this bill?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I now wish to ask a parliamentary question, whether if the substitute is adopted it will be liable to the point of order that it must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to make the point of order. It has been considered by the House, the previous question having been ordered, and the yeas and nays ordered upon its adoption.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In the interest of forwarding legislation I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs whether he will not consent to accept as an amendment to the original bill the proposition submitted by me and adopted in Committee of the Whole, providing for the purchase of the armor in this country, as I am confident he will thereby secure the solid support of this side of the House for the original bill of the committee.

Mr. HERBERT. I have not got authority to make any such agreement.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I believe you can pass your original bill if you accept that amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. The question must be passed upon by the House.

The question was taken on the substitute; and there were—yeas 118, nays 103, not voting 101; as follows:

So the substitute was adopted.

Mr. LORE. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] desired me to state that if present he would vote "ay;" I would vote "no."

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WISE with Mr. BURROWS, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. MCCOMAS, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. LOUTTIT, on this vote.

Mr. WELLBORN. I was not present when my name was called. If I had been present, I would have voted in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 6 members voting therefor.

The bill was passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. Some gentlemen desire leave to print some remarks on this bill. I make that request for them.

There was no objection.

Mr. HATCH. I ask to be excused from attendance on the evening session, on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already been excused.

By order of the House a recess is taken till 8 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of bills forfeiting land grants to railroad companies reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. and was called to order by the Clerk, who directed the reading of the following letter:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 24, 1886.

Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN, of Tennessee, is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at this evening's session of the House of Representatives.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolution under which the House assembles this evening.

The resolution assigning the session of the House this evening for the consideration of such bills forfeiting unearned land grants to railroad companies as may be presented by the Committee on Public Lands was read.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE AND VICKSBURG RAILROAD.

Mr. COBB. I call up for consideration from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, are hereby declared to be forfeited to the United States of America in all that part of said grant which is situate on the east side of the Mississippi River, and also in all that part of said grant on the west of the Mississippi River which is opposite to and coterminous with the part of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company which was completed on the 5th day of January, 1881; and said lands are restored to the public domain of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the title of the United States and of the original grantee to the lands granted by said act of Congress of March 3, 1871, to said grantee, the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, not herein declared forfeited, is relinquished, granted, conveyed, and confirmed to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, as the assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, said lands to be located in accordance with the map filed by said New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company in the Department of the Interior, which indicates the established line of said railroad.

SEC. 3. That the relinquishment of the lands and the confirmation of the grant provided for in the second section of this act are made and shall take effect whenever the Secretary of the Interior is notified that said New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, through the action of a majority of its stockholders, has accepted the provisions of this act, and is satisfied that said company has accepted and fully discharged all the duties and obligations imposed upon the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by the act of March 3, 1871, entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes."

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior, in issuing patents for the lands conveyed herein, to establish such rules and regulations as to enable all persons who on the 1st day of December, 1884, were in the actual occupancy of any of the lands to which the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company is entitled under the provisions of this act, and who are of the description of persons entitled to make homestead or pre-emption entry on public lands under the general laws of the United States, to secure titles to the lands so held by them, not to exceed in quantity one quarter-section and not less than one-sixteenth of a section, on the payment to said company, in lawful money of the United States, at the rate of $2 per acre, for the lands so occupied, at one-third cash and balance in such equal annual installments as the Secretary of the Interior shall by regulations prescribe; it being the intention of this section to protect the settlers upon said lands, and to give binding force and effect to the Blanchard-Robinson agreement made with the New Orleans Pacific Company on the —— day of ——, ——, and filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make all needful rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect, and shall have the authority to direct, if he shall think proper, and shall so declare in such regulations, that payments may be made for the lands held and occupied under the fourth section of this act in not exceeding four equal annual installments from the date of sale, with interest thereon not to exceed 6 per cent. per annum.

SEC. 6. That the patents for the lands conveyed herein that have already been issued to said company be, and the same are hereby, confirmed; but the Secretary of the Interior is hereby fully authorized and instructed to apply the provisions of the fourth and fifth sections of this act to any of said lands that have been so patented, and to protect any and all settlers on said lands in all their rights under the said Blanchard-Robinson agreement.

The Committee on the Public Lands reported the following amendment:

Fill the blank in section 4, line 19, with the word "fourth;" and the blank in line 20, section 4, with the words "January, eighteen hundred and eighty-two;" so that it will read "4th day of January, 1882."

Mr. OATES addressed the Chair.

Mr. COBB. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES]. How long time does he desire?

Mr. OATES. I do not wish to make a speech. I desire to say only a few words.

Mr. COBB. I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. OATES. I will not occupy so much time as that. I desire, as the author of the bill, to submit no remarks. No change has been proposed by the committee except one, upon which they are unanimous. The bill as reported by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LAFFOON] is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. PAYSON. I may say in addition to what the gentleman from Alabama has said that the Secretary of the Interior in his last annual report has recommended in express terms the passage of this bill. It was prepared in accordance with that action, and the Secretary wrote a letter to the Committee on Public Lands on which they acted as the basis of their unanimous report that the bill in its present form should be adopted.

Mr. OATES. I was aware that the bill met the Secretary's approval.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama how much land will be restored to the public domain under this act.

Mr. OATES. I do not know the precise amount.

Mr. PAYSON. All opposite 68 miles of road. Between three and four hundred thousand acres, as I am advised.

Mr. LAFFOON. Mr. Speaker, when I came to this House it was my purpose to be a silent member and in no event to interrupt its proceedings by anything I might say except in obedience to the strict demands of duty, and I promise now that I will be brief as the facts in this particular case will permit.

The Committee on Public Lands has delegated to me the authority and made it my duty to explain to this body the provisions of this bill and to give you the reasons which have led them to adopt the report which we have presented to this House.

This bill I regard as a very important measure and in the line of very important legislation, if we are here to discharge our duty to the American people. Its provisions are simple, and will be easily comprehended by this Congress. It provides—

First. That all the land granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by the twenty-second section of the act incorporating the Texas Pacific Railroad Company be declared forfeited to the United States of America.

Second. From this forfeiture is reserved all that part of the grant which is situate between White Castle, in the State of Louisiana, and the city of Shreveport, in the same State.

Third. That in order to quiet the title of the settlers thereon that part of the grant situated between the said points is confirmed to the said New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company.

Fourth. It provides for the designation and identification of those lands so confirmed and identified, and establishes the manner in which they are to be patented so as to preserve the rights of the settlers thereon, and confirms the provisions of the Blanchard-Robertson agreement, the terms of which are explained in the accompanying report.

The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company was chartered by an act of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana December 30, 1869. By said charter it was authorized to construct and operate a railroad from any point on the line of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad within the parish of Livingston, running thence to any point on the boundary line dividing the States of Louisiana and Mississippi. The line thus indicated by its charter was east of the Mississippi River as far north as Baton Rouge. Its charter also authorized it to construct a branch road from its main stem as above described to the city of Baton Rouge, and for the purpose of connecting its railroad with the railroad of other compaines it was authorized "to construct, maintain, and use by running thereon its engines and cars such branches and tracks as it may find necessary to own and use," and such railroads were to be considered as part of its main track in the State of Louisiana.

Every one who has given the history of this company a study can but conclude that outside of its corporate franchises it had not a cent. It was an institution formed for the purpose of catching every passing opportunity to make its stockholders rich. It was a bag of wind and a thing of straw. With this purpose in view, armed and equipped with its franchises, it awaited every chance to speculate on its position and to catch every comer that wanted what it had. So skillfully was its affairs managed that it secured a donation of public lands to it from the Congress of the United States by virtue of the twenty-second section of the act incorporating the Texas Pacific Railroad Company. As this section is the one which grants the land a part of which we are seeking to forfeit, I desire to read it:

That the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Louisiana, shall have the right to connect by the most eligible route, to be selected by said company, with the said Texas Pacific Railroad at its eastern terminus, and shall have the right of way through the public land to the same extent granted hereby to the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and in aid of its construction from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, thence by way of Alexandria, in said State, to connect with said Texas Pacific Railroad Company at its eastern terminus, there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns, the same number of alternate sections of public land per mile in the State of Louisiana as are by this act granted in the State of California to said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and said lands shall be withdrawn from market, selected, and patents issued therefor, and open for settlement and pre-emption upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas and Pacific Railroad Company within said State of California: Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act.

In pursuance of this grant this rotten company filed on November 11, 1871, in the General Land Office a map designating the general route of a road projected by it from Shreveport by way of Alexandria to Baton Rouge, and thereupon a withdrawal of the public lands along said route was made to take effect in April, 1873.

On February 13, 1873, a second map was filed in the General Land Office by the same company designating the general route of a road projected by it from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, and a withdrawal of the public lands along said route was ordered, which took effect in April, 1873.

The quantity of land withdrawn from the public domain and from entry by actual settlers by these filings consisted of twenty sections to the mile of completed road built under the sections of this act of Congress. This meant 12,800 acres to the mile—a grand donation in the shape of inducement to build this road. The land proposed by this bill to be restored to the public domain is 870,000 acres, which will be brought back to actual settlement and homestead entry.

This company rested in a perfect state of "innocuous desuetude" until the expiration of the time in which it was to complete the road. It appears to have done nothing in that direction, nor in any other direction, except to execute a mortage which will appear further along in my remarks.

The five years in which this road was to be completed expired on March 2, 1876, and during all this time nothing had been done by this company to earn this grant. Owing to this neglect in performing or attempting to perform this grant, the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, by an act approved April 30, 1877, repealed the charter of this company, and all acts amendatory thereof, and this company was then thought to have passed out of existence.

It is useless for the purpose of my argument to advert to what has been said of the methods by which this legislation was obtained. But for the execution of the mortgage which I have mentioned, this repealing act would have been the fit funeral ceremony over the remains of this corrupt institution.

But on the 9th day of June, 1877, a few days after the repeal of the charter of this company, Jeremiah Councellor filed his suit in the circuit court of the United States in and for the fifth circuit and district of the State of Louisiana against the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, alleging that he was the owner and holder of a quantity of its mortgage bonds for valuable consideration paid to it, denying the constitutionality of the act of the Legislature forfeiting its franchises and corporate existence as against its acquired rights and the vested rights which the plaintiff had by virtue of his ownership for valuable consideration of said mortgage bonds. The courts in that case decided that the act forfeiting said charter was "unconstitutional, invalid, and without the slightest effect."

This decision of the court invalidating the act of the Louisiana Legislature left this company in full possession of all the franchises which had been conferred on it by all the legislation to which I have referred.

On the 5th day of January, 1881, it sold all of its franchises and property to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company. I desire here to read an extract from the deed showing what property passed to the latter company:

All the right, title, and interest of the said party of the first part, its successors or assigns, of, in, or to a certain grant of public lands granted to the said party of the first part by an act of Congress of the United States, approved March 3, 1871, and entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," together with all and singular the tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof.

This deed was authorized by the directors of the New Orleans, Vicksburg and Baton Rouge Railroad Company at a meeting held 29th of December, 1880, was approved by the stockholders of said company on the 9th day of December, 1881, and on the 3d day of December, 1881, the grant and deed by a resolution of the directors of the assignee company were duly accepted.

The New Orleans Pacific Railway Company by virtue of all these facts had become, as is conceded by the courts and by all persons who have attempted to argue the question, the perfect owner of all the property and rights which had been granted by the United States and the State of Louisiana, the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company and were subrogated to all its right, franchises, and property; subject, of course, to whatever right the General Government had to forfeit this grant for failure to complete the road in the time fixed by law creating the original donation, and the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg company passed out of existence.

I desire in this connection and before I go further in my argument to give a sketch of the history of the company which claimed to own the property and franchises of this company.

The New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company was incorporated by notarial act under the general laws of the State of Louisiana, approved April 7, 1875, and the Legislature of that State by an act approved February 14, 1876, confirmed its corporate existence and enlarged its powers. Its charter was further amended by an act of the Legislature on the 5th day of February, 1878, still further enlarging and confirming its powers. By all this legislation it had all the ordinary powers conferred in this way on railroad corporations. It could sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with, locate, construct, lease, buy, and use a railroad from any point on the Mississippi River in the State of Louisiana to the city of Shreveport, or to Dallas or Marshall, Tex., or any route or routes it saw proper to select.

This company now owning the property as stated, under grant from the General Government to the other company, projected a line in the same general direction as the route which had been indicated by its assignor on file in the General Land Office, except that the latter was on the east side of the Mississippi River and the former on the west side, but within the granted limits.

It is a fact that a line of road has been partly purchased and partly built by this company from New Orleans to Shreveport, and that the great purpose had by the State of Louisiana in granting the charter and the General Government in giving the land has been effected. A line of railroad connecting the Lower Mississippi and the Texas Pacific system has been accomplished. With these facts before this House the questions to be discussed are, Should this grant be forfeited and returned to the public domain? Should any part of it be forfeited; if so, how much? These are the pertinent questions to be answered, and I desire to give my views after thorough investigation of this subject.

Sixty-eight miles of this road was built before the grant was ever made, or if not built before that date was never constructed on the faith of this grant. It was built by another company. The Morgan Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company owned it and sold it to the New Orleans Pacific Company. That 68 miles extends from New Orleans to White Castle, and is within the limits of the land withdrawn from settlement or sale by the order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated February 13, 1873, to which I have heretofore referred. The most favorable and latitudinarian construction which can be given to these grants to this corporation can go no further than to the building of railroads. They were gifts to induce construction of great highways for commerce rather than to enrich great corporations, and certainly did not extend to the buying of constructed lines of railroads.

It is perfect folly to talk about the equity which belongs to railroad companies. He who seeks equity must do equity, and it yet remains to be discovered where they have ever regarded this maxim. Their rights in these grants which are attempted to be forfeited must be measured by the clean-cut, cold law, and when thus determined let them be respected, but let them be tested by no other standard. Construing the grant of lands coterminous with this 68 miles of purchased road this House can come to no other conclusion than that these lands as to this part of the road have never been earned. But if a solitary doubt yet remains in the minds of any gentleman on this floor let me say that this company has filed in the General Land Office a disclaimer of any right or title to these lands by virtue of their deed from the defunct company. I desire to have it read and made a part of my remarks:

In the matter of the application of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company as assignee and grantee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, for the approval of the report of the commissioner to examine the road constructed by the former company and for the issue of patents under section 22 of the act of March 3, 1871.

Now comes the said New Orleans Pacific Railway Company and states that it claims as the assignee and grantee of said New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, the benefit of the grant of lands made by section 22 of the act of March 3, 1871, to said last-named company, as shown by documentary and record evidence on file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior; it also states that it has built and has in operation a road from New Orleans to Shreveport; that about 68 miles of said line of road extending from New Orleans to White Castle was acquired from another company and put in repair by the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, and the said New Orleans Pacific Railway Company hereby disclaims any right to receive land under the said section 22 of the act of March 3, 1871, in respect of the said 68 miles of railroad extending from New Orleans to White Castle, but claims and insists that it is entitled to the lands granted by said section 22 for and in respect of all of the rest and residue of the line of railway built by it extending from White Castle to Shreveport, with a branch or spur to Baton Rouge.

Dated and signed this 19th day of October, A. D. 1882.

NEW ORLEANS PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
By JOHN F. DILLON, its Attorney.

In the light of these facts it must be apparent that all that part of the grant embraced within the territory co-terminous with this 68 miles should be forfeited and restored to the public domain and opened up for settlement under the homestead law.

I now come to a question which involves more difficulty of solution. Can this Congress forfeit that part of the granted lands which lie coterminous with the road from White Castle to Shreveport? It is a conceded fact that all this part of the road was completed out of the time fixed by the twenty-second section of the act of March 23, 1871, for its construction. It is further conceded that if there were no other facts appearing, if the Government had done nothing by its authorized agents which would estop the Government from forfeiting this grant, then the power of this Congress to declare a forfeiture and a restoration of these lands to the public domain would be unquestionable.

The New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, after obtaining the deed to which I have referred from the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company, before the construction of any part of their road applied to the General Land Office and Interior Department as to the recognition of the validity of the transfer to it of the lands lying along the contemplated roads, and on February 17, 1881, before the construction of any part of this road, and in response to their inquiries, the company received the following answer, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1881.

SIR: In compliance with the verbal request of Hon. J. H. KETCHAM I make the following statement:

By the twenty-second section of an act of Congress, entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company," &c., approved March 3, 1871, a grant of land was made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company for the purpose of aiding in the construction of its road.

At a special meeting of the directors of said New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, held December 29, 1880, a resolution was adopted authorizing the president and secretary of the company to transfer all the right, title, and interest of said company in and to said grant to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, and to make and execute such instruments as should be necessary for that purpose.

On the 5th day of January, 1881, the president and secretary, pursuant to said authority, executed a deed in the name of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company, conveying all the right, title, and interest of said company in and to said grant to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

On the 3d day of February, 1881, the directors of the last-named company adopted a resolution authorizing the president of the company to accept said conveyance, and to execute any documents necessary to evidence the acceptance.

There can be no doubt that when the president of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company accepts said transfer the company will be fully vested with all the right, title, and interest which the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company has in and to said grant.

J. A. WILLIAMSON, Commissioner.

Still further anxious of ascertaining their rights to this land before they began the construction of their road, they asked for and received this further communication from the Interior Department on this subject, on the 21st day of February, 1881:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1881.

SIR: The president of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company has duly accepted, in behalf of said company, the deed referred to in my letter addressed to you, dated February 17, 1881, being the deed to the said New Orleans Pacific Railway Company by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company of all its right, title, and interest in and to the grant to said last-named company by the twenty-second section of an act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company," &c., approved March 3, 1871.

The transfer by the said New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company of all its right, title, and interest in and to said grant to the said New Orleans Pacific Railway Company is now complete.

Very respectfully,

J. A. WILLIAMSON, Commissioner.

The road was completed, accepted by the Government, and classified as a land-grant road before any hostile legislation was undertaken by Congress.

These events in their order show that before its acceptance of the grant under the deed to which I have referred the company was careful that their title would be effectual. They built the road with the exception I have mentioned with the understanding and on the assurance of the officers of the Government that they would be entitled to the land embraced in the grant. As the road progressed in its construction the land to which they claimed title was duly certified to them and patents issued therefor. The company acquired credit and obtained money on the faith of these lands and on the assurance of the Government that the company's title was perfect.

The settlers who are in possession have acted in good faith and purchased these lands depending upon the Government to keep good faith and make this title good. These lands on the line from White Castle to Shreveport, as the committee is informed, have all been sold in small quantities and all in the possession of innocent purchasers for valuable consideration, and I can see no law, no justice, no reason of public policy why their title should be disturbed. If it was a question between the Government and the company I would look on it with more favor, but as it could only affect the interest of the poor settler I am opposed to the forfeiture of this part of the grant.

But if I were disposed to override all the questions of policy and justice embraced in the situation as I have stated it, could this Congress as a matter of law at this late stage of proceedings forfeit this grant? If there were no rights involved in this forfeiture except those which are claimed by the company, I would go as far to consummate it as any member on this floor. But would not the Government, after all the proceedings had, to which I have referred, be estopped in any court from insisting upon this forfeiture?

The legal feature of this case has been before this House before. This is no new question here. This proposition of forfeiture was submitted to the Judiciary Committee by a joint resolution introduced into this body by Mr. Ellis, a Representative from the State of Louisiana, on April 21, 1884.

In an exhaustive report, after reviewing all the facts as I have attempted to state them, and numerous citations of authorities, they conclude their report as follows:

The facts already set forth with sufficient fullness satisfy your committee that the substantial fulfillment of the condition has been met by the assignee company; that it was done under the eye of and was accepted by the executive department under the provisions of the law of Congress; that all which Congress contemplated in making the grant has been realized, and that it was done by the company on the belief of having secured the grant—a belief based upon the assurance of the Department of the Interior and upon the official action of the President of the United States in the examination of the work as it progressed, in his sanction of its sufficiency under the law, and in his order for the issue of patents for the land. After all this the question is, can—and if it can, ought—Congress to forfeit the land grant to this assignee company?

Your committee think both branches of the question must be answered in the negative.

The same question, by a similar resolution introduced into the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and I desire to have read their report:

[Senate Report No. 711, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.]

In the Senate of the United States. June 7, 1882.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Jonas, from the Committee on Railroads, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Railroads, to whom the subject was referred, submit the following report:

A petition has been referred to the Committee on Railroads of certain citizens of Louisiana, asking for the forfeiture of the land grant made to the New Orleans, Vicksburg and Baton Rouge Railroad Company by the ninth section of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, on the ground that the company to whom the grant was made has failed to build the road within the time prescribed by the act.

The grant was made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, its successors and assigns. That company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature of Louisiana, approved December 30, 1869. The object of Congress in making the grant was to aid in the construction of the proposed road, via Baton Rouge, Alexandria, and Shreveport, to connect with the eastern terminus of the Texas Pacific Railroad, and thus connect that road with the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico.

The committee find that this connecting road, on almost the same line, and between the same points (if not built by the original grantees) has been built by the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, which was organized under a charter confirmed by an act of the Legislature of Louisiana, approved February 19, 1876. This road is now completed and running between New Orleans and the eastern terminus of the Texas Pacific Railroad, at or near Marshall, Tex., its route being via Baton Rouge, Alexandria, and Shreveport.

The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company (which still has corporate existence), by deed dated the 5th day of January, 1881, granted and transferred to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company all its right, title, and interest in and to the lands granted to it by the before-mentioned act of Congress incorporating the Texas Pacific Railroad Company. This transfer was approved, ratified, and confirmed at a meeting of the stockholders of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by a vote of two-thirds of its entire capital stock. The transfer was formally accepted by the board of directors of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

The deed of transfer, a certified copy of the resolution of the stockholders of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company ratifying the transfer, and a certified copy of the resolution of the board of directors of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company accepting the transfer, have been filed in the Department of the Interior.

A commissioner to inspect a portion of the railroad built by the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company was, upon the application of that company, appointed by the President of the United States, and the report of the said commissioner, approving the construction of the portion of the railroad inspected by him, was duly filed in the Department of the Interior.

Application is now made for the issuance of patents to the New Orlean Pacific Railway Company for the lands granted by Congress to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, and by the last-named company assigned to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company as heretofore stated.

The grant was originally made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purposes above stated.

The road has been built by the assignee of the grantee, and the objects of the grant have been fully attained.

No forfeiture of the grant was made before the completion of the road, on the grounds alleged, and we think it would be unjust and inequitable to make such forfeiture now when the work has been completed by the assignee company, which has built the road in good faith and in full expectation of receiving the benefit of the grant which remained unforfeited and assignable in the control of their grantor.

Your committee think no consideration of public policy requires the forfeiture of the grant, and they recommend that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the memorial.

In further support of the views I entertain on this subject I desire to call the attention of this House to the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States embraced in a letter written by him to the Secretary of the Interior Department June 13, 1882. I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., June 13, 1882.

SIR: By a letter dated the 5th of January last, your predecessors submitted to me a number of questions arising upon an application of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company for certain lands claimed under the land grant made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, chapter 122.

The land grant mentioned is contained in the twenty-second section of that act, which provides:

"That the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Louisiana, shall have the right to connect, by the most eligible route, to be selected by said company, with the said Texas Pacific Railroad at its eastern terminus, and shall have the right of way through the public land to the same extent granted hereby to the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and in aid of its construction from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, thence by the way of Alexandria, in said State, to connect with the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company at its eastern terminus, there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns, the same number of alternate sections of public lands per mile, in the State of Louisiana, as are by this act granted in the State of California to said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and said lands shall be withdrawn from market, selected, and patents issued therefor, and opened for settlement and pre-emption, upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company, within said State of California: Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act."

The eastern terminus of the Texas Pacific Railroad, as fixed by the same act, was a point at or near Marshall, Tex.

The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature of Louisiana passed December 30, 1869, which authorized it to construct and operate a railroad "from any point on the line of the New Orleans, Jackson and Great Northern Railroad, within the parish of Livingston, running from thence to any point on the boundary line dividing the States of Louisiana and Mississippi," the route here indicated lying east of the Mississippi River. It was also authorized to construct and operate a branch railroad from its main line (above described) to the city of Baton Rouge; and for the purpose of connecting its railroad with the railroads of other companies, &c., it was furthermore authorized "to construct, maintain, and use, by running thereon its engines and cars, such branch railroads and tracks as it may find necessary and expedient to own and use;" and such branch railroads were, for all the purposes of the act, to be deemed and taken to constitute a part of the main line of its railroad within the State of Louisiana.

On November 11, 1871, that company filed in the General Land Office a map designating the general route of a road projected thereby from Shreveport, by way of Alexandria, to Baton Rouge, and thereupon a withdrawal of the public lands along the same was ordered, which became effective in December following.

Subsequently, by an act of the Legislature of Louisiana passed December 11, 1872, the same company was given "full power and authority to commence the construction of their road in the city of New Orleans or Shreveport, or at any intermediate point on their line of road, as may best suit the convenience of said company and facilitate the speedy construction of a continuous line from the city of New Orleans to the city of Shreveport, or perfect railroad communication with the Texas Pacific Railroad, or any other railroad in Northwestern Louisiana, at or near the Louisiana State line: Provided, however, That the said company shall construct the line of its road between the city of New Orleans and the city of Baton Rouge on the east side of the Mississippi River, to the corporate limits of the said city of Baton Rouge, or adjacent thereto."

In the mean time, by the act of Congress of May 2, 1872, chapter 132, the Texas and Pacific Railway Company (formerly styled the Texas Pacific Railroad Company) was "authorized and required to construct, maintain, control, and operate a road between Marshall, Tex., and Shreveport, La., or control and operate any existing road between said points, of the same gauge as the Texas and Pacific Railroad." The same act further provided that "all roads terminating at Shreveport shall have the same right to make the same running connections, and shall be entitled to the same privileges, for the transaction of business in connection with the said Texas and Pacific Railway as are granted to roads intersecting therewith."

On February 13, 1873, a second map was filed in the General Land Office by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, designating the general route of a road projected thereby from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, and a withdrawal of the public lands along the same was ordered, which took effect in April, 1873. The route between those places, those designated, lies on the east side of the Mississippi River. That company has not constructed any part of its road, either on the route between New Orleans and Baton Rouge or on the route between the latter place and Shreveport; nor, indeed, has there been a definite location of its road anywhere between the points mentioned. Nothing beyond the designation of the general route thereof appears.

Pursuant to a resolution of its board of directors, adopted December 29, 1880, all the right, title, and interest of that company in and to the aforesaid grant of public lands made by the act of March 3, 1871, were deeded by it to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company. This action of the board of directors and officers of the former company was afterward approved and ratified by the stockholders thereof at a meeting held in December, 1881.

The New Orleans Pacific Railway Company was originally incorporated under the general laws of the State of Louisiana in June, 1875. Its charter was subsequently amended by acts of the Louisiana Legislature passed February 19, 1876, and February 5, 1878. It is thereby authorized to construct a railroad "beginning at a point on the Mississippi River at New Orleans, or between New Orleans and the parish of Iberville, on the right bank of the Mississippi, and Baton Rouge, on the left bank, &c., or from any point within the limits of this State, and running thence toward and to the city of Shreveport," which is made its northwestern terminus.

The route of this company as projected is understood to extend from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, and thence, by way of Alexandria, to Shreveport. Between New Orleans and Baton Rouge it lies on the west side of the Mississippi River; while the designated route of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, between the same points, lies on the east side of that river. Between Baton Rouge and Shreveport its general course and direction corresponds, in the main, with the route designated by the last-named company. It is throughout its entire length from New Orleans to Shreveport within the limits of the before-mentioned withdrawals of public lands.

In October, 1881, the president of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company made affidavit that three sections of its road were then completed and ready for examination by the Government; whereupon a commissioner was appointed to examine the same, the result of whose examination appears in a report made by him to the Secretary of the Interior, under date of the 26th of that month. One of the sections embraces 68 miles of road, beginning on the west bank of the Mississippi River, opposite New Orleans, and ending near the town of Donaldsonville; another embraces 20 miles of road near Alexandria: and the third embraces 50 miles of road terminating at Shreveport. For each of these sections lands are claimed by that company under the aforesaid land grant, as assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company.

No map of definite location of any portion of its road has been filed other than those of constructed portions.

It appears that in February, 1881, the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company purchased from Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company the road constructed on the west bank of the Mississippi River by the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company, from Westmego to White Castle, a distance of 68 miles, and that the same has become a part of the main line of the road of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

The following are the questions submitted:

"1. Was the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company a grant in præsenti?

"2. Had the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, at the date of its alleged transfer of lands to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, such an interest in the lands, under said act, as was assignable?

"3. Is the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company such a successor to or assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company as is contemplated by said act?

"4. Should it appear that the 68 miles of the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad was constructed prior to the act of March 3, 1871, granting lands to aid in the construction of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad, can the New Orleans Pacific Company (its assignee) claim any benefit from the grant? Or, in case of such prior construction and the non-construction of any portion of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Road, has the purpose for which the grant was made failed and the grant consequently lapsed?

"5. If the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Road was constructed subsequently to the date of said act, is so much of its road as is now owned by the New Orleans Pacific Company such a road as is contemplated for acceptance by the President within the meaning of said act, and may patents issue to the latter for lands opposite to and coterminous with such constructed portion of road?"

These questions are accompanied by a request for an opinion upon such other questions of law as may suggest themselves touching the transfer of said land grant, to which reference is above made.

Of the above-stated questions the first three may be considered together, in connection with the following inquiry, which presents itself at the outset, whether the assent of Congress to the transfer made by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company of all its interest in said land grant to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company is necessary (by reason of anything in the provisions of the grant itself) to entitle the latter company to the benefit of said grant in aid of the construction of the road projected by it.

The act of March 3, 1871, passed to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company a present interest in a certain number of alternate sections of public lands per mile within the limits there prescribed. Its language is "there is hereby granted to said company" the number of alternate sections mentioned; words which import a grant in præsenti, and not one in futuro, or the promise of a grant. (97 U. S. Rep., 496.) But the grant thus made is in the nature of a float. It is of sections to be afterward located, their location depending upon the establishment of the line of the road. Until this is definitely fixed the grant does not attach to any specific tracts of land. Upon the line of the road being definitely located the grant then first acquires precision, and the company becomes invested with an inchoate title to the particular lands covered thereby, which can ripen into a perfect title only as the construction of each section of 20 miles of road is completed and approved, when the right to patents for the lands opposite to and coterminous with such constructed section accrues.

The proviso in the grant that the company shall complete the whole of its road within five years from the date of the act is a condition-subsequent, the failure to perform which does not ipso facto work a forfeiture of the grant, but only gives rise to a right in the Government to enforce a forfeiture thereof. Yet in order to enforce a forfeiture such right must be asserted by a judicial proceeding, authorized by law, or by some legislative action amounting to a resumption of the grant. (Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wal., 44.) Hence, until advantage is taken of the non-performance of the condition, under legislative authority, the interest of the grantee in the grant remains unimpaired thereby.

Such being the nature and effect of the grant and its accompanying condition, and no action having been taken either by legislation or judicial proceedings to enforce a forfeiture thereof, it follows that at the period of said transfer by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company this company was invested with a present interest in the number of alternate sections of public lands per mile granted by the act of 1871, notwithstanding it was already in default in the performance of the condition referred to, and that it still retained a right to proceed with the construction of the road, in aid of which the grant was made until advantage should be taken of the default. But as it had not then definitely fixed the line of its road, although a map designating the general route thereof was duly filed, that interest did not attach to any specific tracts of land, but remained afloat, as it were, needing a definite location of the road before it could become thus attached. Was the interest here described assignable to another company, so as to entitle the latter to the benefit of the grant in aid of the construction of its road between the places named therein, without the assent of Congress?

Doubt has perhaps arisen on this point in view of the fact that in one or two instances it has been thought expedient to obtain legislation by Congress confirming or authorizing a similar assignment (see section 2 of the act of March 3, 1865, chapter 88, and section 1 of the act of March 3, 1869, chapter 127) and also in view of the adverse ruling of this Department in the case of the Oregon Central Railroad Company. (13 Opin., 382.) However, a similar assignment made in 1866 by the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company to the Pike's Peak Railroad Company, afterward known as the Central Branch Company, was held to be valid by Attorney-General Stanbery in an opinion given to the Secretary of the Treasury under date of July 25, 1866.

In the latter case the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Company, which was incorporated by the State of Missouri, with authority to construct a railroad between Hannibal and Saint Joseph, within that State, was, by the Pacific Railroad act of July 1, 1862 (section 13), authorized to "extend its road from Saint Joseph, via Atchison, to connect and unite with the road through Kansas, * * * and may for this purpose use any railroad charter which has been or may be granted by the Legislature of Kansas," &c., and by the fifteenth section of the same act it was provided that "wherever the word company is used in this act it shall be construed to embrace the words their associates, successors, and assigns, the same as if the words had been properly added thereto."

Subsequently, in 1863, an assignment was made by that company of all its rights under said act (which included an interest in both a land and a bond subsidy) to the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, a company previously organized under a charter granted by the Legislature of Kansas. The latter company having constructed a section of 20 miles of the proposed road west from Atchison claimed the benefit of the grant made to the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Company, as its assignee, and this claim was recognized and allowed, in accordance with the opinion of the Attorney-General. It will be observed, however, that the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Company was authorized to "use any railroad charter which has been or may be granted by the Legislature of Kansas," and this, together with the provision in the fifteenth section quoted above, may have been regarded as sufficient to sustain the assignment.

In the case of the Oregon Central Railroad Company, mentioned above, a grant of a right of way through the public lands, and also of alternate sections thereof, was made to that company, "and to their successors and assigns," by the act of May 4, 1870, chapter 69, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line between certain places in Oregon. In August following an instrument was executed by the company assigning all its interest in the grant to the Willamette Valley Railroad Company, and thereupon the question arose whether the grant was susceptible of being thus trasferred. The Attorney-General (Mr. Akerman), to whom the question was submitted, after reviewing the various provisions of the act, some of which (see section 5) imposed certain duties and required certain important acts to be performed by the company, decided in the negative, holding that, upon consideration of those provisions, the Oregon Central Company was alone within the contemplation of Congress in respect of the donation made and duties imposed by that act. The words "their successors and assigns," as used in the act, were regarded as words of limitation merely

But the grounds upon which that decision appears to have been based are not found to exist in the case now under consideration. Here a grant of a certain number of alternate sections of public lands per mile is made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, in and of the construction of a road from New Orleans, by the route indicated, to connect with the eastern terminus of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, which lands are required to be "withdrawn from the market, selected, and patents issued therefor, and opened for settlement and pre-emption upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company."

The grant is coupled with no special duties or trusts, for the performance of which there is reason to believe the particular company named therein was more acceptable to Congress than any other. Its purpose is to secure the construction of a railroad between the points designated, and whether this purpose be fulfilled by that company or by another company must be deemed unimportant in the absence of any provision indicative of the contrary. The interest derived by the grantee, though it remain only afloat, is a vested interest, and it is held under the same limitations which apply after it develops into an estate in particular lands until extinguished by forfeiture for non-performance of the condition annexed to the grant. I perceive no legal obstacle arising out of the grant itself to a transfer of such interest by the grantee to another company, and should the latter construct the road contemplated agreeably to the requirements of the grant, and thus accomplish the end with Congress had in view, I submit that it would clearly be entitled to the benfits thereof.

The question of the assignability of the interest of the grantee would be more difficult if, after definitely locating the line of its road, and thus attaching the grant to particular lands along the same, it was proposed to transfer that interest to another company for the benefit of a road to be constructed by the latter on a different line, though following the general course of the other road. But in the present case the facts give rise to no such difficulty. The grant had not, previous to the transfer, become thus identified with a particular line of road, and was thereafter susceptible of location upon the line of the road projected by the assignee (the New Orleans Pacific Company), provided this road met the requirements of the grant in other respects, as to which no doubt is suggested.

My conclusion is that the assent of Congress to the assignment made by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad company as above, is not necessary in order to entitle the assignee to the benefit of the land grant in question.

The remaining questions relate to the 68 miles of railroad formerly belonging to the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company, but now owned by the New Orleans Pacific Company, and made a part of its main line between New Orleans and Baton Rouge.

The land grant in question was, as its language imports, made in aid of the construction of a railroad between certain termini, contemplating a road to be constructed, not one already constructed. It has not been the policy of Congress thus to aid constructed roads. Had a constructed road existed at the date of the grant, which extended from one terminus to the other, and afterward the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, instead of entering upon and completing the construction of a road, had purchased the road already constructed, this, it seems to me, would not have satisfied the purposes of the grant so as to entitle the company to the benefit thereof. The same objection would apply were the constructed road extended over only a part of the route contemplated by the grant. So far as I am advised, the action of the Government hitherto has accorded with this view.

On the other hand, if such road was constructed subsequently to the date of the grant, and is owned by the grantee or the assignee of the latter, I see no ground for excluding it from the benefit of the grant should it otherwise fulfill the requirements thereof.

Agreeably to the foregoing views, and in direct response to the several questions submitted, I have the honor to reply as follows: The first, second, and third questions I answer in the affirmative. The fourth question (including the alternative added thereto) I answer in the negative. The fifth question I answer in the affirmative—assuming, as I do, the company named therein to be an assignee of the grantee in the act referred to.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LAFFOON. Summing up now the facts in their order that relate to the forfeiture of that part of the grant from White Castle to Shreveport, we find that the grant was made by the Government on the 22d day of March, 1871, to the New Orleans, Vicksburg and Baton Rouge Railroad Company. That company sold out all its rights, property, and franchises to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company on the 5th day of January, 1881; that before any construction of that road the authorities of the Government in two different communications assured it that it was the owner of said grant and that its title was complete; that the citizens along its line purchased in small tracts the land from the railroad company and are now in possession of same, engaged in all sorts of industrial pursuits; that the President of the United States has appointed commissioners and they have examined and accepted the road as it progressed, and that it has been classified as a land-grant road, and in all of its settlements with the Government of its postal accounts has been so considered and regarded, and that no hostile legislation was ever attempted until all these things in their regular order had been transacted and done.

In the face of these facts the question arises, can Congress as a matter of "cold-cut" law forfeit this part of the grant? The committee after a full discussion of these questions have agreed with the Attorney-General, the Committee of the Judiciary of this House, and of the Railroad Committee of the Senate, and say "no."

The settled doctrine of the courts in regard to all grants to railroads in analogy to private grants is that they are grants in præsenti, and vest the donor with a present title subject to be forfeited at the option of the grantor or donor upon the violation of the condition upon which they are made. It is further held by the courts that the grant carries the title without the aid of a patent to the lands. They hold that a patent only identifies the land granted and only to that extent perfects the title of the holder.

In the case of a grant on condition the holder takes the immediate title subject to be forfeited upon the application of the party who made the grant. If the grantor encourages the fulfillment of the condition after the time expires for its performance, then the law says you can not object, and the title in the grantor is complete.

I have read with care on this subject the cases of Schulenburg vs. Harriman, reported in 21 Wallace; Ludlow vs. New York and Harlem Railroad Company (12 Barbour's report, page 440); People of Vermont vs. The Society, &c. (2 Payne's report, page 562); Willard vs. Alcott (2 New Hampshire); Chalker vs. Chalker (1 Connecticut); Hume vs. Kent and Andrews vs. Suiter (32 Maine); Murray's Lessees et al. vs. Hoboken Land and Improvement Company (18 Howard, 280); Cooley's Constitutional Law, page 69; Lyttle vs. State of Arkansas (9 Howard, 383); United States vs. Arredendo (6 Peters, 691).

Mr. Speaker, there is now one other proposition of this bill on which I have not touched, and that is the Blanchard-Robertson agreement. I prefer to let that agreement explain itself. The Blanchard-Robertson agreement made with the New Orleans Pacific Company originated from a protest filed by Hons. E. W. Robertson and N. C. BLANCHARD, members from the State of Louisiana, with the Interior Department, requesting the holding up the action of said Department in patenting lands to said company until some agreement could be made by them with said company looking to the protection of the settlers on said land in the limits of said grant. Said protest is as follows:

SIR: Referring to our interview a few evenings since with yourself, relative to the land-grant claimed in Louisiana by the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, we hereby formally ask that further action by your Department toward recognizing the said land-grant as existing in favor of any party or parties be deferred for the present, and until such further action can be taken by us as will conserve the rights and interests of the people most vitally interested, namely, those living in the country in which the grant lies, and included within the limits of the fourth and sixth Congressional districts of Louisiana, now represented by us.

In support of this request, we submit the following, namely:

1. A large portion of the land embraced in the grant above referred to was, by an act of Congress passed in 1856, donated to another railroad company. Prior to 1856, many persons had settled upon this land preparatory to the entry and purchase of the same from the Government. These parties were settlers in good faith, and if time is given us, a list of their names and the extent of their claims can be furnished. Between the year 1856 and that of 1871 a great many more persons settled upon said lands. In the mean time, somewhere about the year 1870, the original grant to the railroad company in 1856 was, by act of Congress, declared forfeited. Upon this declaration of forfeiture, the parties who had settled on the land became entitled to file their applications for entry and purchase. But before this could be done a grant, covering the land, was made by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, and under this grant the land, something over a million acres, was withdrawn from the market.

We think these parties who had, under the circumstances above enumerated, settled on the land, are settlers in good faith, and have legal rights that should be protected.

We ask for time to present more fully the case of these settlers, and to produce their names, extent of their claims, &c.

2. Many of the parties who had settled on this land up to 1871 could not make application for the entry and purchase of the land, for the reason that a large part of the land, up to that time, had not been surveyed by the Government so as to designate the sections, townships, and ranges in which were situated the different tracts of land settled upon, or else their settlements were upon lands that required to be resurveyed—the necessity for which surveys and resurveys is shown by the reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, made repeatedly to Congress, and asking for adequate appropriations for surveys and resurveys declared to be necessary in order to enable settlers to locate their claims and the Government to dispose of the lands. By the failure of Congress to make these adequate appropriations the surveys and resurveys have never been completed, and hence the rights of these settlers have remained in abeyance, and would now be entirely lost by the issuance of patents to cover the land included in the grant made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company.

Reserving the right to file additional and supplemental reasons and protests, we are,

Respectfully, &c.,

E. W. ROBERTSON,
M. C., Sixth District, Louisiana.
N. C. BLANCHARD,
M. C., Fourth District, Louisiana.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

After this protest was filed and the suspension of the issual of patents by the Interior Department this letter, which contained the agreement mentioned, was written by said company and embraces the agreement which is proposed to be confirmed by this bill.

WASHINGTON, January 4, 1882.

GENTLEMEN: In consideration of the withdrawal by you of the protest and objection filed by you with the Department of the Interior against the recognition of the claims urged by the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, to the land grant made by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by the act of Congress of 1871, and now claimed by the New Orleans Pacific Company, transferees of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company, on behalf of the said New Orleans Pacific Company and any other railroad association or combination with which said New Orleans Pacific Company is connected, I hereby agree, consent, and obligate myself and the said company and any other company or association connected with it that the right of settlers and occupiers on the land included within the limits of said grant shall be recognized and protected as follows, to wit:

Settlers and occupiers of any of the lands aforesaid up to this date shall be given the right within twelve months from the register of the patents issued by the Government to the said company or its transferees for said lands, in the office of the clerk of the district court and ex officio recorder of conveyance and mortgages of the parish where the land wanted by such settlers or occupiers is situated, to file their applications with the railroad company, through agents to be designated by the company for the purpose, for the land claimed or wanted by them; such settlers or occupiers shall at the time the title-deeds are issued to them pay one-third in cash of the price of the land so occupied or settled by them, and shall have one and two years from that time, with 6 per cent. interest, in which to pay the remainder, mortgage and vender's privilege to be retained by the company.

The price of land to be paid by such settlers or occupiers shall not exceed $2 per acre, and the quantity of land to be claimed by each shall not exceed 160 acres.

Immediately upon the register of the patents in the office of the recorder of mortgages of the parishes affected by the land grant, the railroad company shall give notice by publication for ten days in a newspaper in the parish where any settlers or occupiers live, and also by publication at the court-house door of such parish, the fact of the register of patents, and that the company is ready to receive application from settlers and occupiers for the land wanted by them, and indicating the place where, and person to whom, application should be made.

Should this notice not be given immediately upon the register of the patents these settlers and occupiers are to have twelve months in which to file their application from the time of the giving of such notice aforesaid. Proof of occupancy shall be the same as required by the laws of the United States for the acquisition of public lands, if required by the company.

E. B. WHEELOCK,
President New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

Hons. E. W. ROBERTSON and N. C. BLANCHARD,
Representatives in Congress from Louisiana.

Accepted on behalf of settlers and occupiers.

After the filing of this letter was made Blanchard and Robertson filed their withdrawal of protest on the same day, and the Department proceeded to adjust the conflicting land titles upon the basis fixed by this agreement, and have so acted ever since.

I have explained the features of this bill, and now I hope the bill will pass, and I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported by the committee were adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] whether this bill goes as far as the one on this subject that was before the House in the last Congress.

Mr. OATES. It does not. It forfeits, however, all the land on the east side of the river and all to the terminus of the Morgan road, but it carries out the Robertson-Blanchard agreement as to the other lands.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It forfeits all that is forfeited.

Mr. OATES. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the grant is not all forfeited.

Mr. OATES. It is not.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that this is a case in which it would be eminently proper to forfeit the entire grant.

Mr. OATES. The House did not think so last Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know, but the House acted under a misapprehension.

Mr. OATES. And the Public Lands Committee did not think so this Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House acted under a misapprehension in the last Congress. I think it was evident that they acted on the opinion of the Judiciary Committee as to the estoppel of the Government, and I am sure that all lawyers will agree—I am sure that the gentleman from Alabama himself will agree—that an examination of the subject shows clearly that the rule laid down by that committee as to the estoppel of the Government is not properly laid down, and that the law of estoppel does not go to the extent there declared. However, as the Committee on Public Lands seem to be entirely harmonious in support of this bill, I shall raise no objection, although I do not see why an acre of these lands should be exempt from forfeiture.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose this bill, but neither do I desire the House to vote under the misapprehension that the committee are unanimously in favor of it. There is no minority report, yet some members of the committee are opposed to it. The minority advocated a different policy in the committee and sought to have the House adopt it, but the House upon another bill which was presented to it refused to adopt the policy of the minority, and since that time we have not seen fit to urge it upon the House. I want to state, however, that I do not agree to the policy upon which this bill is based. I do not agree with those who say that we have no right to forfeit all of this land grant, yet, under the circumstances, it may be best to let the bill pass in its present form, since the House at the last session refused to pass it in the other form. I will vote against it.

Mr. HOLMAN. And yet this bill has the effect of confirming a large portion of that grant.

Mr. OATES. It does confirm the grant as to a large portion of the land; but that land has already been sold to settlers upon terms very favorable to them, giving them one, two, and three years' time to pay for it; that is the Robertson-Blanchard agreement with those settlers which this bill carries out.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MOBILE AND GIRARD RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 9117) for the forfeiture of certain lands granted to the Mobile and Girard Railroad Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the lands granted and certified to the State of Alabama to aid in the construction of the Mobile and Girard Railroad, from Girard to Mobile, within said State, by act of Congress approved June 3, 1856 (11 Statutes at Large, page 17), be, and the same are hereby, forfeited to the United States, for the non-performance by said railroad company of the conditions upon which said grant was made, and at the expiration of one year from the approval of this act shall be subject to entry and homestead under the general land laws of the United States, without any further previous offering: Provided, however, That all of the aforesaid lands which have been sold and conveyed by said railroad company, or which have been sold as the property of said railroad company for State and county taxes thereon, and purchased by actual settlers, are hereby excepted from said forfeiture to the extent of 320 acres, and the titles to said lands, to the extent so excepted, are hereby confirmed and made valid to such purchasers, their heirs or assigns; and if any such purchaser shall have purchased more than 320 acres for the uses of actual settlement, he shall select said 320 acres herein excepted from forfeiture within one year from the approval of this act, and file notice of such selection with the register of the land-office at Montgomery, Ala.; and any such purchaser who shall fail to make such selection and file said notice shall not thereafter have the benefit of the exception herein made: Provided further, That when any such purchaser shall have purchased in excess of 320 acres for the purpose of actual settlement, or in cases where any of the lands hereinbefore forfeited have been sold and conveyed by said railroad company, or sold and conveyed as the property of said railroad company for State and county taxes thereon, and purchased by other than actual settlers, all such purchasers shall have a prior right to purchase said lands from the United States at the price and sum of $1.25 per acre, which prior right of purchase shall continue for one year after the approval of this act, and not longer: Provided further, That all such purchasers, or their assigns, shall each, within one year after the approval of this act, make proof, before the register of the land office at Montgomery, Ala., of the amount of land purchased, from whom, the title received, and the amount paid therefor, and when: Provided also, That such proof may also be made before a judge of probate or clerk of the circuit court, under the seal of office, and forwarded by mail to said register: And provided further, That the above-named privileges to purchasers are granted only on condition that no claim shall even be made by them or any of them against the State of Alabama, or any county, school district, or municipality thereof, for taxes erroneously assessed and collected on any of said lands, whether the same were paid voluntarily or not.

SEC. 2. That the said Mobile and Girard Railroad Company shall, within three months after the approval of this act, file with the aforesaid register a full list and description of all the lands of said grant certified to them, and designate the portions thereof which have been sold and conveyed by said company, to whom, if practicable, when, and for what price or consideration, which list and statement must be sworn to by two of the officers of said company, or two other credible witnesses who know the facts to be true; and with such list said company shall surrender to said register all patents and certificates to said lands now held or owned by the said company; and whenever the said register is satisfied that said company has in good faith complied with the requirements of this act, he shall certify the same to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with all of the evidence upon which his certificate is based; and if said Commissioner approve the same, it shall be final, subject to appeal and review of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That whenever said railroad company complies with the requirements of this act as hereinabove provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall certify to the president of said railroad company that it is thenceforth relieved and absolved from all the duties and obligations of a land-grant railroad.

SEC. 4. That at the expiration of the one year as hereinabove provided the said register of the land office at Montgomery shall certify to the Commissioner of the General Land Office a list of the lands proven to have been purchased, and owners thereof, and a brief of the evidence, and his decision, succinctly stated, which, if approved by said Commissioner, shall be final, subject to appeal to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe notices and rules for the enforcement of this act.

Mr. COBB. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] who reported this bill.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, the grant now proposed to be forfeited was made by an act of Congress of June 3, 1856, and it comprised some 850,000 acres of land. The grant was made in aid of a road proposed to be built from Girard to Blakely, Ala., a point on Mobile Bay, opposite the city of Mobile. The road was only partially built. The obligation of a land-grant road had been imposed upon this railroad by the Government, namely, the obligation to carry the mails and troops and munitions of war at reduced rates. The company have not completed the road. Having built it only some 84 miles to a point called Union Springs, they abandoned its construction from thence to Mobile.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. What is the distance?

Mr. VAN EATON. The length of the unbuilt portion of the route is probably about the same as the portion built, or perhaps greater. In view of these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the committee have reported in favor of forfeiting the entire grant, with the condition that, so far as the company is concerned, it shall be absolved when the grant is so forfeited from all the obligations of a land-grant road. This is, in brief, the substance of the bill, with the exception that it proposes to give to persons who have purchased lands from the railroad company the right for one year to purchase them from the Government at the Government price. The company has sold some of these lands, but members will observe that the bill provides that within a certain time the company shall give up their patents and yield their title, and that then and in that case the lands being forfeited to the Government, persons who have bought them from the company may obtain title from the Government at the Government minimum price.

Mr. DUNN. What does the railroad company do with the purchase-money which it has received from those people?

Mr. VAN EATON. With regard to that I will state that it is a very small sum. None of these lands were sold at over 50 cents an acre, and some of them were sold as low as 10 cents an acre. There was a proposition before the committee to make an account of how much money the company had received from the sale of the lands on the one side, and then how much they had lost by conveying the mails and other property of the Government at reduced rates and strike a balance; but we found that if that were done we would be owing the road a very considerable amount of money, and we thought it was easier, better, and cheaper all round to just quit, striking no account with the company for the money which they had received for those lands, which, as I have said, was a small amount comparatively, or for their loss from carrying the mails, &c., at a reduced rate.

Mr. DUNN. Does the railroad company agree to accept that condition?

Mr. VAN EATON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that we have had some experience in that kind of recession heretofore, and that the parties have always come in with claims for pay for the difference.

Mr. VAN EATON. Precisely.

Mr. DUNN. Is there anything in this bill requiring the company to accept the provisions of the act and to release the Government from the payment of that difference?

Mr. VAN EATON. The road wants to be released from its obligation as a land-grant road.

Mr. DUNN. The other roads did also, but afterward they wanted pay for the difference.

Mr. VAN EATON. I think the bill is sufficiently guarded so far as that is concerned. It provides that the company—

Shall, within three months after the approval of this act, file with the aforesaid register a full list and description of all the lands of said grant certified to them, and designate the portions thereof which have been so'd and conveyed by said company, to whom, if practicable, when, and for what price or consideration, which list and statement must be sworn to by two of the officers of said company or two other credible witnesses who know the facts to be true; and with such list said company shall surrender to said register all patents and certificates to said lands now held or owned by the said company; and whenever the said register is satisfied that said company has in good faith complied with the requirements of this act, he shall certify the same to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with all of the evidence upon which his certificate is based.

Then the company, if this is approved, will be relieved from its obligations as a land-grant road.

Mr. DUNN. Now there should be added just there words to this effect: "And shall release the Government from any payment on account of the reduction heretofore made in the compensation for transportation of mails, troops, and Government property."

Mr. VAN EATON. I presume the committee will have no objection to adding that provision.

Mr. DUNN. It ought to go in.

Mr. VAN EATON. If the gentleman will kindly draw up an amendment of that kind, I will, so far as I am concerned, accept it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. VAN EATON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. What amount of these lands adjacent to the completed portions of the road have been sold?

Mr. VAN EATON. I do not remember; not a very large amount. I was going on to remark that the State of Alabama for some years has treated these lands as the property of this road and has sold them on account of unpaid taxes. Certain parties have purchased the lands at the tax sales; and we provide in the bill that such parties shall have the right to enter the lands from the Government at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose they do not choose to enter the lands from the Government at $1.25 an acre, but claim that the title of the lands adjacent to the completed portions of the road is already in them by proper conveyance.

Mr. VAN EATON. I think that is provided for in the bill in this proviso, which will be found on page 3:

That the above-named privileges to purchasers are granted only on condition that no claim shall even be made by them or any of them against the State of Alabama, or any county, school district, or municipality thereof, for taxes erroneously assessed and collected on any of said lands, whether the same were paid voluntarily or not.

Mr. CANNON. Let me make my question more explicit. If this is an ordinary land grant upon conditions-subsequent, the probabilities are that the purchasers of these lands adjacent to the railway have taken a title which they claim to be perfect and which probably is perfect. This bill provides, as I understand, that these parties may purchase from the Government that which no doubt they claim to own already. Now, if there be a mortgage upon these lands or if they have been in the main sold, 84 miles of the road having been constructed and the lands probably taken, the title passed from the Government, so that it can not forfeit those lands, may it not be perhaps doubtful policy to release this road from the liabilities and burdens of a land-grant road?

Mr. VAN EATON. I will answer my friend from Illinois in this way: I believe it is within the scope and contemplation of all these forfeiture bills to forfeit the grant along the completed road if not completed in time; and the same difficulty would arise in all these cases. How it is to be met I do not know.

Mr. LONG. Is it not true that the provisions of the bill are satisfactory to those parties who appeared before the committee, and who represent the ownership of the land purchased under a tax title?

Mr. VAN EATON. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for that suggestion. It is true so far as the evidence before the committee is concerned.

Mr. BOYLE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. VAN EATON. I would like to answer the other question first.

Mr. BOYLE. My question relates to that point. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the purchasers of these lands from the railroad company are content with the provisions of this bill?

Mr. VAN EATON. They came before the committee and so expressed themselves, nearly all of them.

Mr. BOYLE. I happen to have as a constituent the principal purchaser, who has bought some 50,000 acres of these lands; and I am prepared to say for him that he is not satisfied with the provisions of this bill, and not content that it shall pass.

Mr. McRAE. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi whether he knows the purchaser the gentleman from Pennsylvania is concerned for did not take a quitclaim from the railroad, and whether he holds anything more than a quitclaim?

Mr. VAN EATON. I think that is true. And further, I would state, and I do not think it is out of place to say, that before the committee in the Forty-eighth Congress parties professing to represent the gentleman spoken of by the gentleman from Pennsylvania came and told us that would be satisfactory to them.

Mr. BOYLE. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I know the gentleman to whom he refers, and he denies he ever was before the committee.

Mr. VAN EATON. In fairness I would admit that statement was made before the committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, but as stated by my colleague on the committee, this gentleman took a quitclaim from the railroad, and that is all.

Mr. BOYLE. Allow me again.

Mr. VAN EATON. Certainly.

Mr. BOYLE. My constituent does not hold a quitclaim at all. He holds a deed of grant, bargain, and sale, a deed in fee-simple.

Mr. VAN EATON. What is to prevent him coming on the railroad for his warranty?

Mr. BOYLE. I understand the railroad to be worthless and not responsible.

Mr. VAN EATON. I would state to the gentleman that we examined that very deed, if I remember aright, before the committee, and while it is not in form a quitclaim deed, in substance it is, in this, that it goes on and guarantees the right and title to the land so far as the railroad is concerned. Every lawyer knows that is only a quitclaim.

Mr. BOYLE. Every lawyer does not know that. It is a deed of grant, bargain, and sale, with special warranty.

Mr. VAN EATON. So far as the railroad is concerned.

Mr. BOYLE. That is not material in the view I present.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Permit me to ask the gentleman a question for information. I understand from all that has been said that a part of the road has been completed and that a certain quantity of land thereby earned. Is that correct?

Mr. VAN EATON. I believe that is in substance correct.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That a part of the land was earned. If that be the case were not these lands mortgaged by the road?

Mr. VAN EATON. No, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. No mortgage?

Mr. VAN EATON. No, sir; no incumbrance whatever.

Mr. FINDLAY rose.

Mr. VAN EATON. Let me finish.

Mr. FINDLAY. Certainly.

Mr. VAN EATON. The evidence before the committee is that this part of the road was built without their knowing they had a land-grant fund.

Mr. FINDLAY. I wish to ask this question——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN EATON. Certainly.

Mr. FINDLAY. It is whether this bill and other bills on the table propose to do anything more than express the intent on the part of the United States to forfeit these lands.

Mr. VAN EATON. Nothing more.

Mr. FINDLAY. Under the decision in Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wallace?

Mr. VAN EATON. That is all.

Mr. FINDLAY. I ask the further question whether it is not a judicial question which must be determined by the court.

Mr. VAN EATON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FINDLAY. We must express our intention to forfeit; we must declare our intention to enter upon it.

Mr. VAN EATON. That is undoubtedly true. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will move my amendment.

Mr. VAN EATON. I do not think we will object to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN. I will move my amendment, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 2 of the bill:

"And said railroad company shall also release the Government from any right or claim for payment of any further compensation for transporting the mails, troops, and Government property than that heretofore allowed and paid by the Government."

Mr. VAN EATON. I hope that amendment will be adopted. I now yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I think all has been said that is necessary to be said in reference to the provisions of this bill; and I therefore move the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my colleague will yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. COBB. I hope we will get along with the bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall insist upon having a few minutes—five minutes at least.

Mr. COBB. Very well; I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to suggest to my colleague, if I can have the ear of the House for a few moments, that there is grave doubt whether the effect of this act is not more beneficial to the corporation than to the Government. About half of this road, as I understand it, has been completed. The road has obtained the benefit of the sale of a portion of the lands, and the corporation now seeks to be released from the obligation to transport the troops and supplies of the United States free of cost and to transport the mails of the United States at such price as Congress may designate, and I submit to my friend from Mississippi, as a fair question for consideration, whether it is not likely to confer a substantial benefit upon the corporation and none whatever upon the Government? On the one hand you release to this railroad company all the lands which have been disposed of by them, and upon the other you release them from the obligation they are now under to the Government. I think this is rather a liberal proposition as far as the road is concerned.

My friend stated that if you made up an account as between the Government and the railroad company showing the amount of money received by the corporation upon the sale of the lands and the amount due to it for the transportation of the mails, as I understand it, with the 20 per cent. reduction, that such an account would show a favorable balance to the corporation.

Mr. VAN EATON. I said that the Government would owe the railroad company money.

Mr. DUNN. But that is only the money received from the sale of a small amount of the lands. I understand that no great quantity of the land has been sold. It does not take into account the value of the lands which are forfeited under this act.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Government now has a very valuable right in regard to that corporation; that is to say, the transportation of its troops and supplies free of all charge, and the transportation of its mails at such rates as Congress shall prescribe, and Congress has already prescribed that the compensation of these land-grant roads shall be 20 per cent. less than the amount paid to the other railroad corporations who have received no benefit from the Government.

Now, I do not think this ought to be done. I am perfectly willing, if my friend will allow me, to offer an amendment to declare a forfeiture of the lands conterminous with that portion of the road not completed.

Mr. DUNN. Would the gentleman from Indiana insist upon imposing a condition upon the railroad company to carry the mails of the Government at a reduced price, for nothing?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; I would leave to them the lands conterminous with the 84 miles of completed road.

Mr. DUNN. But they have nothing left. I understand this act forfeits all of the lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but does not the gentleman see that that portion of the land which is not forfeited has already inured to their benefit?

Mr. DUNN. But this railroad company have retained no portion of the lands.

Mr. VAN EATON. Not an acre.

Mr. HOLMAN. But they get the benefit of the lands which have been sold.

Mr. COBB. Only about 120,000 acres have been sold.

Mr. HOLMAN. Some of the lands have been sold for taxes and the Government gets nothing.

Mr. DUNN. What is the consideration that you would propose for carrying the mails, or what will be the consideration in the event of the forfeiture should your amendment be adopted?

Mr. HOLMAN. These lands have been kept from settlers for some thirty-odd years——

Mr. DUNN. I understand that, but, as I understand further, the lands have been sold in many instances for 10 cents an acre.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the corporation obtained credit upon the strength of the land grant.

Mr. DUNN. Which lands were sold for 10 cents an acre. What do you propose in return for the service you demand? They got little or nothing for the lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was their own bargain; but they agreed, nevertheless, to transport the troops and supplies of the United States free, as well as to carry the mails at the rate that might be fixed by Congress.

Mr. DUNN. It is a matter of no differenee to me; but I merely wanted to test the gentleman's sense of justice.

Mr. OATES. I would like to make a statement to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. In a moment.

Mr. OATES. I wanted to give the gentleman some information upon this subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield with pleasure for that.

Mr. OATES. The completed portion of this road runs right through my district, and I know pretty well all about it. I offered this bill, which the committee have reported or rather a substitute, and there is no difference in the bill reported from the committee except in some of the provisions of the first section. There are 84 miles of the road completed from Girard, opposite the city of Columbus, Ga., to Troy, in Alabama. There were no public lands available under the grant along this line of completed road until it reached within about 10 or 12 miles of Troy, which is its present southern terminus. So that the lands that the company have received or nearly all of them lie beyond the constructed portion of the road and are of but little value. The company has sold no lands at more than a dollar and a quarter an acre, and most of them up to $1, and to actual settlers.

Mr. HOLMAN. What about the 50,000 acres, spoken of by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in one body?

Mr. OATES. But they have earned more than that, of course.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I understood my friend to state that these lands had been sold to actual settlers. That certainly was not a sale to actual settlers.

Mr. OATES. My recollection is the lands were sold under a quitclaim to give the right to cut the timber off them.

Mr. BOYLE. I have the deeds.

Mr. OATES. They are only quitclaims.

Mr. BOYLE. No; they do not quitclaim; they have no resemblance to quitclaims. They are an actual conveyance of title to this property.

Mr. OATES. Let me go on with my statement. I will come to that a little later on. That land down there was granted, and has been used and sold to these gentlemen, and has been used for the purpose of cutting the timber off it. There have been other purchases in that locality by saw-mill men for the purpose of cutting timber.

Mr. COBB. I yielded to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], five minutes. I believe his time has expired.

Mr. OATES. I hope the gentleman will allow me to get through with my statement.

Mr. COBB. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] five minutes.

Mr. OATES. It may take me a little longer. I want to state the facts. I do not wish to take any time unnecessarily, for I desire to see the bill pass.

The company received certification of the whole of these lands and held the title improperly I conceive, and it is to the credit of that company that they have not disposed of the quantity of land which they have earned by the construction of the road. I will not undertake to state the exact figures, but I have them in my desk. They have earned much more land than they have disposed of. The company do not set up any claim against the Government for any service rendered in the transportation of the mails, but are perfectly willing to surrender all these lands which they have not sold, and be released from their obligations as a land-grant company.

The effect of a forfeiture of these lands would release them as a matter of law, because you can not revoke a contract as to one party, and leave it binding as to another, as every lawyer knows. Then it is simply incorporated in the bill so as to make it clear and beyond dispute that this contract is revoked except so far as these lands have been sold by the company to actual purchasers who have paid for them. And the substitute reported by the committee confirms such purchase and also the purchase at tax-sales to the extent of 320 acres, and then gives the option or a preference to the purchasers of larger quantities than 320 acres to buy the excess at $1.25 from the Government.

Mr. LONG. Just what they would pay if there had been no grant.

Mr. OATES. Precisely so. Just as if there had been no grant at all.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Do I understand the gentleman to say that up to 320 acres the title is confirmed to actual settlers without their being required to pay any more?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir; where the purchase has been made in good faith the bill provides for certification and proof to be made before the register of the local land office, which must be confirmed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. HOLMAN. What amount has been received for these lands?

Mr. OATES. The actual amount received for lands sold is less than $200,000.

Mr. BOYLE. That remains with the company?

Mr. OATES. Of course. The title of that company to all of those lands was certainly defective under the provisions of the grant which I hold in my hand. That act I may say has been construed by the supreme court of Alabama in a recent decision to the effect that the company had not the power to dispose of these lands any further than they had constructed the road, and in attempting to convey a title they could not convey to the purchaser the title to these lands when they had none themselves or when they had a mere shadow of title, a right to complete the road and perfect the title. Then the purchaser who accepted such a title accepted it with all these defects.

I would say as matter of law if such were not the fact and the purchaser was chargeable with notice that this would be a judicial question the title of such a purchaser could only be divested by a judicial proceeding; it could not be by legislation. But it is a defective title to lands which the Government might denounce and forfeit for failure to perform the condition on which the lands were granted. It is, therefore, competent for the House by its action to confirm the titles upon certain other conditions imposed upon the purchasers. That is my view of the law of the case.

I think that this bill can work no injustice to any one. To my certain knowledge it is satisfactory to the people of that country except a few of these large purchasers for saw-mill purposes; and some of them, I believe, are satisfied. I believe some of them are the constituents of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG]. They are satisfied to pay $1.25 for the lands in excess of the 320 acres. The provisions of the bill are also acceptable to the railroad company. It is a company which I know well. They are not disposed to take any unfair advantages. It is a company which is popular with the people. It never has sought any unfair advantages either of the people of the country through which the road runs or of the Government; and I trust the bill will pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my colleague [Mr. COBB] will allow me to submit the amendment.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], reserving the remainder of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an amendment which I hope to offer.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out "entry and," in line 11, and "without further previous offering," in lines 12 and 13 of section 1.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a moment, I want to say that I am heartily in sympathy with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I feel satisfied that it is far safer to forfeit this land that has not been earned than to seek to forfeit the land that has been earned with these conditions and provisions. I want to say further, that my amendment as to these lands to be forfeited will prevent the purchase of them at $1.25 an acre and leave them to be homesteaded. I think that it is now, perhaps, an open secret that we are not to have any legislation this session repealing the pre-emption law; at least we have not had it, and I think there is a fair chance that that legislation will fail.

Now it is already confessed here that gentlemen who claim to own large quantities of these lands are willing, and perhaps glad, to pay $1.25 an acre for them, and I apprehend that under this proposed forfeiture, even if it were made under the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], we would find parties entering very large tracts of these lands at $1.25 per acre. I hope that this amendment of mine will be adopted as well as the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that my colleague [Mr. COBB] will permit me to offer the amendment.

Mr. COBB. I can not yield any further.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the amendment will be at least voted upon.

Mr. COBB. I can not yield for any further amendments, Mr. Speaker. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the amendment will be allowed to be received.

Mr. COBB. I can not yield now.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague must see that this bill as it stands is simply for the benefit of the railroad corporation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] insists on the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on offering the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 80, noes 40.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 37.

Mr. BOYLE. No quorum.

Mr. OATES. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] for the previous question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 37, not voting 157; as follows:

Mr. VAN EATON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether some gentlemen who are paired would not, if their attention were called to the matter, be at liberty to vote in order to make a quorum, this not being a political question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the language of the majority of the pairs, all of them which follow the printed form, is "not to break a quorum." The question, however, as to how far a member is restricted in regard to voting by a pair is a matter which the member must determine for himself; it is not a question which the Chair can decide.

Mr. CANNON. I voted unwittingly. I am paired for to-day, and I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MILLS. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McKINLEY], reserving the right to vote to make a quorum. In addition to that, the gentleman from Ohio would vote upon the same side as myself on this question.

Mr. SNYDER. I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS]. Understanding that he would vote in the affirmative on all land-forfeiture bills, I have voted "ay."

Mr. LAFFOON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE, of Kentucky] is sick at his room. If present, he would vote "ay."

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I was paired with my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS]; but after this roll was called I wished to be relieved from the pair, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT] was substituted in my place. I would like to vote on this question.

Mr. BOYLE. I object.

Mr. COBB. I think the gentleman has the right to vote. As I understand, he withheld his vote on account of a misunderstanding about a pair.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. He was present in his seat during the roll-call.

Mr. BAKER. I am paired on all political questions with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE]. If he were here, he would vote in the affirmative on this question. I desire to be recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Where a gentleman refrains from voting because of a pair which he has misunderstood, or where he has, though present, failed to hear his name called, it seems to me he is entitled to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon every roll-call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The practice of the House has been different.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] does not bring himself within the rule, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] objects to his vote being recorded.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Has not the practice been to receive the vote in such a case?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The practice has been to allow gentlemen to vote where they state that they were in the Hall during the roll-call and failed to hear their names.

Mr. DOCKERY. Or where they failed to vote because of a misunderstanding about a pair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] was in the Hall when his name was called.

Mr. BAKER. I was present when my name was called and refrained from voting for the reason that I was paired with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE]. Believing that if present he would vote for this proposition I desire, if it be in order, to be recorded in the affirmative, so as not to break a quorum.

Mr. BOYLE. I object.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLISS] came in during the roll-call, but after his name had been passed. I ask unanimous consent that he may vote in order to make a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the Hall at the time his name was called, and did he fail to hear it? If so, he is entitled to vote.

Mr. BOYLE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not a matter for objection. If the gentleman is entitled to vote the objection is of no avail; and if he is not entitled to vote, the Chair can not entertain the request. The gentleman from New York can state the facts of the case. If he brings himself within the rule, objection is of no avail; if he does not, objection is unnecessary.

Mr. BOYLE. If I understand the rule, it is too late now for the gentleman to be allowed to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not too late if the gentleman brings himself within the rule.

Mr. BOYLE. But does he bring himself within the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the matter which the Chair is trying to find out.

Mr. BLISS. I was in during the roll-call, but not until after my name had been called, having gone to a committee-room on business with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] and his colleague [Mr. RANDALL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's statement does not bring him within the rule.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] was in the Hall when his name was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] has stated that he was in the Hall when his name was called, but refrained from voting for the reason that he was paired. He now desires to vote, understanding that the gentleman with whom he is paired would, if here, vote on the same side of the question.

The Chair is inclined to think it does not bring him within the rule. It has been customary to entertain a request to vote when a party stated he was in the Hall and refrained from voting because he thought he was paired, but subsequently ascertained he was not paired. The Chair knows of decisions to that extent, but none where a party refrained from voting because he was paired and afterward desired to vote.

Mr. CANNON. On second thought, not knowing how my pair would vote, I will record my vote.

Mr. BOYLE. I am advised that I am not paired. I refrained from voting on the supposition that I was paired with Mr. DIBBLE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman comes within the rule and his vote will be recorded.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. HOPKINS, for the rest of the evening.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. SPOONER, for the evening session.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. BUTTERWORTH, for the rest of the day.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. HIESTAND, for the night session.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, with Mr. BRUMM, for the night session.

Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, for the evening session.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, with Mr. LOUTTIT, for the evening session.

Mr. ELLSBERRY with Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa.

Mr. GEDDES with Mr. NELSON, for the evening session.

Mr. CATCHINGS with Mr. PERKINS, for the evening session.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. BURROWS, for the evening session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My colleague [Mr. WARD] states he was paired. He found out after his name was called that he was not paired. I submit to the Chair he is entitled to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman makes that statement, he is entitled to vote.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I was paired with my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS], but after the roll-call I wished to be relieved, and Mr. BENNETT was substituted in my place.

Mr. BOYLE. The gentleman was not mistaken; he was paired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks he does not come within the rule.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BOYLE. No quorum has voted.

Mr. COBB. I move there be a call of the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 18.

So the motion was agreed to.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams, J. J.	Dawson,	Le Fevre,	Robertson,
Aiken,	Dibble,	Libbey,	Rockwell,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The doors will now be closed, and the names of the absentees will be called for excuses.

Mr. LAWLER. I have seen this performance gone through more than once, and I have never yet seen it come to anything.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that a quorum have responded to their names.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then we ought to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order, if the motion to adjourn be withdrawn.

Mr. LAWLER. I will withdraw my motion to adjourn, and move that the absentees be excused in gross.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask by unanimous consent that the question be acted on in that shape.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll of absentees will now be called for excuses.

Mr. HISCOCK. How many members answered to their names?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One hundred and seventy, which is more than a quorum.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move then to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I suppose the next thing in order will be the call of the roll?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Speaker, will it not be necessary to carry out the order of the House for the call of the roll?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If that is demanded it will be.

Mr. BOYLE. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and I ask for the execution of the order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 20, not voting 177; as follows:

So no quorum voted.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. BOYLE. I object.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. MORRILL.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum has voted.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, it is evident from the call of the House, and the roll-call now, that gentlemen are here who refuse to vote, and therefore it will be impossible, I presume, to pass this bill or anything to-night. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Can not we lay this bill aside and take up another? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the question on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 55, noes 53.

Mr. SOWDEN and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 23, nays 109, not voting 190; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

On motion of Mr. JACKSON, by unanimous consent the recapitulation of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the demand for the previous question, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking to pass this bill over and take up Senate bill No. 149.

Mr. STRUBLE. I hope that will be done.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There ought to be no objection to that request. This is a little matter up in the State of Iowa——

Mr. HILL. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. HILL. Then I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BYNUM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYNUM. The roll-call on the motion for the previous question showed no quorum; and the roll-call just taken on the motion to adjourn also showed no quorum. I desire to know if we can transact business till we get a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next roll-call may show a quorum.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I desire to make a statement. I know the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HILL] did not understand the object of the request. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SOWDEN. I move that there be a call of the House.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 52, noes 38.

And accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALLENTINE: Memorial of Joseph M. Sowell, of Lawrence County, Tennessee, for payment of his war claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BYNUM: Petition of Laura Newberry, widow of Jefferson Newberry, late of Company H, Eleventh Indiana Volunteers, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: Papers relating to the claim of Newton Kinnebrew, of Richard Tucker, executor of David Luber; of Martha N. E. Rice, widow of Fleming Rice, of John Dejournett, of John W. Dunnahoo, of Matthew Harper, of Rebecca Hood, of William H. Johnson, and of Mary Ann Parton, of Floyd County; of Jane A. King, of Polk County; of Daniel Lowry, sr., and of Joseph H. Smith, of Walker County, Georgia—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HOUK: Petition of Sanford Johnson, of Tennessee, asking reference of claim to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

Also, protest of Currie Post, No. 94, Grand Army of the Republic, of Cedarville, Ohio, against special taxation for payment of pensions—to the same committee.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of James M. Lindsay, administrator of James Lindsay, deceased, late of Washington County; of Daniel C. Miller, of Frederick County; of Philip Beck, of Washington County, and of C. J. Maddox, of Montgomery County, Maryland, praying that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEIL: Preamble and resolutions of the Engineers' Club, of Philadelphia, favoring competition in plans for the improvement of the entrance to New York Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. PETERS: Petition of citizens of Derby, Kans., favoring the bill pensioning Jesse G. Hamilton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETTIBONE: Petition of Thomas B. Moody, of Grainger County; of Jethro Hill, of Hamblen County, and of H. C. Smith, of Timber Ridge, Tenn., asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR: Petition of John Henry, of Jefferson

County, and of C. M. Wellons, administrator of Solomon P. McKinnie, deceased, of Hardeman County, Tennessee, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. WAKEFIELD: Petition of Philip Bardon and 136 others, of Sibley County, Minnesota, for the passage of an act embodying the recommendations of the national committee of the Grand Army of the Republic—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: Papers relating to the claim of William W. Campbell, administrator of James Campbell, of Jackson County, Alabama—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. BAKER: Petition of Patrick Haggarty and 24 others, citizens of the first district of Delaware.

By Mr. FARQUHAR: Petition of members of Stephens Local Assemby, Knights of Labor, of Buffalo, N. Y.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of 136 citizens of Lonaconing, and of James Finn and 24 others, citizens of Vale Summit, Md.

By Mr. PLUMB: Petition of Thomas M. Gent and 147 others, citizens of the eighth district of Illinois.

By Mr. E. F. STONE: Petition of Frank Welsh and 195 others, and of William M. Ginley and 43 others, citizens of the seventh district of Massachusetts.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 26, 1886.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present the petition of W. W. Allen and 70 other citizens of Richland, Iowa, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1253) granting a pension to James D. Haworth, vetoed by the President, and stating the reasons for their request.

I am personally acquainted with a large number of the signers of this petition and know them to be among the best citizens of our State. Inasmuch as the Committee on Pensions report in favor of the passage of the bill over the President's veto, in order that the members of the Senate may know what this man's neighbors think of him I ask that the petition without the names be printed in the RECORD.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RICHLAND, IOWA, July, 1886.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned, your petitioners and citizens of Richland and vicinity, who are well acquainted with our fellow-citizen, James D. Haworth, late of Company H, Thirty-third Iowa Infantry, whom many of us have known for many years, even for a time before the late war of the rebellion, and know him to be a good citizen and deserving ex-soldier, would most respectfully ask that whereas your honorable bodies did both pass Senate bill No. 1253, granting a pension to said James D. Haworth because of disabilities incurred during his three years' service in the United States Army; and

Whereas Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, vetoed said bill, thus depriving a good soldier and honest citizen of his just dues; and

Whereas from what we know of the case personally we believe said soldier's claim to be a just one, and that he ought to be placed on the pension-list:

Therefore we most respectfully pray that each of your honorable bodies take such action as shall secure to him his just dues.

Mr. McPHERSON. I present ten different petitions, signed by a large number of citizens of New Jersey, praying for the passage of eight different bills as heretofore stated. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I present a similar petition of James Finn and 24 other citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Maryland, praying for the passage of the eight bills referred to. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER presented the petition of Samuel Baker and 64 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Virginia, and the petition of George H. Wilson and 104 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Virginia, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the distribution of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Matthew McFarlan Lewey, late of Company D, Eleventh Massachusetts Volunteers, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2857) to grant leaves of absence to employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, reported it with amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I am directed by the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to alcoholic liquors and other poisonous beverages, to report it without amendment, and submit a report thereon. It is the report of the majority, and there may be views of the minority.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2870) for the relief of Alfred B. Mullett, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

CONVICT LABOR.

Mr. BLAIR. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 142) authorizing and directing the Commissioner of Labor to make an investigation as to convict labor, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment.

As this is simply directory to the Commissioner with reference to the discharge of his duties, and requires that he may make this investigation during the present year out of funds already appropriated for the expenses of his bureau, I ask that the joint resolution be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Commissioner of Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make a full investigation as to the kind and amount of work performed in the penal institutions of the several States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, as to the methods under which convicts are or may be employed, and as to all the facts pertaining to convict labor and the influence of the same upon the industries of the country, and embody the results of such investigation in his second annual report to the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the investigation hereby authorized can be carried out under the appropriations made for the expenses of the Bureau of Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALASKA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA BOUNDARY.

Mr. MANDERSON. There came to the Committee on Printing a report of the Secretary of State relative to the frontier line between Alaska and the British possessions. This report was accompanied by numerous maps bearing upon the subject, and the question of their printing was referred to the Committee on Printing. The committee upon investigation found that the cost of the reproduction of the maps, many of which are in print, would be some six or seven thousand dollars. The committee took the liberty of consultation with the Secretary of State, who has withdrawn his demand for the printing of these voluminous maps, and selected but one or two of the number needed to be reproduced.

We find that the cost of printing the accompanying documents thus reduced will be, for the usual number, $450, and for 100 additional for the State Department, $36.30.

I ask that the report and accompanying resolution be read and now considered, providing that the usual number be printed, and 100 additional copies for the use of the State Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report and resolution, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the map and documents accompanying the message from the President of the United States on the location of the frontier line between Alaska and British Columbia, having considered the same, respectfully report:

The message of the President of the United States dated May 17, 1886, was accompanied by a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers and several maps. The message was read and ordered to be printed, and the accompanying maps and documents were referred to the Committee on Printing.

The committee found on examination that the publication, or rather republication, of the larger portion of the documents accompanying the report of the Secretary of State might be dispensed with, and on calling the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that it already existed in print he withdrew it.

Your committee recommend the printing of the report of the Secretary of State with the accompanying maps and documents, and that 100 additional copies be printed for the use of the Department of State.

Resolved, That the documents and maps accompanying the message of the President of the United States on the location of the boundary line between Alaska and British Columbia be printed, and that 100 additional copies be printed for the Department of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the committee.

The resolution was agreed to.

MAP OF UNITED STATES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 160) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 15,000 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were, in line 6, after the word "each," to strike out "15,000" and insert "3,500;" in line 8, to strike out "4,500" and insert "1,000;" in line 9, to strike out "10,000" and insert "2,000;" and in line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty thousand two hundred and fifty" and insert "four thousand seven hundred and twenty-five;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be printed, under the existing contract, at a rate not exceeding $1.35 each, 3,500 additional copies of the map of the United States, edition of 1885; 1,000 of which shall be for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and the sum of $4,725, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 3,500 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed."

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for a committee of conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

REPORTS OF CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 22) authorizing the preparation of a compilation of the reports of committees of the Senate and House of Representatives. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that there shall be prepared, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, a compilation of the reports of the Senate and House of Representatives from the Fourteenth to the Forty-eighth Congress, inclusive, classified by committees, arranged, indexed, and bound in suitable volumes, for the use of the standing committees of the two Houses of Congress, and appropriates $7,750 for the preparation of the work.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIGEST OF OPINIONS OF ATTORNEYS-GENERAL.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] July 7, 1886, for printing 6,000 additional copies of the Digest of the Official Opinions of the Attorneys-General of the United States from 1789 to 1881, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 6,000 additional copies of the Digest of the Official Opinions of the Attorneys-General of the United States from 1789 to 1881; of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOAR. We ought to have added a digest of the opinions of the Attorneys-General down to the present date, which could be added in a very short time by a clerk there, because otherwise this document will have grown old like an old edition of an encyclopedia before it is published; it will be born worthless. I move to add to the resolution:

With which shall be included a digest of such official opinions from 1881 to the date of publication.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not object to that amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts will be made. It will not cost much labor.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection to it.

The amendment was ageeed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

ELECTRICAL CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a Senate concurrent resolution to print 2,500 additional copies of the report of the electrical conference at Philadelphia in 1884. I ask that it be considered at this time and that a letter from the State Department in connection therewith be read.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which had been submitted by Mr. MANDERSON March 23, 1886, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 2,500 additional copies of the report of the electrical conference at Philadelphia in 1884, being Senate Executive Document No. 45, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, for the use of the Department of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The accompanying letter from the Secretary of State will be read.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 22, 1886.

SIR: The report of the United States Electrical Commission, together with the proceedings of the national conference of electricians in 1884, was communicated to Congress by the President on the 25th of January last and is now going through the press.

As it is desirable that copies of this report should be furnished to all the delegates participating in the conference, and it being deemed advisable, with a view to the dissemination of the important results of the conference, to furnish foreign governments also with copies of the report, I therefore have the honor to recommend that 2,500 additional copies be printed for the purpose herein expressed. Inclosing a draught of a resolution,

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
Chairman Committee on Printing, Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

THOMAS R. WARE.

Mr. GEORGE. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7881) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas R. Ware, of Virginia, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

MINT REPORT.

Mr. GORMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report favorably with amendments the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives for printing the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1885 be printed, and that 6,000 extra copies be printed; 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

The amendments of the Committee on Printing were, in line 6, to strike out "six" and insert "nine;" and at the end of the resolution to add: "And 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the year 1885 be printed, and that 9,000 extra copies be printed; 4,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GORMAN, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. HAWLEY were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2875) to determine and settle final alanc es of accounts due to and from the United States Government, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2876) to transfer a certain lot or tract of land in the city of Saint Augustine, Fla., known as the "Old Powder-House" lot, to the city of Saint Augustine, Fla., in trust, for educational, library, and park purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A. K. CUTTING.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate such information as may be in his possession concerning the alleged illegal detention of A. K. Cutting, an American citizen, by the Mexican authorities at El Paso del Norte, and also whether any additional United States troops have been recently ordered to Fort Bliss.

LOUISIANA PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolution," the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which comes over under objection.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. GIBSON July 24, 1886:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inform the Senate, on or before its next regular session, what progress has been made annually by the surveyor-general of Louisiana in satisfying and adjusting the confirmed and unsatisfied private land claims in said State, as required by the third section of the act of Congress approved June 2, 1858, entitled "An act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes."

And especially to inform the Senate—

First. The whole number and aggregate quantity, as near as may be, of said claims in the said State wholly or partially unsatisfied at the date of said act and entitled to relief under its provisions.

Second. The number and aggregate quantity of said claims finally satisfied and adjusted under said act, and the number and aggregate quantity remaining unsatisfied.

Third. What defect, in his opinion, if any, in existing laws, executive regulations and decisions, or otherwise, impedes the adjustment of said claims under said law, and what new legislation and changes in said regulations and decisions, if any, are required, in his opinion, to enable the said surveyor-general to finally adjust and settle said claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I think it was the intention of the Senator from Louisiana to strike out a portion of the third clause of the resolution.

Mr. GIBSON. If the Senator from Massachusetts insists upon it, I have no objection. I think it is quite usual for the Secretaries to come before the committees of Congress and make suggestions and give information.

Mr. HOAR. We have a right to direct the Departments to furnish evidence and facts or documents in their possession, but I do not think we have a right to require them to express an opinion. I do not think we have a right to give an order which the Department is under no obligation to obey.

Mr. GIBSON. I have no desire to insist on retaining that portion of the third clause. I wish to say, however, to the Senator from Massachusetts that this resolution was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, and he had no objection to it whatever. I offered it by request. I will ask that the resolution be amended by striking out the concluding lines of the third clause, which direct the Secretary of the Interior to report what new legislation, &c., is, in his opinion, required.

Mr. HOAR. The objection was made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that I do not think the resolution is unusual in form. I certainly think I remember the Senate having adopted resolutions calling on various Secretaries for a statement as to what, if any, legislation would be necessary to accomplish certain objects. It is the suggestion of a form from the Department which has finally to administer the law, and I do not think it would be amenable to any of the objections which the Senator from Massachusetts has stated.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. I do not know whether there be any precedent or not, but I thought when the Senator from Vermont made his point the other day that it was well taken, and that if any such practice ever existed it was an irregular one and puts the Departments into a new and awkward relation with the President. The President has the right to recommend to us such legislation as he sees fit, and when such recommendation comes from the heads of Departments it comes in reports made to the President and by him forwarded either with or without his indorsement, but it comes from him.

It seems to me without the intervention of the President, for each head of an Executive Department to recommend such legislation as he thinks best, especially when directed to do it, would make a very irregular relation between the Departments and the President. Suppose the head of each of these Departments happened to differ with the President about some matter in his Department, or to make a recommendation to Congress one way and the President the other. Of course this particular case is an unimportant one, but it seems to me if we want suggestions about the recommendations of a Department we should apply to the President, and he should obtain from the head of the Departments the suggestions and transmit them to Congress.

Mr. GIBSON. I concur in the theory stated by the Senator from Massachusetts. Technically it is correct; but I think a different practice has prevailed for many years. We are in the custom of calling the Secretaries before our committees and calling upon them for information and suggestions.

Mr. PLUMB. And we send bills to them for their approval or suggestions of amendment.

Mr. GIBSON. Certainly. This body has often called on the Secretary of the Treasury to give suggestions as to what legislation was necessary in relation to the finances of the country, or funding the public debt and various measures which he does without having consulted the President at all. I will modify my resolution, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana modifies the resolution. The proposed modification will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the latter part of the third clause of the resolution in the following words:

And what new legislation and changes in said regulations and decisions, if any, are required, in his opinion, to enable the said surveyor-general to finally adjust and settle said claims.

So as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inform the Senate, on or before its next regular session, what progress has been made annually by the surveyor-general of Louisiana in satisfying and adjusting the confirmed and unsatisfied private land claims in said State, as required by the third section of the act of Congress approved June 2, 1858, entitled "An act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes."

And especially to inform the Senate—

First. The whole number and aggregate quantity, as near as may be, of said claims in the said State wholly or partially unsatisfied at the date of said act and entitled to relief under its provisions.

Second. The number and aggregate quantity of said claims finally satisfied and adjusted under said act, and the number and aggregate quantity remaining unsatisfied.

Third. What defect in his opinion, if any, in existing laws, executive regulations and decisions, or otherwise, impedes the adjustment of said claims under said law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

TREASURY SURPLUS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate as a part of the morning business a resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] which comes over under objection.

The resolution submitted July 24, 1886, by Mr. COKE was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of House joint resolution No. 126, "directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt."

Mr. COKE. I ask that House joint resolution 126, referred to in my resolution, be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels authorized as a member of the Committee on Finance to state to the Senator from Texas that the joint resolution will in all human probability be reported to-morrow from that committee. Whether the Senator would care about pressing the resolution under that statement, it is for him to determine.

Mr. COKE. I shall not press the resolution this morning upon the information given me by the Chair. My object is to get the joint resolution before the Senate. It is a matter of great importance to the country and to the Treasury Department. The joint resolution was passed by the House of Representatives on the 14th of July. It has been since that time in the Senate. The session is drawing to a close, and it ought to be acted on during this session of Congress.

I am satisfied with the statement of the Chair that the joint resolution will be reported to-morrow, and will agree that my resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

DISTRICT STREET RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] which comes over under objection. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. VEST July 24, 1886, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether the chartered rights and powers of the corporations owning and operating street railroads in the city of Washington, D. C., are such as to prevent appropriate legislation by Congress requiring said corporations to remove or alter the rails now used by them, and the road-beds of said roads as now constructed within said city; and that the committee report in writing to the Senate on the first Monday in December next, or as soon thereafter as practicable.

Mr. VEST. Since offering the resolution I have had a conversation with the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. This matter, I find, is pending substantially before that committee. I ask unanimous consent to modify the resolution so as to make it read "that the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed," and let the resolution then go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to modify the resolution; and as amended it will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

The message also announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 17, 88, 179, and 180 to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CABELL, and Mr. CANNON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report the same back with amendments. I give notice that as soon as the deficiency bill is disposed of, or as early thereafter as practicable, I will call this bill up for action.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA LANDS.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to said bill, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Add to said Senate amendment the following: "Provided further, That no forfeiture shall be deemed to have accrued solely because of a default in payment of principal or interest becoming due April 30, 1886, if the interest due upon said date shall be paid within sixty days after the passage of this act."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

H. L. DAWES,
BENJ. HARRISON,
S. B. MAXEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

OLIN WELLBORN,
T. G. SKINNER,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, that passed by a mistake occurring in the House, contains a wrong initial. I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the conference report on that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to the report of the commitee of conference on House bill No. 68.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I now present a new conference report, that I ask may be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

Strike out the name of William B. Chambliss wherever it appears in the bill and insert the name of William P. Chambliss.

CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

FRANK L. WOLFORD,
JOSEPH WHEELER,
Conferees on the part of the House of Representatives.

The report was concurred in.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

COURTS IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider an amendment made by the Senate to House bill 3014. I ask that the bill may be recalled from the House.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the bill?

Mr. TELLER. A local bill. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the amendment made by the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide or terms of court in Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado desires to reconsider the bill, as the Chair understands.

Mr. TELLER. I ask to recall the bill from the House of Representatives, and I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that the Senator move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed. That is the way to get at his object, and then ask the House to return the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. I should like to have my request put in such a way that it will accomplish what I want.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moves that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the order requesting the return of the bill will be made.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation; which was refered to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the President pro tempore United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, in compliance with Senate resolution dated the 24th instant, the compilation of the laws of the United States relating to loans and the currency, coinage, and banking, now being prepared in the Treasury Department.

It was the intention of the Department to include in the compilation any legislation which might be enacted during the present session of Congress, and it is respectfully suggested, if it be the pleasure of the Senate to direct the printing of the compilation, that it be returned to the Department for completion.

The index will be prepared when a paged proof shall have been received.

Very respectfully,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Acting Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 23d instant, a list of claims of volunteer soldiers adjusted by the accounting officers of the Treasury since the allowance of those embraced in House Executive Document No. 294, amounting to $122,938.49.

Mr. COCKRELL. Perhaps that had better lie on the table instead of being referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as I shall move it as an amendment to the deficiency bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Why print it? It can not be printed in time.

Mr. COCKRELL. It ought to be printed afterward, so as to show the reason for our action; but we do not want it taken away.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table, and the order to print withheld until the deficiency bill is disposed of.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 5038) for the relief of Stephen Sauer;

A bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry free of duty of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association;

A bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Joseph S. Moody;

A bill (S. 453) for the erection of a public building at Jacksonville, Fla.;

A bill (S. 1421) granting a pension to William H. Weaver;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 129) directing the Public Printer to forward the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to our legations abroad; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 54) to credit Lieutenants Giles B. Harber and William Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9726) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLAIR. Saturday I gave notice that during the morning hour to-day I would ask the Senate to consider pension cases, but the Senator having charge of the deficiency bill has satisfied me that it will facilitate the public business if I give way, and ask for a corresponding courtesy on his part to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having by unanimous consent dispensed with the formal reading of the bill, it will be read now for action upon the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations. The reading will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, under the head of "Department of State," in the clause making appropriations "for contingent expenses Department of State, to pay outstanding accounts," line 26, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Unionist Gazette, Somerville, N. J., 78 cents; Washington Post, $3; Baltimore Sun, $6.60; National Republican, $30; A. K. Williams, newspapers, $11.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 30, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for contingent expenses Department of State, to pay outstanding accounts, from $405.43 to $517.61.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 79, to insert:

Salaries of charges d'affairés ad interim: To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for salaries of charges d'affaires ad interim, $8,100.

To supply deficiencies in the appropriations for salaries of charges d'affairés ad interim for the fiscal years 1879 and 1880, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 87, to insert:

Contingent expenses foreign missions: To enable the proper accounting officers, without the payment of any money from the Treasury, to settle the accounts of United States ministers and others on account of the appropriation for "contingent expenses of foreign missions" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, by means of utilizing the entire appropriations under that head generally; and, without regard to the division of the amount between specified and unspecified objects, authority is hereby granted for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 97, to insert:

To enable the accounting officers, without the payment of any money from the Treasury, to allow and credit Gustavus Goward, secretary of legation of the United States in Japan, the sum of $552.55, expended by him as bearer of dispatches from Washington to Tokio, Japan, in 1883, the same having been disallowed in his accounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, in the appropriations for "contingent expenses United States consulates," after line 153, to insert:

To pay Fulton Paul, late consul-general at Bucharest, for protest fees and expenses incurred by him on his draft for contingent expenses for second quarter of 1884, while consul at Odessa, Russia, returned to him on account of the exhaustion of the appropriation for contingent expenses United States consulates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, $22.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 239, to insert:

Rent of court-house and jail in Japan: For payment of the annual rental of the court-house and jail at Tokio, Japan, for the year ending March 15, 1886, $3,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 267, to insert:

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

To pay amount found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of contingent expenses, Civil Service Commission, being for the service of the fiscal year 1885, $73.62.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," in section 1, after line 329, to insert:

Coast and Geodetic Survey:

For party expenses Coast and Geodetic Survey, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $518.75.

For furnishing points for State surveys, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $350.50.

For general expenses Coast and Geodetic Survey, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $1,498.33.

For expense of lithographing illustrations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey annual report, during the fiscal year 1882, $75.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 355, to insert:

For heating, hoisting, and ventilating apparatus, and for repairs to the same, for court-house and post-office building in New York, $4,092.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 359, to insert:

To pay Mrs. Imogene Robinson Morrell for painting the portraits of Howell Cobb and John C. Spencer, ex-Secretaries of the Treasury, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 380 to line 391, inclusive, as follows:

For repayment to importers the excess of deposits for unascertained duties, or duties or other moneys paid under protest, including interest and costs in judgment cases, the balance of the appropriation made by the deficiency act of August 5, 1882 (22 Statutes, page 260), for the purposes mentioned, and carried to the surplus fund June 30, 1885, amounting to $248,574.59, is hereby reappropriated for the same object and under the same limitations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 432, to insert:

For the maintenance of the United States carp-ponds in Washington and elsewhere, and the distribution of the young fish, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884, $226.03.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 438, to insert:

For the maintenance of the vessels of the United States Fish Commission, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884, $178.78.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 453 to 455 of section 1, as follows:

To pay George Wardman, late assistant agent at the seal fisheries in Alaska, salary from date of his removal to date of his arrival home, and traveling expenses incurred by him in proceeding to his home, $696.25.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 524, to insert:

In cases where vouchers and accounts based upon expenditures under appropriations heretofore made have been suspended or disallowed since January 1, 1885, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be revised by the accounting officers of the Treasury such disallowed or suspended accounts and vouchers; and upon such revision such accounts and vouchers, and payments covered by the same, shall be allowed by such accounting officers where it appears that the United States received and used or retained the consideration and value stipulated for by the appropriate executive officer of the Government who authorized and directed the payments in such cases to be made, or who authorized or directed the services rendered or the supplies or materials so furnished: Provided, That no fraud appears or is shown in such transaction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 540, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay a reasonable additional compensation to the employés of the Treasury Department who were actually employed during the months of July, August, September, and October, 1882, in addition to the usual business hours, on account of the work of exchanging bonds of the United States bearing 3½ per cent. interest for bonds bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, authorized by section 11 of "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1882, to be paid by the said Secretary to those actually engaged as aforesaid, in such sums as shall seem to him to be just and equitable, as follows:

For employés in the division of loans and currency of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, $1,384.48; the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, $1,384.48.

For employés in the division of records, files, and mail in said office, $564.56.

For employés in the office of the Register of the Treasury, $1,498.10.

For employés in the office of the Treasurer of the United States, $699.80; in all, $4,146.95.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 567, to insert:

For expense of paving on Locust and Olive streets around the United States custom-house, Saint Louis, Mo., fiscal year 1884, $6,169.39.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 572, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the Alamo Cement Company of San Antonio, Tex., for work done and material furnished by said company in constructing a permanent pavement around the United States arsenal in the city of San Antonio, Tex., $8,233.13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," in section 1, after line 624, to insert:

For completion of the boundary sewer, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 686, after the words "submit to," to strike out:

The board of engineers for fortifications and for river and harbor improvements whether any changes are demanded for reasons of safety or economy in the method of lining said tunnel heretofore adopted and pursued.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

A board consisting of two expert civilian engineers and two officers of the Corps of United States Engineers whether any and what changes are demanded for reasons of safety or economy in the entire system of the new water supply, including the reservoir and the method of constructing and lining said tunnel; and said board shall make full report thereon to the Secretary of War before such work shall be resumed.

So as to read:

Increase of water supply, Washington, D. C.: To enable the Secretary of War to complete the work of increasing the water supply of the city of Washington under the act entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1882, namely: To complete the reservoir, $160,000; to complete the tunnel, $395,000; in all, $555,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; but the Secretary of War is instructed forthwith, and before resuming work on said tunnel, to submit to a board consisting of two expert civilian engineers and two officers of the Corps of United States Engineers whether any and what changes are demanded for reasons of safety or economy in the entire system of the new water supply, including the reservoir and the method of constructing and lining said tunnel; and said board shall make full report thereon to the Secretary of War before such work shall be resumed.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). This is a very important amendment and I wish the attention of the Senate to it. The Senate seems to be taking this bill as a matter of course and I am disposed to do so; but, at the same time, there are some provisions in it which should be looked at.

This amendment proposes to stop the construction of the work for the supply of water for the city of Washington until a board of civil engineers shall review the plan of the military engineers and the matter is settled hereafter by the action of the Secretary of War or of Congress.

If the Senate wish to stop during the whole of this season and perhaps the next the construction of the water-works to supply the city of Washington with water they ought to agree to this amendment, because the amendment does do it if it is left to stand.

I have inquired of the members of the Committee on Appropriations what they desire, and I have no objection to what they really desire, but their amendment goes far beyond what they seek to accomplish. A member of that committee tells me that they fear the dam or the reservoir will not hold the supply of water but will leak; that it is not sufficiently protected. I have no objection to that part of the water-works being suspended, but the operation of this clause as it now stands would suspend the whole work until a board of civil engineers, to be hereafter organized, shall have examined all the plans of the board of military engineers under which the work is going on, and shall have reported to the Secretary of War; and until the matter is disposed of the work on the whole improvement is stopped.

As a matter of course, when this report is made to the Secretary of War he can not act upon it; he has no power to decide that dispute; and he must wait to communicate the information to Congress; so that the amendment stops the whole work until the next session of Congress, and even then when we come here we shall not be in a very good condition to decide an engineering problem between a board of civil engineers and a board of military engineers. If the committee are willing to strike out the last five words in the clause, "and said board shall make full report thereon to the Secretary of War before such work shall be resumed," I shall have no objection. I wish simply to strike out the words suspending the operation of the work.

Mr. VOORHEES. There would have to be an amendment in line 685 also striking out "and before resuming work on the said tunnel."

Mr. HALE. No, those words should not be struck out. That clause is only submitting the question. I am entirely willing that the words indicated by the Senator from Ohio shall go out, because I am willing that the matter should be left to the discretion and judgment of the Secretary of War.

The committee has no desire to interrupt for a single day unnecessarily this great work, but there are serious alleged defects in the tunnel, so serious that if the work should proceed without a new examination and an overhauling of the work that has been done, all the money that has been expended would be useless and we should not get the supply that we want. I am willing that those words should be struck out, and that then the Secretary of War should make up this board; and I will say in passing that it is not a civil board, but it is a board to be composed of two expert civil engineers and two officers of the Corps of United States Engineers, that body in the service not being eliminated from the consideration and examination of this subject at all, but it is intended to get the best men that can be found, and I believe that in twenty days, or in thirty days at most, a report can be made giving a complete examination of this work and suggesting changes which the Secretary of War, I have no doubt, will be glad to accept and embody in the work.

For these reasons I am willing that those words, "before such work shall be resumed," after the words "Secretary of War," should come out.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee had information of the most reliable character to the effect that the bottom of this reservoir was porous quicksand and in such a condition generally as that it would not hold water and that it would have to be covered probably with a course of clay at least 10 feet deep thoroughly pounded down in order to make it a compact, solid mass at the bottom of the reservoir. There was other information too from similar authoritative sources in regard to the tunnel, which indicated that the whole scheme of construction had been defective to the last degree, and it was feared there might be some effort now to hide those defects of construction in such a way as to impose finally upon the public a work in reference to this most important matter of the water supply which would prove insecure and entirely insufficient for the purpose for which it was constructed; and at the threshold of this new appropriation, which is made to repair the errors and defects of former estimates, it was deemed wise to pause long enough to enable us to see whether or not we were building upon an insecure foundation before we cast any more money into this great reservoir which has been so effective in absorbing money heretofore without any useful result.

There will be necessarily no detention whatever, because the investigation in regard to this matter can be very speedily performed. The Secretary of War, as stated by the Senator from Maine, can very readily summon a board and have it at work and have the result of its work before him within thirty days at least in such a way as to resume operations on some portion of this tunnel or reservoir, unless it shall be found that the whole thing is in such a faulty shape that it had better be abandoned rather than to go ahead with it in its present shape in the way of repairs or something of that kind. While, of course, it is desirable to have a water supply, at the same time a water supply with a defective improvement is no more certain than it is without any improvement. The design of the committee simply is that there shall be a useful expenditure of the money and that the method of that useful expenditure shall be determined in advance of any further action being taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. The idea of the Senator from Kansas, and that seemed to inspire the Committee on Appropriations, is that the water is going to leak out of the reservoir that has been provided for the holding of the water. The same idea was entertained when General Meigs was prosecuting the work in the upper reservoir. A great many people said that if they took reservoirs up there, which were much larger than this one, the water would all leak out into the Potomac River before it would get down to the city of Washington; but skilled engineers knew very well that the water in the reservoir rests substantially upon the level of the Atlantic Ocean, and it is not at all likely to leak out.

If there should be even a stratum of quicksand at the bottom of this reservoir, it would come to a stratum of blue clay and other clay that holds water perfectly. The same difficulty might be said to have existed in the reservoir above. Senators have passed it a hundred times and there they see a great high bank and a large reservoir which protects the water from going right over into the Potomac. There it has stood and there has been no leakage for twenty or thirty years.

This will be found a mere scare, a mere idea started for the purpose of getting up some scheme to compel a new contract and a new expenditure by the Government of the United States; that is what I believe. We have two great reservoirs now of this same water that is brought down to this new reservoir, and nobody ever heard of their leaking, although they are protected by much less secure banks than are built here. The bank built for the protection of the city in this case is one of the greatest works of the kind to be found anywhere. It is made enormously strong in order to prevent the possibility of its breaking and flooding this city. It is made under the direction of the most skilled engineers of the United States, including the whole engineer corps of the United States Army. Every one of these problems that are now talked about has been solved in the most careful manner, and this outcry is merely made by somebody, who no doubt may believe in it, who is endeavoring to stop this great work and compel some experiment by a new board of engineers.

I have no objection to an experiment being made: I have no objection to the appointment of this mixed commission to examine into the work of General Newton and the engineers who have charge of this work. Let them go and see it. All I want is that the work shall not be stopped. If there is any doubt about the safety of the reservoir, I want to know it.

Mr. HALE. That is all the committee want.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then strike out the last clause of the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Strike out the words "before such work shall be resumed."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all I desire. I have no objection to the other part of the amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me to ask the Senator from Ohio whether, if this board should agree upon different plans for the prosecution of this work, the continuous prosecution of it from now on would not be hazardous? Would it not be likely to interfere with any different plans? In other words, the Department would be pushing a work subject to an entire change of plan after a little while.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, the Senator is mistaken there. The only defect in this work, as I understand, is the reservoir up here; that is, they fear it will leak, but this money can all be properly and judiciously expended in making the tunnel.

Mr. PLUMB. No; the tunnel is defective. That defect has been ascertained.

Mr. SHERMAN. But upon a mere outcry, without any report from the engineers, is it worth while to stop this great work? I have no objection even to allowing the President of the United States to stop the execution of this work, or the Secretary of War to stop the execution of the work if he finds there is something in all this scare. But there is not anything in it. It is important to have this commission in order to dissipate a possibility; and if the work is only suspended upon the declaration or finding of the President of the United States that there is sufficient reason to believe that the plans have been defective, that would be different; but to stop it suddenly, merely because a report might be made by this mixed commission, is not wise. And even without the report, this amendment stops it until they make a report and until somebody acts on it.

Mr. HALE. I think we have it now so as to be satisfactory to everybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). Will the Senator from Ohio please state his amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the last words in the amendment of the committee, "before such works shall be resumed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand that the Senator from Maine accepts that amendment?

Mr. HALE. So far as I am concerned, I do not object to it. I am willing to leave it discretionary. Whether or not there are serious defects there I can not tell. There are a great many people who believe there are. If there are, a board selected in this way will report to the Secretary of War after an examination, and that will be beneficial, whether they recommend going on just as things are now, or whether they suggest some changes. It will tend to settle in the mind of the people this important question, and will show that the subject has been investigated. I am willing to strike out these words, as I have said, and leave the matter with the Secretary of War as to whether or not the work shall be entirely suspended.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senate will not agree to this amendment to the amendment of the committee. I understood the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to say that the proposition of the committee was for the purposes of those who wanted a new contract. I beg to say to the Senator that this whole question has originated with the United States Engineers, and it seems to be a very serious one. Captain Hoxie, who was formerly connected with the District government, is the designer of this tunnel and of the reservoir. I happened to serve with my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] upon a subcommittee that had the matter in charge originally. Captain Hoxie began the work, or, rather, the work was begun in conformity with his plan. Captain Hoxie was shortly after removed from Washington and the work was placed in the charge of another engineer.

Mr. HARRIS. He being in charge of it up to the time he was removed.

Mr. GORMAN. Up to the time he was transferred to some other place. Recently Captain Hoxie, in a public communication and in a communication addressed to the Appropriations Committee of the House, states that the original plans of the tunnel have been changed, that the location of the tunnel is now defective, that it has not been sunk as deep as was intended, nor is constructed in solid rock, and therefore it will of necessity require to be lined; and the question arrises whether it shall be lined, contrary to the original plan, either with brick or with concrete—a difference in cost of some hundred or more thousand dollars.

But that is not all. The construction of the tunnel under Rock Creek coming down on an inclined plane on both sides, with no possibility of ever draining the tunnel or getting the water out in case of accident except by pumping it with the most powerful engines for weeks at a time, is a matter that nearly all engineers in the country say is a defect in the design and location.

As to the lining, the United States engineers who were before the committee and examined on the subject do not agree as to what shall be done. As to the construction of the reservoir I think I am perfectly within bounds when I say that there is a great difference of opinion; but it seems clear that a large part of the bottom of that reservoir is a quicksand, and it is doubtful to-day whether it can be made, within any reasonable cost, to hold water.

Certainly the United States Army officers, who have no special adaptation or experience in construction of works of this character, have misled Congress as to the cost of the work. I do not think I overstate it when I say it will cost two million and a half of dollars before it is completed; and, as I have said, the difficulty comes principally from placing the work in charge of gentlemen who have never had experience in this class of work, confiding it to young Army engineers who have thought more of the society of Washington than they have of making a great improvement here; and hence the Committee on Appropriations believed that the only way the Government could be protected was by bringing in two civil engineers, selected by the President of the United States, whose judgment should be had upon this work. I trust, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio will not be agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I should like to know of the committee if the work has been suspended, as the phraseology of this clause would seem to indicate when it says that work shall not be resumed. Can the Senator from Maine tell me?

Mr. PLUMB. The work has been suspended for some time. The appropriation was exhausted and it was ascertained that it was necessary to line the tunnel.

Mr. PALMER. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, which has been accepted by the member of the Committee on Appropriations in charge of the bill, will be adopted, or that the amendment will be adopted with that proviso. It is a well-known fact that the supply of water is deficient. There are a great many houses in K street, and it is so in a still greater degree when you come to a lower level, in which the occupants can not get water in their third stories and even in their second stories. It is very essential I think that this great work should be carried on. I do not know the animus of the amendment as incorporated in the bill, but it seems to me all the good to be accomplished can be accomplished by the amendment as amended by the Senator from Ohio.

I understand if the work is suspended for any length of time great damage will ensue from the infiltration of water and the percolation of water, and the necessary pumping will be greatly increased. On that account I think the discretion should be left with the Secretary of War, and the work should not be suspended authoritatively as it is in the committee's amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Ohio how he secures the result he professes to desire by striking out in lines 696 and 697 the words which he proposes to omit after "Secretary of War," if he retains in lines 685 and 686 concerning the tunnel?

Mr. SHERMAN. The answer to that is that "the Secretary of War is instructed forthwith, and before resuming work on said tunnel, to submit to a board consisting of two expert civilian engineers and two officers of the Corps of United States Engineers," &c. He can do that any day. He need not await their report.

Mr. INGALLS. He is "instructed forthwith, and before resuming work on said tunnel, to submit the question to a board," &c. That is to say, the Secretary is required to obtain the opinion of a board before any work can be resumed or money expended on the tunnel.

This whole operation and the entire expenditure will be futile unless the work is to go on upon the tunnel; and having been familiar with this transaction from the beginning, having been a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia when the bill was passed for extending the water supply, I have followed the operations since with a great deal of interest, and it is my deliberate opinion that the principal reason why there has been so much delay about completion of the tunnel is that sufficient money has not been appropriated and expended to put it in proper condition so as to prevent percolation. In other words, water has been allowed to infiltrate and accumulate in the apertures. It is true that the conjecture of the engineer was not entirely verified. He supposed, from surface examination and from borings, that the entire orifice would be made through solid rock; but no person can tell by examination of the surface of the earth what is underneath. So it turned out that in certain places the rock not being continuous the bore was through soft strata, which necessarily will require masonry for support, and hence the work has become more expensive than it otherwise would have been, and, in consequence of the failure to appropriate, much of the work has been obstructed from the infiltration of water and the subsequent destruction of the roof.

With regard to the reservoir I have conversed with Major Lydecker, Captain Hoxie, and other engineers who are familiar with the subject, and they all state affirmatively that nothing has thus far been disclosed in the excavation than might reasonably have been anticipated; certain alluvial deposits will have to be removed; but that on the whole the work is absolutely satisfactory, and there is no more uncertainty about a reservoir that will hold water satisfactorily being constructed there than there would be in any other place that might be selected. No quicksand has been discovered that can interfere with its security.

It will be a great calamity if the work on this tunnel and reservoir is permanently arrested. The health and convenience of the city require an additional water supply; and whether we have made mistakes, or whether we have not, so much money has been expended and so great progress made with this present system that returning would be as difficult as going over. Money may have been wasted, but it certainly will cost a great deal more to adopt a new plan and abandon what has been accomplished than it will to go on and appropriate the necessary amount for completing this present system under the most extravagant appropriations that have yet been estimated. I hope the committee will agree that, subject to an intelligent supervision by the Secretary of War of this work, it may be allowed to proceed and that the appropriations made by the House will not be hampered by any unnecessary limitation imposed upon the Secretary of War; and if the Senator from Maine is not strenuous about it, it occurs to me that it would be wise to strike out the proviso about the resumption of work on the tunnel in line 685, because the longer that work remains as it is now the greater is the destruction. Every day is a direct loss. They are doing the best they can to pump out the water that is in the perforation; but if is to be completed then the sooner it is finished the better, and there ought not to be any delay depending upon the caprices of the Secretary of War or any one else unless we intend to abandon it. If we intend to go on with it, the sooner the money is begun to be expended the better it will be for all parties concerned and all interests involved.

Mr. VOORHEES. There has been a great deal of controversy over the subject we are now considering, and I see by the bill, as it is reported here with amendments, that the House of Representatives, where gentlemen of antagonistic views were heard before the proper committee, inserted that—

> The Secretary of War is instructed forthwith, and before resuming work on said tunnel, to submit to the board of engineers for fortifications and for river and harbor improvements whether any changes are demanded for reasons of safety or economy in the method of lining said tunnel heretofore adopted and pursued.

It seems to have occurred to everybody, there seems to have been quite a unanimity on the subject of an examination and a resurvey, and all the difference proposed by the Senate amendment is as to the board to which this subject shall be submitted. The House provided that it be submitted to the board of engineers for fortifications and for river and harbor improvements, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations has simply amended it by striking that out and asking for a different board.

It was my desire mainly to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio and others who are taking an interest in this subject to the fact that the amendment complained of offered by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate makes no change as to the suspension of the work contemplated by the bill when it reached here. It reached here with a provision for the suspension of the work until the board of engineers for fortifications and for river and harbor improvements can make this very examination. The Senator from Ohio dissents. I will read and see whether the Senator is right or not.

Mr. SHERMAN. It suspends work on the lining, not on other parts. There is a great deal of work going on at the dam and other work besides the lining. The House provision only suspended operations on the lining.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think there is the distinction which the Senator has pointed out, but I am strongly inclined to think that a general examination of the whole system as provided for by the committee is required. I have not been satisfied that there has been fair play on this subject for the last year. I never thought Captain Hoxie ought to have been ordered away in the midst of his great work. I regard him as the most competent man who has ever had charge of works of this kind in the District of Columbia. For many years he was in charge of this and other Government works here, and no charge, no word was ever uttered against him.

As to his competency and his integrity there can be but one opinion. He was in the midst of this work on plans of his own creation when ordered away upon other duty; new men were placed in charge of it, and ever since that there has been difficulty and confusion. Captain Hoxie is a singularly modest man; he has made no complaint, but some observations he has submitted on this subject which I believe to be correct.

When this question first arose, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] knows, I was not aware there had been a departure from the original plans. I was under the impression there had been a defective execution of the original plans rather, but I see it stated here that the original plans as they emanated from the War Department, and for which Captain Hoxie was responsible, have been departed from by those now in charge of this work, and I think it eminently proper that an examination of the entire system should be made before more money is expended.

Now the proposition of the Senator from Ohio involves this, that in face of the uncertainty as to whether these plans are the best or not those in charge of them shall go on and execute them, while at the very time side by side with their execution they are under investigation, to be changed perhaps by this new board. If there is a sufficient question as to the propriety and correctness of these plans as to call for an investigation, that very fact should cause a suspension of the work. If there is a query in the minds of legislators, if there is a doubt, that doubt should be solved before any additional money is buried in the ground under those rocks and hills. Some light should be thrown in. Therefore I concur with the Senator from Maryland in the hope that these four or five important words at the end of this amendment may not be stricken out, and that it shall stand as it is now:

And said board shall make full report thereon to the Secretary of War before such work shall be resumed.

"Resumed work" is what the Senator from Ohio insists upon, on defective plans, or upon plans that have been departed from. Are we to agree with him when he says it is a baseless clamor? Others think otherwise. There are people who think that these charges are well founded. At any rate there is a difference of opinion, so that upon a full examination in the House of Representatives the bill came over here as it was; and men of the highest reputation and standing in the service of the Engineer Corps have been examined, and they say that it is necessary before any other work is done that the method of lining the tunnel should be thoroughly examined to see what changes were necessary. The lining of a tunnel to bring water to this city or any place else is a very important matter. It is pretty much all there is of security to a tunnel. When the question is raised as to whether a tunnel is so lined as to hold water or not, I think we had better stop spending money, and not only investigate that, but while investigating that investigate other things besides.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that I think this tunnel and this water improvement generally will be accelerated by the adoption of the amendment of the committee. The work has already been stopped. Very great doubt exists in the public mind, as I think it does in the minds of Senators and Members who have investigated the matter, whether or not the plans which are being proceeded on now are the very best, and whether they will not result in the expenditure of a large amount of money, and therefore require a large amount next year and the year thereafter. While this doubt exists, which has certainly substantial foundation so far, it seems to me it would be wiser to take counsel from the best possible sources before expending any more money; and, as I said before, it seems to me that will not really work delay, for the Secretary of War may have the report before him in thirty days. This science of water supply—because it is a science—is one of those things which have come to be understood very well by certain very eminent civil engineers, whose word has an authority on that subject which is not generally attributed to that of Army engineers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. There are evidently two sides to this subject. My personal belief is that the most satisfactory way would be to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Ohio and go no further. I am willing for one to vote for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, after the words "Secretary of War," in line 696 of the amendment reported by the committee, to strike out the words "before such work shall be resumed."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. Was there any motion pending about the same words in lines 685 and 686?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was not. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 709 to 713 inclusive, as follows:

To pay Meredith H. Kidd amount found due him, on settlement numbered 55667, by the Second Auditor, on account of pay, &c., of the Army, $237.84.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 723, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War to pay, out of the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $57,500 made by the act approved August 5, 1882, for payment of awards growing out of the illness and burial of the late President Garfield, to Mrs. Blanche W. Woodward, widow of the late Surg. Joseph J. Woodward, United States Army, for especial and meritorious services rendered by her husband in the last illness of President Garfield, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 723, to insert:

Army and Navy hospital, Hot Springs, Ark.: For completion of hospital, to put it in proper condition to receive patients, as enumerated in House Executive Document No. 62, page 15, first session Forty-ninth Congress, $8,952.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 778, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation "for transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water," &c., from $95,000 to $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 805, after the word "dollars," to insert:

The same to be received in full compensation for such work up to the present time; and hereafter none of such work shall be done except under specific appropriations therefor made in advance.

So as to make the clause read:

To pay the American Graphic Company of New York city for making plates and publishing weather maps, during the fiscal year 1885 and 1886, $5,750, the same to be received in full compensation for such work up to the present time; and hereafter none of such work shall be done except under specific appropriations therefor made in advance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," in section 1, line 822, after the words "year 1884," to strike out "$160.67" and insert "and prior years, $538.39;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay amount found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the library, Navy Department, being for the service of the fiscal year 1884 and prior years, $538.39.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 825 to line 829, inclusive, as follows:

That the sum of $377.72 is hereby reappropriated to pay amount found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of the library of the Navy Department for the fiscal year 1883.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 851, to strike out the head-line "Bureau of Navigation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 864, to strike out the head-line "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 898, to insert:

To supply a deficiency in the contingent service of the Bureau of Ordnance, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1060, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay E. P. Nisson, as managing owner and agent for the other owners of the American schooner Viking, of San Francisco, the amount due, under charter-party dated April 17, 1885, for conveyance from Mare Island, California, to Kotzebue Sound, of fifteen officers and enlisted men, comprising the "expedition to make exploration in Northern Alaska," together with stores pertaining thereto, $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1069, to insert:

To pay to Benjamin Atwood, late an acting master's mate in the United States Navy, the sum of $150, for reimbursement for clothing lost by him in consequence of the destruction of the Iron Age.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interior Department," in section 1, line 1109, after the word "Gazette," to strike out "two thousand" and insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For photolithographing or otherwise producing plates for the Patent Office Official Gazette, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1115, after the word "session," to strike out "to be paid out of any moneys already appropriated for the Capitol terrace;" so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the amount due Messrs. Middleton, Lane & Co. for material and labor furnished for north approach of United States Capitol terrace, as per statement, Executive Document No. 104, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, $2,833.48.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1141, to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Richard Joseph, late disbursing clerk, Department of the Interior, with the following disbursements, made in good faith and on properly approved vouchers, heretofore disallowed in the settlement of said disbursing clerk's accounts by the late accounting officers of the Treasury, namely:

Extension of the Government Printing Office: June 30, 1882, to Michael Brady, for rent of small building in rear of Government Printing Office, used as a workshop while engaged in the extension of the Printing Office, $25.

Annual repairs United States Capitol: June 30, 1882, to Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, for rent of frame building used by the engineer's office, Capitol Grounds, during the second quarter, 1882, $120.

Salaries office Secretary of the Interior: June 30, 1880, to George W. Evans, extra services, $200.

Expenses of the Tenth Census, $11,329.52.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Indian affairs," in section 1, to strike out the following clause from line 1209 to line 1216, inclusive:

To enable the accounting officers to adjust certain appropriations on the books of the Department the sum of $2,621.60 is hereby reappropriated, to be carried to the credit of appropriation "Fulfilling treaty with Seminoles," being amount found due this appropriation in the adjustment of the accounts of the late Douglas H. Cooper, United States Indian agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the following clause from line 1217 to line 1229, inclusive:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to the Western Miami Indians of Kansas, in the Indian Territory, out of the land fund to their credit in the United States Treasury, in cash, per capita, or to be expended in such other manner as he may consider best for their interest and welfare, the sum of $9,495, in order to relieve their pressing wants and necessities, occasioned by the destruction of their crops and loss of cattle, hogs, and horses by disease during the summer and fall of the year 1885, to be available for expenditure until June 30, 1887.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the following clause from line 1230 to line 1245:

For this amount to be paid to the Pottawatomie Indians, or expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, being the difference between the amount paid to said Indians in currency in the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867, and the sum due in coin, under their treaties of 1818 and 1829, as required to be ascertained by article 9 of their treaty of August 7, 1868, $49,382.08; but this provision shall not be held as precedent hereafter for the regulation or decision of any controversy between the Government of the United States and any parties whatsoever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the following clause from line 1246 to line 1260, inclusive:

For pay of employés of the Round Valley Indian agency, California, being for services rendered during the fiscal years 1885 and 1886, namely: To G. W. Cummings, $532.18; C. M. Brown, $486.04; J. W. Hannah, $131.65; P. G. Tuttle, $809.83; A. Odell, $280.80; S. B. Larimer, $473.89; N. C. Salisbury, $336.30; D. W. Reardon, $123.41; in all, $2,974.10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the clause from line 1261 to line 1265, inclusive, as follows:

Flora Skinner, widow of Dr. Gilbert A. Skinner, deceased, $400, being the amount of salary due said Dr. Gilbert A. Skinner, Government physician at said agency at the time of his death; in all, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1265, to insert:

Lighting Capitol and grounds:

For payment of balance due for gas service for the fiscal year 1885, $1,945.20; for balance due for gas service, electric lighting, pay of superintendent of meters, and for pay of one lamplighter for the fiscal year 1886, $4,419.85; in all, $6,365.05.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1275, to insert:

National Museum:

For expense of heating, lighting, and electrical and telephonic service, $631.67.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," in section 1, after line 1356, to insert:

The proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the accounts of Lieut. W. P. Duvall, Fifth Artillery, United States Army, disbursing officer for the board of United States Executive Departments, New Orleans Exposition, for payments made, by order of the said board, for filling and engrossing charts for the exhibit of the Department of Justice, amounting in all to $81.75, as follows: December 1, 1884, to C. Mahon, $37.50; December 1, 1884, to H. M. McNeal, $10; December 3, 1884, to S. G. R. Raby, $17; December 3, 1884, to James V. Kearny, $17.25; the same not to involve the payment of any money from the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1376, after the word "courts," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Fees and expenses of marshals: For fees and expenses of marshals, United States courts, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1390, after the word "pay," to insert "to the legal representatives of;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Attorney-General to pay to the legal representatives of Thomas Simons for services rendered in the case of the Choctaw Nation of Indians vs. The United States, in the Court of Claims, between June 3, 1885, and March 2, 1886, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, in the clause appropriating $50,000 "for fees of commissioners, and justices of the peace acting as commissioners," after the word "dollars," in line 1408, to strike out the words:

And hereafter the whole of the compensation and fees paid a commissioner, and to which he may be entitled, for services in the examination of criminal charges, shall not exceed eight hundred dollars per annum, or exceed that rate for any time less than a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the clause appropriating for a deficiency in commissioners' fees for 1885, lines 1417 to 1421, and for information which may be desired hereafter, I wish to call attention to a letter transmitted to me by the First Comptroller dated July 24, 1886. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 24, 1886.

SIR: Complying with your request of the 22d to be informed as to the number, compensation, &c., of United States commissioners throughout the United States, I inclose herewith lists of all the commissioners who drew compensation from the United States during the fiscal years 1884 and 1885 respectively, and the amount of compensation so drawn, in the States of Maine, Connecticut, Vermont, Pennsylvania, Indiana, and Missouri. In the State of Massachusetts Mr. Henry L. Hallett was the only commissioner that rendered accounts against the United States, and the books of the Department do not show money paid to any other commissioner.

It has not been practicable, in the limited time at my command, to make the list embrace other States, but I will do so if desired.

I think, however, the information before you will show that legislation which would fix the maximum compensation of United States commissioners at $500 a year would be legislation in the interest of the great body of commissioners throughout the country, and I do not entertain a doubt but it would be legislation in the interest of the United States. Some twenty-five commissioners might be found in the United States who by their system of absorbing business that should properly go to other commissioners—to commissioners nearer the locality in which the accused and the witnesses are resident—are responsible for the needless expenditure of fully one-fourth of the judiciary appropriations of the Government.

I suppose that the most easy, legitimate, and proper way to correct this evil would be for Congress to remove from commissioners the motive they have heretofore had that influenced them to useless activity and improper practices. I do not see why a commissioner should seek to draw business from every part of a judicial district, nor do I see why a deputy marshal should pass by two, three, or more commissioners with prisoners and witnesses in order to reach some particular commissioner.

If, however, the lawmakers should prefer that the accounting officers undertake to correct the evil herein referred to with the law as it stands at present, I am willing to do my whole duty in the matter.

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate Chamber.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the exhibit accompanying that letter be printed in the RECOD in connection with it, and I simply desire to call attention to a few statements.

Mr. COCKRELL. The most paid to any commissioner in Maine in 1885 was $731.95 to E. M. Rand, of Portland. The most paid to any one commissioner in Vermont in 1885 was $127.35, to G. E. Johnson, of Burlington. The most paid to any commissioner in Connecticut in 1885 was $118.75, to E. E. Marvin, of Hartford. The most paid to any commissioner in Indiana in 1885 was $210.95, to C. Martindale, of Indianapolis. In Pennsylvania the most that was paid to any commissioner in the eastern district in 1885 was $882.75, to Samuel Bell, of Philadelphia, and in the western district the greatest amount in 1885 was $177.35 to S. C. McCandless, of Pittsburgh. In the eastern district of Missouri the greatest amount paid in 1885 was to William Morgan of Saint Loius, $442.30, and in the western district of Missouri——

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator got the aggregate paid to all the commissioners in those different districts?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not the aggregate, but I have the amount paid to each one and it will be printed. I am only calling attention to the highest ones.

Mr. HOAR. But you have the amount of all?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; and it will be printed with this. In the western district of Missouri the largest amount paid in 1885 was $1,769.70, to McLain Jones, of Springfield, Mo. In Mississippi the largest amount paid to any commissioner in 1885 was $21.80, to John H. Kimmons, of Oxford, and the largest amount paid in the southern district of Mississippi in 1885 was $8.45, to Fred. Parsons, of Natchez.

In connection with that, I desire to read a letter I have just received from the First Comptroller in regard to certain affairs in Alabama:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 24, 1886.

SIR: I desire to further call your attention to the matter in reference to United States commissioners.

An account of a United States marshal has been laid before me, in which witnesses have been paid who appeared before a United States commissioner at Mobile, Ala. I find that on January 29 this year two witnesses were summoned to appear before him, and they charged, one 324 and the other 320 miles. On February 1, three days thereafter, they both charged the same sum. On February 2 one charges 207 and the other 205 miles. On January 17 one of them charges 324 miles, and on January 18, 252 miles. They both claim from a town named Claiborne, which I suppose to be their residence. But what I desire to call your attention to particularly is that there are two United States commissioners living not very far from where both these men were summoned, and where the offense charged was committed. The United States commissioner at Mobile, as I wrote to either you or Mr. EDMUNDS, receives five or six thousand dollars a year for his fees; and you need not wonder at this when persons are called from the most distant portions of the State to appear before him, although other United States commissioners are living close by.

You will observe that it is not alone the large amount paid to commissioners which is involved, but there is an enormous expense for the traveling expenses of witnesses who have to go so far to appear before these commissioners. The mileage of the witnesses in the cases above mentioned amount to nearly $20 apiece for each trip, whereas it would not have been half as much had they gone before a nearer commissioner. I simply give you this as an additional illustration of the excessive amounts paid by the Government, showing that the fees of these commissioners should be limited to $800 or $1,000. I am sure that you wish to be put into possession of all the facts possible in regard to this matter.

Very respectfully,

M. J. DURHAM.

Hon. FRANCIS M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to my friend from Missouri, whose general views about this matter I entirely concur in, that in respect of commissioners bringing the accused person and the witnesses a long distance, passing by other commissioners, to the injury of the public service, as it generally is, and to the worry and unnecessary discomfort of the person accused and everybody else, it may not be the fault of that particular commissioner. The commissioner under the law stands as a committing magistrate, on official information presented to him by the district attorney of the United States, who is the prosecuting attorney; and he has no authority to issue a warrant, so far as I know, upon any other ground than upon the application of the official authority; and if applied to, by the proper and formal information, by that district attorney he is bound by law to issue the warrant on that information for the arrest and bringing before him of the accused person.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just there let me ask does the law require that the accused shall be brought before the commissioner who issues the warrant rather than before the nearest commissioner to the place where the alleged criminal is arrested?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was just the next subject I was going to call attention to. That raises a question I was about to state. If the commissioner has the discretion to issue a warrant commanding the marshal to arrest me and take me before some other commissioner, in that case the commissioner ought to issue his warrant ordinarily directing the marshal to take me before a commissioner nearest conveniently to the place where I am supposed to be found. However, I confess that I do not know anything in the statutes of the United States which regulates this business, which authorizes one commissioner to issue a warrant for my arrest and direct the marshal not to bring me before him where the official information of the district attorney is filed, but before some other commissioner or magistrate; and I am very much afraid, if I were brought before some other commissioner or magistrate and were committed for trial that I should get out on a habeas corpus, and should be able to sue the marshal for a false imprisonment. I am very much afraid that that is the law. Whether it ought to be otherwise is another question.

But supposing it to be so, then if the district attorney of the United States does his business properly, when a complaint was made against him for counterfeiting, or distilling illicit whisky, or doing any other offense against the laws of the United States, he would cause the information to be filed before the commissioner most convenient to the place where the alleged culprit and the witnesses were, and then all this thing would be easily disposed of and without expense.

We have no difficulty of that kind in the region of country from which I come; nobody would think of carrying a man a great distance. I have reason to belive that in one of the States of this country where there is a good deal of this commissioner business from illicit whisky, and so on, where the judge of the court, who has the appointment and removal of the commissioners in his hands, has informed the commissioners that they must be extremely careful in respect of issuing these warrants, and must hold the district attorney, by reporting to the court, &c., up to a careful performance of his duties; and secondly, that the judge in that State has admonished the district attorney that his accounts will not be passed, and that he will be reported to the Department of Justice if he undertakes the business of carrying an accused man or the witness a long distance over the State to one commissioner rather than bring him before the nearest one, in order that the matter may be disposed of.

It is really a question of administration which between the President of the United States, the Attorney-General, and the judges of the courts can be perfectly well and economically and satisfactorily disposed of, except the question as to what the Supreme Court have decided about docket fees, which nobody in New England I suppose ever suspected would be a charge against the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont what power the President has in the matter?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The President has the power, as the general supervisor of the administration of the Government, in the first place, to select and nominate district attorneys who, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be appointed, who are so clearly fit for their places, so upright, so intelligent, so economical, and so just that they will see that every abuse of this kind continues no longer. The judges of the courts have the power to regulate it where abuses may occur, as I say has been done in one State, where it has been brought to the attention of a very just judge, and who is a Democrat, I am sorry to say; it is the only fault he has, so far as I know——

Mr. COCKRELL. A very commendable one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not a bad one with him. He having had his attention called to this business, has, I believe, removed two or three commissioners who have been in that sort of business, apparently cuddling with somebody to multiply business and get more fees, &c., and has admonished the new Democratic district attorney, his brother in the faith, that that sort of thing must not go on in that way any longer. It is really a question of administration.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Attorney-General would have authority to issue instructions to district attorneys to prefer their complaints to the commissioner residing nearest the place of the offense?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly. It is a mere matter of administration.

Mr. HOAR. I think there ought to be some regulation of this matter by law to secure improved administration, but I do not think the proper remedy is that suggested in the passage inserted by the House which is proposed to be stricken out.

I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that while I quite agree with him that there is call for new legislation, and also for more circumspect administration, I think that he will himself agree with me that this particular proposition of the House has much that is bad in it as well as much that is good.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, I know that.

Mr. HOAR. In the first place, in populous cities like Boston and New York it is desirable to have this important duty done by an experienced man rather than divided among a hundred men, who will all be of less experience. Take the case of Mr. Hallett, whose name has been mentioned here, I think; at any rate it has been mentioned in connection with this matter. He is a gentleman of great education and experience. He is the son of Mr. Benjamin F. Hallett, who is the grandfather of all the Democrats in our part of the country.

If you provide that no commissioner shall get more than $800 a year you have got this difficulty among others. Suppose there are ten cases and they go to one commissioner. He disposes of them all in a day. He can charge but one day's service for that work, whereas if they are divided among ten men, as they would be if nobody could get more than $800 a year, each of them will get a day for what one commissioner would do perhaps in half an hour or an hour in the morning. So it is quite obvious that the House enactment is not the road out of the difficulty.

It seems to me you might very properly have a limit put to the amount that the commissioner shall receive, enough to make a reasonable compensation, and then make some enactment which will cover the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Missouri, which is a very great one.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is force in what the Senator from Massachusetts says. If the portion recommended to be stricken out by the Senate committee were to be retained it would be proper, in my judgment, to except cities of a certain population; but as the committee have recommended striking out that clause I shall leave it just where it is. I wanted to get these facts before the country, because I believe, as the Senator from Vermont has said, that the judges and the district attorneys and the Attorney-General can correct most of these abuses.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Territorial courts in Utah," in section 1, after line 1443, to insert:

To enable the Attorney-General to pay a reasonable compensation to the assistants of the United States attorney in the Territory of Utah for services rendered in prosecuting offenses in that Territory (namely, Edward Critchlow, V. Bierbower, Charles W. Zane, and C. S. Varian), $2,300, or so much thereof as shall be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1450, to insert:

To reimburse W. H. Dickson, United States attorney, Territory of Utah, the sum paid by him as a reward for the apprehension of George Q. Cannon, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 1464, to insert:

To pay Edwin B. Smith for legal services rendered the Government in the case of the United States vs. Charles J. Guiteau, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

Judgments Court of Claims:
For payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims, as follows——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the Senator from Maine whether he desires to have all the judgments of the Court of Claims read in the succeeding pages?

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask that the reading of the text from line 1471, on page 60, to line 2250, on page 92, may be passed over. They are simply lists of judgments and amounts, and I ask that the reading be dispensed with. There are several little amendments in that part of the bill which we can go back to afterward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the reading will be dispensed with.

Mr. INGALLS. Have these items all been carefully examined by the committee?

Mr. HALE. They have been carefully examined by the committee, and also with the documents before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The verbal amendments referred to by the Senator from Maine in the part passed over will be stated in their order at this time.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims," in section 1, line 1512, after the word "Company," to insert "limited;" so as to read:

Curtis & Brown Manufacturing Company, limited, $46.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1606, to strike out the name "Pardue" and insert "Perdue;" so as to read:

A. J. Perdue, $1,524.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1623, to strike out "Cardoza" and insert "Cardozo;" so as to read:

Isaac N. Cardozo, $930.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1660, to strike out the name "Groynne" and insert "Gwynne;" so as to read:

Gwynne and Day, $678.64.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1753, to change the name "Dornett" to "Domett;" so as to read:

Domett and Nichols, $1,049.89.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1772, to change the name "Hemingway" to "Heminway;" so as to read:

A. G. Heminway & Co., $113.78.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1918, before the word

"cents," to strike out "ninety-eight" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

Worthy S. Streator, $561.08.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1954, to change the name "Girard" to "Giraud;" so as to read:

F. W. Giraud, $139.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1968, to change the name "Dullard" to "Dillard;" so as to read:

Alfred T. Dillard, $407.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 1986, to change the name "John G. Allen" to "John J. Allen;" so as to read:

John J. Allen, $6,962.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 2039, to change the name "G. A. Scroggs" to "Gustavus A. Scroggs;" so as to read:

Gustavus A. Scroggs, $282.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after the word "cents," at the end of line 2045, to insert:

John I. Brown & Sons, $445; John Bond, $72.27.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 2048, to increase the total amount of the appropriations "for payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims" from $83,228.12 to $683,744.49.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the following clause from line 2060 to line 2070, inclusive:

To pay Albert Grant for interest, at 5 per cent. per annum, on judgment of Court of Claims for $14,016.29, from January 17, 1870, the date the original transcript was filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, until paid, a sufficient sum to pay the same, the principal of the judgment having been appropriated by the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for 1884, and for other purposes, approved July 7, 1884.

Mr. FRYE. I hope that my colleague in charge of the bill will consent that the Senate may disagree to that amendment. I have known about this case ever since I entered Congress, and have been entirely familiar with it, having made myself two reports in relation to it, and my judgment is that Mr. Grant is entitled to this interest beyond any manner of question.

On a bill which I reported he was given leave to go the Court of Claims. He went to the court and recovered a judgment for $34,000; I do not give the odd figures. There was a clear, palable error made by the court of fourteen thousand and some odd dollars. He might have entered an appeal, but the United States itself entered an appeal. The appeal was withdrawn by the United States after the adjournment of that term of court. Thus Mr. Grant was left without any opportunity for review or appeal.

He then applied again to Congress and finally on a report made by me as a member of the Senate Committee on Claims he was authorized go to to the Court of Claims. Here I have the act of the 5th of January, 1883, by which he was thus authorized, and after giving him the authority to go the act itself says "that the judgment recovered shall be a part of the original judgment in the case recorded in the fifth Court of Claims Reports, page 80." The court investigated the case and determined that it did make a mistake of over $14,000, and accordingly entered up judgment as a part of the old judgment of some six or eight years prior.

The United States only offered to pay the $14,000 which had been made a part of that judgment, but the United States had paid 5 per cent. interest on the former judgment, and here the delay was entirely the fault of the United States and not of Mr. Grant.

I understand that the Senate Committee on Appropriations had an idea that he had slept on this claim, but on reference to the RECORD I find that in the Forty-second Congress I made a report on it, in the Forty-third Congress, Mr. BURROWS, in the Forty-fourth, Mr. FRYE, in the Forty-fifth, Mr. Ellsworth, in the Forty-sixth, Mr. Lindsey, in the Forty-seventh Ossian Ray, so that in every Congress there has been a favorable report made on this item.

The House committee in the last Congress inserted this item for Mr. Grant. It was stricken out on a point of order in the Senate, and therefore did not become a law. After full and careful consideration at this session of Congress the House Committee on Appropriations unanimously reported it, and it was inserted unanimously in the bill by the House without any division, and as I understand was stricken out by the Senate Committee on Appropriations upon the ground that Mr. Grant had been negligent himself. I have shown already that there has been no laches on his part. He is clearly under the law entitled to this sum.

The only reason why the United States declines to pay interest is because it is assumed that the United States is ready to pay its debts. That can not be assumed in this case, because it is a part of a judgment recovered away back in 1879, made a part of it by a law of Congress, and made a part of it by the court itself which gave the former judgment, and it was not the fault of Mr. Grant at all, but the fault of the United States in entering an appeal and afterward withdrawing it.

Mr. Grant is now an old man, stricken with paralysis, probably will not live long; it is a matter of almost life and death with him as he is situated; and I hope that under these circumstances my colleague will assent that the Senate may disagree to this amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine at what rate the interest is calculated.

Mr. FRYE. At 5 per cent.; the same as the interest on the other judgment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after line 2250, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War to pay to J. Volney Swetting, $1,173.25; to J. C. Burdick, $1,440.95; to John C. Thompson, $882.60; to George H. Buckstaff, $332.60; to E. M. Wadsworth, $255.15; and to George H. Read, $357.30, commissioners appointed under the authority of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin," for services in ascertaining and awarding the amount of damages by reason of the flowage of lands caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin; in all, $4,441.85.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Senate," in section 1, after line 2276, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to Mary C. Miller, widow of Hon. John F. Miller, late a Senator from the State of California, deceased, the amount of compensation as a Senator from March 9, 1886, to March 3, 1887, inclusive, $4,931.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2283, to insert:

For folding documents, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2285, to insert:

For furniture and repairs of furniture, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2287, to insert:

For horses and wagons, $1,253.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2289, to insert:

For horses and wagons, fiscal year 1885, $11.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2291, to insert:

For fuel for heating apparatus, fiscal year 1885, $20.77.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2294, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, $17,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2295, to insert:

To pay W. P. Canaday, Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate, for hire of horse and wagon for his use from December 19, 1883, to June 30, 1885, inclusive, at $600 per annum, $921.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2301, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to the following persons, namely: J. C. Witel, M. Rea, J. T. Johnson, P. P. Finigan, S. C. Wailes, Jed. Gittings, W. J. Johnson, V. B. Sharpe, E. T. Bynum, N. J. Coffin, Alex. Green, J. E. Clifford, C. F. Holbrook, R. L. Cooper, G. W. Price, J. H. Davis, J. W. Pettit, J. H. Houston, Asa Gardner, and J. W. Hayward, the sum of $9 each, being the amount due them for services rendered as special policemen on the 3d, 4th, and 5th days of March, 1885; in all, $180.

Mr. FRYE. I ask my colleague to consent, in line 2308, after the name of "Asa Gardner," to insert the name of "Asa P. Barker." He was employed on the special police for three days, and the Sergeant-at-Arms tells me in rendering the statement to the committee he accidentally omitted that name.

Mr. HALE. I knew that one name was omitted, and if my colleague knows that that was the name I consent to the insertion.

Mr. FRYE. I know that to be the name which was omitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2308 it is proposed to insert the name of "Asa P. Barker;" and in line 2311, after the words "in all" to strike out "$180" and insert "$189."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after line 2314, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Christopher Phillips for services rendered by him to the Senate, under employment of the Sergeant-at-Arms, from November 10 to December 1, 1884, in pursuance of the resolution of the Senate of March 3, 1885, $41.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2319, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Beverly Hudnell for services as laborer in the Senate from the 15th day of May to the 31st of July, 1884, $145.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2324, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay William M. Olin as clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs from the 16th day of December, 1885, to the 21st day of January, 1886, out of the appropriation for salaries of officers, clerks, messengers, and others, Senate, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 2322, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay for clerical and stenographic services and other expenses of the Joint Commission to Consider the Organizations of the Signal Service, Geological Survey, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, $1,828; the accounts for said services and expenses to be paid on vouchers audited and approved by the chairman of said joint commission, and to the persons who have rendered the services, notwithstanding section 1765 of the Revised Statutes, or section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, chapter 328.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "House of Representatives," in section 1, after line 2414, to insert:

To pay to the widow of the late Hon. William H. Cole the amount of salary and allowance for stationery for the unexpired term of his service as a member of the Forty-ninth Congress, $3,458.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 2420, after the name "Urban," to strike out "and;" after the name "Antz," at the end of the line, to insert "and Julia Schuetze;" in line 2421, to strike out the word "dependent" before the word "sisters;" and after the word "sisters" to insert "and only heirs;" so as to make the clause read:

To pay to Caroline Urban and Christine Antz and Julia Schuetze, sisters and only heirs of the late Hon. Michael Hahn, the amount of salary for the unexpired term of his service as a member of the Forty-ninth Congress, $4,974.41, to be paid in equal parts to said dependent sisters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 2426 the word "dependent" should also be stricken out, as the word is stricken out in line 2421.

Mr. HALE. Yes, that is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after line 2480, to insert:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay A. Vangender $300, for extra compensation as assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the present session of Congress.

Mr. HALE. The name should be changed in that item. It is "Vangeuder."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether amendments are in order now or whether the bill is being read under the usual custom, waiting until the bill is read through?

Mr. HALE. Amendments will be in order after we get through with the committee amendments.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 2, under the head of "claims allowed by the First Comptroller," in line 35, after the date "1883," to strike out the words "except the claims numbered forty-six thousand and fifty, forty-seven thousand three hundred and eighty-one, and forty-seven thousand four hundred and thirteen contained in said Executive Document number seventy, seventeen thousand one hundred and ninety-seven dollars and thirteen cents," and in lieu thereof to insert "thirty-nine thousand and twenty dollars and twenty-eight cents;" so as to make the clause read:

For refunding taxes illegally collected, prior to July 1, 1883, $39,020.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, to strike out the clause from line 168 to line 171, inclusive, as follows:

To pay fees of jurors and witnesses, United States courts, 1885 and prior years, when said claims are in the hands of said jurors and witnesses, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, under the head of "claims allowed by the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller," in line 496, after the word "years," to strike out "except the claim numbered 34-652 in said Executive Document No. 70, $6,358.84" and insert "$9,-278.84;" so as to make the clause read:

For regular supplies Quartermaster's Department, 1883 and prior years, $9,-278.84.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 506, after the word "years," to strike out "except the claims numbered 80737, 79968, 54216, and 80966, $13,413.29" and insert "$39,367.35;" so as to make the clause read:

For transportation of the Army and its supplies, 1883 and prior years, $39,-367.35.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, under the head of "Claims allowed by the Sixth Auditor," in line 619, after the word "eighty-nine," to insert the word "and;" in line 620, to strike out the words "sixty-eight hundred, and sixty-eight hundred and two;" in line 621, after the word "seventy," to strike out the words "four thousand eight hundred and sixty-three dollars and thirteen cents," and to insert the words "twenty-four thousand three hundred and forty dollars and ninety three cents;" so as to make the clause read.

Post-Office Department:

For deficiency in postal revenues, 1883 and prior years, except the claims numbered 6788, 6789, and 6799, contained in said Executive Document No. 70, $24,-340.93.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, under the head of "Claims allowed by the First Comptroller," in line 34, after the date "1883," to strike out the words "except the claims numbered forty-eight thousand one hundred and ninety-one, forty-eight thousand two hundred and eighty-one, and forty-eight thousand two hundred and eighty-two, contained in said Executive Document number seventy, two thousand nine hundred and ninety-six dollars and eighty-four cents," and insert "$10,-735.53;" so as to make the clause read:

For refunding taxes illegally collected, prior to July 1, 1883, $10,735.53.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Claims allowed by the Second Comptroller," in section 4, line 41, after the words "Executive Document number two hundred and ten," to strike out "except the claims numbered 4377 and 1308 enumerated therein, $59,-405.81," and insert "$107,994.29;" so as to make the clause read:

For the payment of the claims on account of transportation of the Army and its supplies certified as due by the Second Comptroller in Schedule A, pages 21 and 22, of said Executive Document No. 210, $107,994.29.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, after line 51, to insert:

For the payment of the claim on account of barracks and quarters, certified as due by the Second Comptroller in Schedule A, page 22, of said Executive Document No. 210, $18,430.56.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That for the payment of the following supplemental list of claims, which are fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 213, first session, Forty-ninth Congress, there is appropriated as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE THIRD AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

War Department:

For horses and other property lost in the military service prior to July 1, 1883, $14,343.26.

Compensation of postmasters readjusted under act of March 3, 1883:

For compensation of postmasters readjusted because of the act of March 3, 1883, and to pay the several amounts reported by the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department as due and unpaid, payable from deficiency in the postal revenue for 1883 and prior years, $380,209.46: Provided, That the method of reviewing and readjusting the salaries of postmasters and late postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, under the classification of the act of July 1, 1864, during the period between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, which has been practiced in the Post-Office Department under and since the act of March 3, 1883, entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866," by which all such reviews and readjustments have been made prospectively for the biennial periods provided for in the said act of July 1, 1864, upon the basis of the quarterly returns of postmasters during the preceding biennial periods, respectively, whenever the salary actually paid was 10 per cent. less in amount than such salary should have been if adjusted correctly upon such returns by computing what the commissions upon the same would have been under the act of June 22, 1854, and averaging the amount thereof annually, as directed by the act of July 1, 1864, for fixing salaries, is approved and ratified as a correct administration of the aforesaid act of March 3, 1883, and of all other acts applicable thereto; and that the several readjustments which have been made are ratified as a correct disposition of the several claims which have been considered and disposed of, and for which this appropriation is made; and the several persons to whom amounts have been respectively found due are declared the rightful persons entitled to the same, and such amounts to be the full sums due upon any and all such claims; and that all claims in excess thereof, and all other claims for readjustment which have been examined and found by the proper officers of the Post-Office Department not entitled to readjustment within such rule of administration, are disallowed and barred. That no claim for review or readjustment of any such salary shall be hereafter considered unless the same shall be presented to the Post-Office Department before the 1st day of January, 1887; and in considering all claims not yet readjusted the same method shall be pursued which is hereby approved; and any and every different method of readjutment of salaries of such postmasters and late postmasters during the period between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, than is herein approved, is hereby prohibited; and no action or suit shall be maintainable in any court against any officer of the United States by reason of his action in reviewing or refusing to review, or allowing or disallowing, any application for readjustment of any such salary: And provided further, That payment of all sums hereby appropriated shall be made by warrants or checks, as provided by the said act of March 3, 1883, payable to the order of and transmitted to the persons entitled respectively thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have certain amendments to offer from the Committee on Appropriations, which I will now take up in order. In section 1, line 220, after the word "eighteen hundred and eighty-three," the amount of the appropriation should be put in "$600, or so much thereof as may be necessary," so as to read:

To reimburse C. C. Andrews, late United States consul-general at Rio de Janeiro, amount expended by him for clerk-hire in excess of the amount allowed by law during the year ending September 1, 1883, $600, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. In section 1, line 382, after the word "cases," the rest of the clause should be stricken out and the amount appropriated, "$248,574.59," inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chair informs the Senator that that paragraph has been stricken out.

Mr. HALE. Then I ask that the vote be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the vote by which the paragraph was stricken out will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. Now instead of reappropriating it should appropriate the sum of $248,574.59, and I move to insert that after the word "cases," and then to strike out the rest of the paragraph, making a direct appropriation instead of a reappropriation, as we have done all through the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read as now proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For repayment to importers the excess of deposits for unascertained duties, or duties or other moneys paid under protest, including interest and costs in judgment cases, $248,574.59.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish the Senator would explain that appropriation and the necessity for it, and tell us why the committee came to its present conclusion on the subject.

Mr. HALE. The Secretary of the Treasury has written a letter stating the amount which would be needed to cover costs and receipts in these suits which have been brought where imposts have been exacted and are paid back upon judgments. The amounts of the judgments are paid out of the general fund, a permanent appropriation, and the Secretary now writes that this exact amount, $248,574.59, will be needed to cover cases for the last two or three years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine is agreed to, and the remainder of the paragraph is stricken out. The Chair hears no objection, and that amendment is made.

Mr. HALE. In section 1, after line 379, I move to insert:

To pay the amount found due Chester A. Arthur, late collector of customs for the district of New York, on account of expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, fiscal year 1879, $972.29.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. In section 1 I move to strike out the two clauses from line 433 to line 443, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine propose to reconsider the vote by which those clauses were inserted?

Mr. HALE. I do.

Mr. FRYE. What for?

Mr. HALE. The superintendent has telegraphed that they are not necessary.

Mr. FRYE. That is a good reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For the maintenance of the United States carp-ponds in Washington and elsewhere, and the distribution of the young fish, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884, $226.03.

For the maintenance of the vessels of the United States Fish Commission, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employés, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884, $178.78.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the vote by which these two amendments were agreed to will be reconsidered and the amendments will be disagreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. In section 1, the clause included in line 1230 down to and including line 1245 should be agreed to. The vote disagreeing to that paragraph should be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words which have been stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

For this amount to be paid to the Pottawatomie Indians, or expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, being the difference between the amount paid to said Indians in currency in the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867, and the sum due in coin, under their treaties of 1818 and 1829, as required to be ascertained by article 9 of their treaty of August 7, 1868, $49,382.08; but this provision shall not be held as precedent hereafter for the regulation or decision of any controversy between the Government of the United States and any parties whatsoever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the vote by which the amendment was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection. The question recurs, Will the Senate agree to the amendment striking out the paragraph?

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. On page 53, in section 1, after line 1279, I move to insert:

For preservation of collection 1883 and prior years, $149.16.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 57, in section 1, line 1388, after the date "1884," I move to insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

Fees of district attorneys: For payment of district attorneys and their assistants, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1884, $2,195.09.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 60, in section 1, lines 1465, 1466, and 1467 should be struck out. That provision is in another part of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clause proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out from line 1465 to line 1467, inclusive, as follows:

To pay Edwin B. Smith for legal services rendered the Government in the case of the United States vs. Charles J. Guiteau, $2,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This was reported as an amendment by the Committee on Appropriations and agreed to by the Senate. The Senator from Maine moves that the vote by which this amendment was agreed to be reconsidered and the amendment disagreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why should that be done?

Mr. HALE. It is in one of the schedules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the vote by which this amendment was adopted will be reconsidered and the amendment will be regarded as disagreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HALE. On page 95, after line 2345 of section 1, I move to insert:

For expense of draping the Capitol building on the occasion of the death of ex-President Grant, $624.25, one-half to be paid by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk suggests that the last amendment should be modified so as to read:

One-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. On page 149, after line 202 of section 5, I move to insert the following and I file to be printed in the RECORD the estimate of the Department:

Pay on account of mail transportation over non-subsidized railroads operated, leased, or controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, being a deficiency for the first three quarters of the present year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, as estimated for by the Secretary of the Treasury, in Executive Document No. 280, first session Forty-ninth Congress, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $626,714.57.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The document referred to will be printed in the RECORD if there be no objection.

The document is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 19, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, estimates of appropriations submitted by the Postmaster-General on account of mail transportation over non-subsidized railroads operated, leased, or controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company, amounting to $626,714.57.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 18, 1886.

SIR: I submit herewith for transmission to Congress additional deficiency estimates of appropriations required for the service for the first three-quarters of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, on account of mail transportation over non-subsidized railroads operated, leased, or controlled by the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. F. VILAS, Postmaster-General.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and prior years, by the Postmaster-General, out of the postal revenue.

WASHINGTON, July 21, 1886.

I have examined and compared the above statement of accounts pertaining to the Post-Office Department, and they agree with the books of this office.

D. McCONVILLE, Auditor.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on the Judiciary, through the chairman, submitted the following amendment; and, as he is not here, I offer it for him, it having been regularly examined by the Committee on Appropriations and approved by them. On page 52, after line 1265 of section 1, insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay H. L. Warren and N. C. Collier, attorneys at law, for services, under appointment of the court, in defending Nannock-qui, a Zuni Indian, charged with murder, at the May term, 1886, of the district court of the second judicial district of New Mexico, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I believe I am through. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has an amendment to offer from the committee.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. To come in on page 150, I offer an amendment, covering a list of claims audited and allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury to the soldiers of the late war for back pay, bounty, &c.; let it be a new section.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 7. That for the payment of the following supplemental list of claims transmitted to the Senate by the acting Secretary of the Treasury, July 26, 1886, in response to Senate resolution of July 23, 1886, being Senate Executive Document No. 218, there is appropriated as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE SECOND AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

War Department:

For pay of two and three year volunteers, 1871 and prior years, $52,628.61.

For bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs, 1871 and prior years, $38,204.69.

For bounty under act of July 28, 1866, 1880 and prior years, $8,846.59.

For pay, &c., of the Army, 1883 and prior years, $1,952.60.

For pay of volunteers (Mexican war), 1871 and prior years, $2.64.

For support of four companies of volunteers mustered at Camp Scott, Utah (act of June 12, 1858), $6.92.

For traveling expenses of First Michigan Cavalry prior to July 1, 1883 (act of July 28, 1866), $203.07.

For medical and hospital department, 1883 and prior years, $36.80.

Interior Department:

For pay of Indian agents, 1883 and prior years, $262.15.

For support of Klamaths and Modocs, 1883 and prior years, $281.97.

For traveling expenses of Indian inspectors, 1885, $60.53.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE FOURTH AUDITOR AND SECOND COMPTROLLER.

Navy Department:

For pay of the Navy prior to July 1, 1883, $12,874.40.

For pay miscellaneous, 1883 and prior years, $22.96.

For contingent Marine Corps, 1886, $82.25.

For contingent Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, 1883 and prior years, $12.

For enlistment bounties to seamen prior to July 1, 1883, $590.72.

For indemnity for lost clothing prior to July 1, 1883, $60.

For bounty for the destruction of enemy's vessels prior to July 1, 1883, $22.05.

For payments on account of clothing or bedding destroyed by order for sanitary purposes in preventing the spread of contagious diseases, 1886 and prior years, $13.98.

For payment of claims for difference between actual expenses and mileage allowed under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Graham vs. United States, $6,773.56.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment is offered in accordance with a report made by the Secretary of the Treasury to-day in response to a resolution of the Senate passed on Friday last calling for the list of these claims which have been audited and allowed and properly certified since the last report.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted on page 28, after line 668 of section 1:

For the rent of school buildings in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1887, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also offer the following amendment to follow the one just adopted:

That the sum appropriated for the erection of school buildings during the current fiscal year as appropriated for by the District appropriation act be increased to $75,000; and the sum of $25,000 additional is hereby appropriated for said purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a piece of very bad legislation to increase on a deficiency bill a regular yearly appropriation. It may be that it is necessary, but it would be very bad legislation indeed to put into a deficiency bill an increase of appropriation for carrying on the future work of the Government. I object to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection for one moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. There is an additional appropriation there of $25,000 to meet the increase. It is a very necessary thing. Some of the buildings which have been occupied by the public schools in the District of Columbia have recently been vacated by a judgment of the court, so that they must have a new appropriation. This provision was agreed to by the Committee on Appropriations to be inserted on the sundry civil bill, but by a mistake of my own it was omitted on Saturday night from that bill. It is so important, however, that it ought to go on some bill, and although it is a little irregular I think it ought to be inserted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw all objection under the circumstances.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. On page 50, after line 1208 of section 1, I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the Chippewa Indians residing upon Winnebagosish and Leech Lake Indian reservations in Minnesota, on account of damage heretofore sustained by them in consequence of the overflow of the land of their reservations by the erection of United States reservoir dam, the whole amount of such damage to be hereafter ascertained, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 99, after line 2426, of section 1:

To pay to the family of the late William Hunter the amount of salary as Assistant Secretary of State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer the following amendment to come in on page 101, after line 2490, at the end of section 1:

For payment of sixty-five printers regularly employed on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, $90 each, for time unemployed during the present session, $5,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. On behalf of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and in the absence of the chairman, I offer the following amendment to come in after line 1320, of section 1, on page 54:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the United States and Brazil Mail Steamship Company for carrying the United States mails during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, $36,000.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to have some explanation in regard to that matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The explanation is simply this: In the transportation of the mails by that company there was no special agreement made with reference to compensation to the company, who performed the service regularly and acceptably. The Department agrees that it should have this additional compensation over and above the amount that it would receive from the inland and ocean postage. It was considered fully and carefully by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and they agreed, I believe unanimously, that that sum was a fair and reasonable compensation for the service rendered by the company.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask to have the amendment read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I know the amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I have no question that some amount is due this steamship company for this service, but, as I understand, no amount has been agreed on between the company and the Post-Office Department. I may be mistaken, but my impression is that this is to pay them at the rate of 50 cents per mile run. It seems to me unwise to make an appropriation here until the proper amount is ascertained.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator is mistaken in regard to the amount. It is not placed on that basis at all, but after considering the character of the service, the expense of the service to the company, this sum was agreed upon as a lump sum, so to speak, as a fair compensation.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa has that amount been agreed upon by the Post-Office Department?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I did not mean to say that the Post-Office Department had agreed on that particular sum. In fact, the Post-Office Department has not committed itself exactly to a particular sum, but it was left to the consideration of the committee, and the committee, having investigated the subject carefully, concluded that this amount was a fair compensation.

Mr. GORMAN. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move after line 1356, of section 1, on page 56, to insert the following:

To enable the Attorney-General to cause to be prepared a digest of the opinions of the Attorneys-General from 1881 to the time of publishing the new edition of the digest of such opinions from 1789 to 1881, $300, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that under the resolution adopted this morning?

Mr. HOAR. It is. The amendment is subject to a point of order if anybody objects, but nobody, I am sure, will object after hearing an explanation.

We passed this morning a resolve to publish a new digest of the opinions of the Attorneys-General—not the opinions but the digest that comes down to 1881—and, of course, if we merely publish a new edition of the old book all the opinions in the years since 1881 will not be in it, and that book will be comparatively worthless. Accordingly the Senate adopted an amendment to the resolution this morning that there should be a digest of the opinions for these last five years; and it has been suggested to me that that would involve a small expense for preparing it in the Attorney-General's Office. This is only an appropriation of $300, and it will prevent the waste entirely of the matter.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope it will be agreed to. The resolution for printing that document was introduced by myself, and I think it is very important to have it printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 94, after line 2301 of section 1:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Charles B. Reade, clerk of the Committee on Rules of the Senate, for preparing, under resolutions of the Senate of July 1, 1884, February 28, 1885, and April 1, 1886, three editions of the Senate Manual, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the bottom of page 56, in section 1, after line 1373:

National Board of Health:

To pay outstanding liabilities contracted by the National Board of Health for rent, clerk-hire, messenger service, traveling expenses, and sundry contingent expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, $1,449.37.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. HALE. Is it regularly estimated for?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am informed by the Secretary of the board that it is regularly estimated for. The vouchers which I have in my possession are all certified to by the proper officers as being correct.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me, I think I can explain. In the appropriation bill of the session of 1884–'85 the House made an appropriation of a certain sum deemed to be necessary to pay the expenses of the National Board of Health up to the 1st of March, 1885, and also incorporated a clause in the bill repealing the act creating the board.

The bill came to the Senate in that form. The Senate increased the appropriation and struck out that part of the bill which repealed the act, but neglected to strike out that part of the act which limited the appropriation to the 1st of March. In consequence, the bill was so framed as to strike out the repealing clause and reduce the appropriation to the original amount appropriated by the House, being only sufficient to carry the board to the 1st of March, 1885. It left the board in existence, but with an appropriation not for the whole fiscal year. This is intended to cover that period from the 1st of March to the 30th of June, 1885, the end of the fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment on page 14, section 1, after the word "cents," in line 321, to add:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay William R. Beatty, of Denver, Colo., the sum of $585.84 for services as internal-revenue gauger for Colorado from August 1, 1872, to January 31, 1873, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HALE. Is that estimated for by the Department?

Mr. TELLER. It is, I think.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator has the estimate for it it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. This is for services rendered in the internal-revenue department in 1872 and 1873. The Treasury Department, through the head of the Department, sends up a stated account showing services rendered for each month and the amount, with a recommendation that it be accepted. I think that brings it within the rule. It was by a technicality that this young man was left without his money and through no fault of his. They say the services were properly rendered, and the claim should have been put in at the time.

Mr. HALE. Is there a letter from the head of the Department?

Mr. TELLER. The head of the Department says under date of July 22, 1886, and there are several letters before that, but this is the important one——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read at the desk that we may hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The letter will be read.

Mr. TELLER. There must be read with it the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, but let the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be read first.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 22, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, copy of report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, of the 20th instant, in the matter of the claim of William R. Beatty, late internal-revenue gauger for Colorado, for services as such gauger from August 1, 1872, to January 31, 1873, $585.84.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. HALE. Whether that paper is an estimate is a question that I will take the ruling of the Chair upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection——

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order. I said I was willing to take the ruling of the Chair as to whether the letter brings it within the rule.

Mr. TELLER. There is a detailed statement sent here by the Treasury Department of the amount they recognize as due him, in addition to that. It seems to me that is an estimate within the meaning of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will look at the letter.

Mr. TELLER. The Chair can hardly tell what that letter is without reading the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue accompanying it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, July 20, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the letter of Hon. H. M. TELLER, United States Senate, referred by you to this office for report, and the accompanying papers, relative to a proposed amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill authorizing payment to William R. Beatty, late internal-revenue gauger for Colorado, the sum of $585.84 for services as such gauger from August 1, 1872, to January 31, 1873.

The records of this office show that William R. Beatty was appointed internal-revenue gauger in June, 1871, but did not file a proper bond or take the oath as required by law and regulations, or receive a commission as gauger, until February 6, 1873.

Prior to August 1, 1872, gaugers were paid by the distillers or rectifiers for whom the gauging was done.

Since August, 1872, they have been paid by the United States, under provisions of the act of June 6, 1872.

Accounts for fees as gauger for the months of August, September, October, November, and December, 1872, and January, 1873, were filed in this office by Mr. Beatty, which were not paid, for the reason that as there was no evidence that he had filed the bond or taken the oath required by law prior to February 6, 1873, there was no authority of law for paying for services rendered prior to the date he was duly qualified to act as such officer. The amount of fees to which Mr. Beatty would have been entitled for services rendered during the period stated, if he had been duly qualified, was $585.84, as claimed, and as these services appear to have been faithfully rendered, this office would recommend favorable action on the claim as proposed.

Respectfully,

JOS. S. MILLER, Commissioner.

Hon. SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That seems to be a fair case.

Mr. TELLER. I think that brings it within the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment reported by a committee or offered by the Senator?

Mr. TELLER. It is offered by myself, not reported by a committee, but it comes with the indorsement of a stated account sent from the Department.

Mr. HALE. I think the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury sending to the Senate the communication just read is enough, and I shall not insist on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I offer an amendment to be inserted after line 613 of section 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary suggests that the place the Senator indicates is not the proper place for the amendment. The words proposed to be inserted will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To pay George F. Potter the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a clerk in the post-office from March 4, 1885, to April 5, 1886, $520.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It should come in under the head of Post-Office Department.

Mr. HALE. Is that estimated for?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir. On page 95——

Mr. HALE. I raise the point of order. That is not estimated for, nor is it to my knowledge reported as an amendment by any committee of the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Was it reported from any committee?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was not reported from a committee. An item of a similar character was inserted in last year's bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was this amendment reported by any standing or select committee of the Senate and sent to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It has not been reported by the Committee on Appropriations. That is what I regret. I thought perhaps they would have done that. I observe other items of a similar character in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the question of order is insisted on the Chair will be bound to rule that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. HALE. There are no such items on the bill that I know of. The committee has been very careful. Of course if a standing committee investigates one of these subjects and reports it with a favorable recommendation, the Committee on Appropriations sometimes puts it on.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What is this item in the bill?

To pay Maurice Ruddlesden the difference between the pay of a laborer, at $720 per annum, and that of a messenger, at the rate of $3.60 per day, from January 1 to June 30, 1886, $291.70.

Mr. MCMILLAN. On page 97.

Mr. HALE. That is for an employé of the House of Representatives. We do not deal with the House of Representatives at all.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Here is another item:

To pay Frank B. Gorman the difference between his pay as laborer and that of page from January 13, 1886, to June 30, 1886, inclusive, $97.50.

Mr. HALE. That is a House item.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1073 of section 1, on page 44:

For completing coaling-shed and buildings, Port Royal Harbor, $4,000.

Mr. HALE. Is that reported from a committee?

Mr. BUTLER. That amount has been estimated for in the Book of Estimates, on page 161. I introduced the amendment, and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore it is not amendable to any point of order.

Mr. HALE. Is it estimated as a deficiency?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know about that. I have a letter from Commodore Harmony, which explains the whole matter.

Mr. HALE. It clearly ought not to go on this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. This is as good a bill as any for it to go on.

Mr. HALE. This bill is for deficiencies for last year and prior years.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the letter which I send to the desk be read.

The Secretary read as follows.

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1886.

SIR: Referring to your conversation this morning, in accordance with your request, I have the honor to state that there is now on hand in this bureau unexpended about $4,000 of the appropriation for store-house and wharf at Port Royal, S. C.

The wharf is entirely completed and in use. Owing to the want of sufficient funds it has not been deemed advisable to commence work on the store-house until action is taken by Congress on the estimate submitted for $4,000 additional, with which and the money on hand a building can be erected to hold 1,200 tons of coal, sufficient quantity of general stores for the station, and a berthing room for the sailors employed there, and also a small house for the officer in charge. The building now occupied by him is an old structure, formerly occupied by negroes, and is in such dilapidated condition as to be almost uninhabitable. I beg that you will favor the bureau by having the above-named sum, namely, $4,000, for the purpose mentioned, added to the naval appropriation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. B. HARMONY,
Chief of Bureau.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER, United States Senate.

Mr. HALE. That ought to have gone on the naval appropriation bill or the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I got it too late for the naval appropriation bill. That bill had been reported. This is the first bill I could get it in on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. HALE. What has the Chair done with my point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not aware that the Senator raised a point of order. If he did he will state it.

Mr. HALE. This is not a deficiency and not proper for this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I insist that it is a deficiency. Commodore Harmony so states.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not prepared to decide whether an amendment is for a deficiency or for some other object. As a question of order the Chair will not rule it out on such ground as that.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Chair to the language of the bill which purports to be a bill to meet deficiencies for the fiscal year 1886 and prior years. If this money has been expended, of course it ought to go on this bill; but if it is to be expended for the next year I do not see how you can put it on this bill under the title of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a deficiency, and Commodore Harmony so states.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not prepared to decide as a question of order whether an amendment is or is not for a deficiency.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNA. I offer the following amendment, to come it on page 97, after line 2381 of section 1:

To pay Patrick V. Dolan the difference between the pay of a laborer at $720 per annum and that of a messenger at the rate of $3.60 per day from July 1, 1885, to January 1, 1886, $302.40.

Mr. HALE. I must make the point of order on that.

Mr. KENNA. I hope the Senator will not urge any point of order against this proposition. It is precisely in every feature a duplicate of clauses already agreed to; and if there is any employé of either House who should receive this reasonable and fair compensation for his services it is this man, and the mere fact that he may not have given that attention to it which involves an amendment being introduced and referred to the Committee on Appropriations it seems to me ought not to affect him injuriously.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair notifies the Senator that the question of order is not debatable.

Mr. KENNA. I appeal to the Senator from Maine to allow the amendment to be voted on.

Mr. HALE. There are a good many such cases, and I must make the point of order on all of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment reported by a committee?

Mr. KENNA. It is not. I offer the amendment, not on a report, but on its merits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not estimated for by a Department. The Chair is bound to hold that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. KENNA. I only know that it is precisely like the preceding clause which makes a discrimination in favor of Maurice Ruddlesden, and my impression is that Mr. Dolan is as much entitled to this as an honest debt as Mr. Ruddlesden.

Mr. HALE. The item the Senator refers to, that he says discriminates, is a House item, that under the courtesies between the two Houses we have little or nothing to do with; but there are no provisions in this bill providing for this increase of pay for employés of the Senate. There are scores of cases where men are appointed as laborers and then do the duties of messengers. They are very desirous of doing the duties of messengers; it is a little higher rank and place, and after a little while they come in and want the pay of messengers for the work they do. The committee has put none of those on.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to strike out from lines 649 to 651 of section 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 27, after line 648, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

For judicial expenses: For counsel fees in defending the District of Columbia against the claims of Samuel Strong in the courts, $1,000.

Mr. GORMAN. As I understand, there was no authority whatever to the District commissioners to employ extra counsel in this or any other case. Some $8,000 are paid annually to the legal officers of the District of Columbia, and there is nothing to show that there was any special necessity for this appropriation. I therefore move to strike it out.

Mr. HALE. This is a provision that came to us from the House of Representatives. The committee investigated it, as they did all of those portions of the bill that came from the House, and found that here was a case involving a very great amount of money that is and has been in controversy in the courts for years. The counsel employed by the District has heretofore been in the employment regularly of the District; he has left that employment, and has gone into the practice of his profession by himself, but the commissioners of the District and the attorney of the District, Mr. Riddle, declared that his knowledge of this case was such that it would be very bad management and bad husbandry to discontinue his employment, and therefore they recommended this appropriation, and the House put it in the bill. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, with the exception perhaps of the Senator from Maryland—I do not know whether any one else was with him—thought it was a proper item, and left it in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. On page 58, section 1, I move to strike out from line 1413 to line 1416 inclusive, as follows:

Provided, That for issuing any warrant or writ and for any other necessary service commissioners may be paid the same compensation as is allowed to clerks for like services, but they shall not be entitled to any docket-fees.

This bill contains some change of the fee bills, one of which the Senate Committee on Appropriations has discarded. I now move that this also be discarded, leaving the item to stand:

Fees of commissioners: For fees of commissioners, and justices of the peace acting as commissioners, $50,000.

Leaving the regulation of their fees undisburbed by the present appropriation. The docket-fees are not very important in the aggregate, but they are of some importance to the commissioners and to some that are not largely compensated for their services. The Department of Justice recently within some years required these commissioners to do what had not been exacted from them before; that is, to keep docket entries and docket records with the same regularity as of a court, and to make reports of them to the Department of Justice. This docket-fee then stands on the same footing for these commissioners that it would stand for the clerks. I ask that this clause may be stricken out because it does not properly belong to an appropriation bill, and on its merits it ought not to be retained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The occupant of the chair desires to have the amendment made on page 29, in relation to the increase of water supply of the District of Columbia, reserved for a separate vote.

Mr. HALE. Let that be reserved.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that amendment?

Mr. HALE. About the reservoir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there any other reservations desired by Senators? If not, the question will be taken on the amendments in gross with that exception.

The amendments not reserved were concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now we come to the reserved amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 686, after the words "submit to," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the words:

The board of engineers for fortifications and for river and harbor improvements whether any changes are demanded for reasons of safety or economy in the method of lining said tunnel heretofore adopted and pursued.

And inserted:

A board consisting of two expert civil engineers and two officers of the Corps of United States Engineers whether any and what changes are demanded for reasons of safety or economy in the entire system of the new water supply, including the reservoir and the method of constructing and lining said tunnel; and said board shall make full report thereon to the Secretary of War before such work shall be resumed.

So as to read:

To complete the reservoir, $160,000; to complete the tunnel, $395,000; in all, $555,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; but the Secretary of War is instructed forthwith, and before resuming work on said tunnel, to submit to a board consisting of two expert civilian engineers and two officers of the Corps of United States Engineers, &c.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). I have an amendment to the amendment which I should like to have adopted, and to which I hope there will be no dissent. I have shown it to the Senator in charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 696, after the word "war," it is proposed to strike out the words "before such work shall be resumed," and to insert, "but pending such examination the work shall proceed upon such parts thereof as the Secretary of War shall direct," so as to read:

And said board shall make full report thereon to the Secretary of War, but pending such examination the work shall proceed upon such parts thereof as the Secretary of War shall direct.

Mr. HALE. I think that is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think in line 685 the words "and before resuming work on said tunnel" should be stricken out, because the clause provides that the Secretary of War is instructed forthwith, &c. I move to strike out, after the word "forthwith," the words "and before resuming work on said tunnel."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate at 6 o'clock take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. BECK. Tell us why.

Mr. KENNA. For what reason?

Mr. ALLISON. For every purpose connected with the public business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To go on with work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that the Senate at 6 o'clock this evening take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and thirty-five minutes spent in executive session a recess was taken at 6 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m. in executive session, and after fifty minutes spent therein the doors were reopened.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the Calendar favorably reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of cases on the Calendar favorably reported from the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the first case of that kind on the Calendar will be stated.

ELIZABETH MILLER.

The bill (S. 2768) granting a pension to Elizabeth Miller was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Miller, dependent mother of Martin V. Miller, late acting second lieutenant of Company E, Seventieth New York Volunteers, at the rate allowed to dependent relatives of second lieutenants.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. That seems to have been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to have the report read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. CULLOM. This seems to have been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, according to the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. Therefore I should like to have the report read.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not see exactly how the Committee on Military Affairs got the control of a pension bill.

Tho PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the Committee on Military Affairs reported this as a pension case as the best way of disposing of a claim. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. CAMERON from the Committee on Military Affairs July 29, 1886, but before concluding was interrupted by Mr. GORMAN. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Pensions. It evidently ought to be referred for their report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

CATHERINE REISINGER.

The bill (H. R. 5950) granting a pension to Catherine Reisinger was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catherine Reisinger, widow of Martin Reisinger, late a private in Company B, Twenty-fifth Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JONATHAN S. LENTS.

The bill (H. R. 6425) granting a pension to Jonathan S. Lents was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jonathan S. Lents, late a private in Company K, One hundred and forty-third Regiment of Indiana Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JULIA DE QUINDRE.

The bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 4, after the word "at," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, at $25 per month, the name of Julia De Quindre, for services as nurse during the war of the rebellion, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MORRIS T. MANTOR.

The bill (S. 2686) granting a pension to Morris T. Mantor was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Morris T. Mantor, late a private in Company F, of the Eighteenth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARY M. GILLHAM.

The bill (H. R. 8374) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary M. Gillham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary M. Gillham, widow of James G. Gillham, late a private in Company I, Seventeenth Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIZZIE WRIGHT OWEN.

The bill (S. 2797) granting a pension to Lizzie Wright Owen was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lizzie Wright Owen, only surviving daughter of George Wright, late a brigadier-general of United States volunteers, at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There ought to be some explanation from the committee which reported these bills. We do not know anything about them unless we have the reports read. It is a very ungracious matter to object to pension bills unless we know something about them. I ask that the report be read in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR July 6, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2797) granting a pension to Lizzie Wright Owen, have considered the same, and report:

The claimant is the daughter of George Wright, late a brigadier-general of the United States volunteers. We append hereto the record of his distinguished military service furnished by the War Department, and a notice of his services and death which appeared at the time. Also a copy of her petition, which states the grounds of her present claim, and other documents in support thereof.

She is now poor, and her physician in this city presents a statement of her present condition, that she is suffering with attacks of disease, increasing in severity, which will soon entirely disable her.

It will be observed that the extraordinary services and misfortunes detailed in this case prevent its forming a precedent to any extent for other applications, and to refuse this application would in the opinion of your committee be an exhibition of ingratitude unworthy the Republic.

We recommend the passage of the bill.

To the honorable Committee on Pensions, United States Senate:

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to present my petition for a pension at the rate of $50 a month in recognition of the services of my father, the late General George Wright, United States Army, who after more than forty years' services lost his life while in pursuance of his official duty in traveling from California to Oregon on the steamer Brother Jonathan, which was lost July 30, 1865.

His wife, my mother, losing her life at the same time, no pension has ever accrued to any member of the family for my father's services, and at this date, I, his only daughter, find myself a widow entirely dependent on my own exertion for the support of myself and daughter, with a son still dependent upon me for assistance in placing him in life. My health, which has of late failed, may at any time unfit me for further exertions, and I pray that a consideration of these facts and furthermore that my husband served for eighteen years as an officer of the regular Army, but resigning a short time before his death deprived me of a pension on his account, and that my brother, the late Col. Thomas F. Wright, to whom I might have looked for assistances in my present circumstances, having been killed in the Modoc war, and no pension being drawn at the present time for his service, may have such weight with the honorable committee, as may induce you to grant my prayer.

LIZZIE WRIGHT OWEN.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL WRIGHT.

When a noble and brave soldier falls in the heat of battle, the sorrow that must be felt is in a measure assuaged by the fact that he periled life in a noble cause—the defense of the land of his birth and the institutions of his government. We are apt, however, when we learn the sudden taking from our midst of a faithful soldier, to lose sight of the great good he accomplished in his official career. But a few brief days and we chronicled the departure of Brig. Gen. George Wright, to take command of the new military district of Columbia. We little thought that it should be our duty to pen the notice of his death, for we have no reason to doubt that he, with the ill-fated passengers of the Brother Jonathan, has found a watery grave.

California and the Pacific coast may well put on sables, for one of the truest and best of men has been taken from among us. As a military chieftain, his record stands among the most distinguished of American generals. Not alone was he great in the field—where masterly ability characterized his every action—but his diplomatic tact, as evinced during the trying period of the past four years, enabled our people to enjoy the blessings of peace.

We owe everything to that conciliatory spirit which marked General Wright's military administration, and it must be remembered that although many could not look into the future with his foresight, the whole nation is indebted, in a very great measure, for the pacification of the turbulent spirit which at one time threatened to embroil us on the Pacific coast in the horrors of rebellion and civil war. When we look back and review the past, we can not but feel grateful to the wisdom and prudence which marked General Wright's career. Isolated as we were at the inception of the rebellion, almost wholly without defense, with a community of mixed and multiform opinions, liable to become excited, and when excited to do deeds of violence, which sober second thought would condemn, he steered the bark of nationality throughout the whole sea of troubles with discretion, foresight, and wisdom. At the time we speak of California did not appear as prominent as history has made her. The slightest difficulty—a rupture between the civil and military authorities—would have embroiled her in the horrors which beset our sister States. At this period our industry was an essential to the maintenance of our Government and our institutions. If we were not in actual strife, if the clang, clamor, and clash of conflict did not resound from San Diego to Fraser River, we know of no one but Brigadier-General Wright to whom the honor and credit is due.

Peace has its victories as well as war. In a peaceful capacity General Wright did his country great service. Had California proved recreant to her fidelity to the Union; had our mines ceased to pour their wealth into the national Treasury, who could depict the sad picture of our national dishonor? During General Wright's direction of the military department of this coast, no measure was left untried which could further, not alone our own interests, but the great and absorbing interests of the General Government. By his wise and conciliatory conduct he cemented the bonds of union and drove gaunt war and all its attendant horrors from our midst.

General Wright was a soldier, and had a record that any great and good man might feel proud of. His career in Mexico and in the various Indian campaigns in Oregon is well known. He was born in Vermont, and entered the Army as a second lieutenant of the Third Infantry in July, 1822. His rank in the regular Army was colonel of the Ninth Regiment of Infantry, and he was brevetted a brigadier-general of volunteers in 1861. He leaves a son in the service, a colonel, commanding the Sixth Regiment of California Volunteers, at the Presidio.

As an officer he won the respect and esteem of all; as a man he was kind and genial; as a citizen he filled all the various positions with credit to himself and the flag he served and so revered. His loss is a public calamity, yet the keen edge of sorrow is tempered when we all know that, covered with years and honors, he surrended life in the discharge of his duty.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, June 17, 1886.

Statement of the military service of George Wright, late of the United States Army, compiled from the records of this office.

He was a cadet at the United States Military Academy from September 14, 1818, to July 1, 1822, when graduated and appointed second lieutenant Third Infantry; promoted first lieutenant September 23, 1827, and captain October 30, 1836; transferred to Eighth Infantry July 7, 1838; promoted major Fourth Infantry January 1, 1848; lieutenant-colonel February 3, 1855; appointed colonel Ninth Infantry March 3, 1855, and brigadier-general United States Volunteers September 28, 1861.

He received the brevets of major March 15, 1842, "for meritorious conduct in zeal, energy, and perseverance in the war against the Florida Indians;" of lieutenant-colonel August 20, 1847, "for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, Mexico;" of colonel September 8, 1847 "for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battle of Molino del Rey, Mexico," and of brigadier-general December 19, 1864, "for long, faithful, and meritorious services.

He joined his regiment September 29, 1822, and served therewith at Fort Howard, Wis., to July, 1824; on recruiting service to May, 1826; with regiment at Fort Howard, Wis., to September, 1826; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to May, 1828; at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to May, 1829; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo. (regimental adjutant from February 1, 1831, to October 30, 1836), to September, 1831, and at Fort Jesup, La., to October 7, 1836; on leave to February, 1837; on recruiting service to October, 1838; with regiment at Madison Barracks, N. Y., to May 2, 1840; at Fort Winnebago, Wis., to June 22, 1840; near Fort Crawford, Wis., to July 8, 1840; at Madison Barracks, N. Y., to August, 1840; at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., to September 3, 1840, and in the operations against Seminole Indians in Florida to June 3, 1841; on leave to October, 1841; with regiment in Florida to April 26, 1844; on recruiting service to December 25, 1846, when he joined his regiment and served with it in the war with Mexico, being wounded September 8, 1847, at the battle of Molino del Rey. He commanded the regiment from September 20 to November 25, 1847, the second brigade, first division, army of Mexico, from November 25 to December 15, 1847, and the regiment to February 20, 1848; was on detached service in the city of Mexico to March, 1848; on sick-leave to June, 1848; mustering out volunteer troops to August, 1848; awaiting orders to November, 1848; commanded the post of Fort Ontario, N. Y., from November 13, 1848, to June 15, 1852; en route to California to August 19, 1852; on duty at Benicia Barracks, Cal., to September 17, 1852; was in command of Fort Reading and the northern district of California to May 19, 1855; commanded his regiment at Fort Monroe, Va., from July to December 15, 1855; en route to Washington Territory to January 22, 1856; he commanded the Columbia River district to June, 1857; Fort Dalles, Oreg., to July 17, 1858; the expedition against Cœur d'Alene and Spokane Indians to October 16, 1858; Fort Dalles, Oreg., to June 15, 1859; Fort Walla Walla, Wash. Ter., to June 29, 1860; the Department of Oregon from July 5, 1860, to September 13, 1861; the Department of the Pacific from October 20, 1861, to July 1, 1864, and the district of California to July 27, 1865. He was drowned July 30, 1865, in the wreck of the steamer Brother Jonathan, while on his way to Portland, Oreg., to assume command of the Department of the Columbia.

O. D. GREENE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

To the honorable the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions:

The undersigned respectfully beg leave to invite the attention of your honorable committee to the claim for pension presented by Mrs. L. W. Owen, the daughter of the late General George Wright, United States Army.

General Wright entered the military service as a commissioned officer, upon graduation from the Military Academy in 1822, and remained therein, continuously, until his death in 1865, which occurred at sea by the foundering of the steamer Brother Jonathan, between San Francisco and the Columbia River, General Wright being at the time en route to Portland, Oreg., to assume command of the Department of the Columbia.

General Wright's record of military service extended over a period of near half a century, covering three wars (Seminole, Mexican, and the rebellion), and unnumbered conflicts with hostile Indians, in all of which he was most highly distinguished and successful.

While serving in the junior grades his record was invariably characterized by zeal, energy, and brilliant acts of gallantry. In the higher grades, and especially as a general officer in command of the Department of the Pacific during the critical period of the late war, his services were of inestimable value, characterized by wisdom and ability, both as soldier and statesman, of the highest order.

His whole career was that of the gallant, noble, heroic, spotless man and soldier whose deeds and fame will ever be remembered and cherished in our service.

At the time of his death he was accompanied by his wife, who went down with him. His son was killed in the lava-beds during the Modoc war while gallantly leading his company.

We are informed that no claim for pension has heretofore been presented on account of the services of either father or son. Mrs. Owen, the only daughter, was widowed several years since and left with quite a family of children. By her own exertions she has hitherto reared, educated, and maintained her children most reputably and well; but now, with advancing years and failing health, she asks aid from a generous Government in her and their support.

We respectfully beg to hope her claim will receive your most favorable attention and consideration.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.
R. MACFEELY,
Commissary-General of Subsistence, Brigadier-General, U. S. Army.
J. C. KELTON,
Colonel, Assistant Adjutant-General.
JOHN NEWTON,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.
JOHN M. WILSON,
Lieutenant-Colonel Engineers, Colonel, U. S. Army.
JOHN G. PARKE,
Colonel of Engineers, Brevet Major-General.
S. V. BENET,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.
A. BAIRD,
Brigadier-General, Inspector-General.
O. D. GREENE,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Brevet Brigadier-General.
ROBT. N. SCOTT,
Lieutenant-Colonel Third United States Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALLIE B. BENT.

The bill (H. R. 6606) granting a pension to Sallie B. Bent was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sallie B. Bent, dependent mother of David P. Bent, late a private in Company G, Fourth Regiment Vermont Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH WARD.

The bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ward was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Ward, the dependent widow of General Durbin Ward, at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. PLATT. Let the report be read.

Mr. CAMDEN. Let us have the report read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR from the Committee on Pensions, July 6, 1886, but before concluding,

Mr. HALE. That is right; let it go. I hope the bill will pass without objection. The whole country knows about the case.

Mr. CAMDEN. I withdraw the call for the reading of the report. I did not understand the case. I see that it is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] to call for the reading of the report?

Mr. PLATT. I did call for the reading of the report, and I wish to record my vote against this case.

Several SENATORS. It is all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSHUA ARMSTRONG.

The bill (H. R. 2027) granting a pension to Joshua Armstrong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Joshua Armstrong, dependent father of John E. Armstrong, late of Company A, Seventh Regiment United States Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIA L. STRONG.

The bill (S. 2708) for the relief of Maria L. Strong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay out of the Navy pension fund, to Maria L. Strong, widow of the late Real-Admiral James H. Strong, of the United States Navy, $50 per month, during her widowhood, in lieu of her present pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANTONIA B. LYNCH.

The bill (H. R. 1630) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Capt. Dominick Lynch, United States Navy, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase the pension now allowed Mrs. Antonia B. Lynch, widow of the late Capt. Dominick Lynch, United States Navy, from twenty-five to forty dollars per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN E. ALGER.

The bill (S. 363) for the relief of Susan E. Alger was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan E. Alger, dependent mother of Warren A. Alger, late of Company D, Fifteenth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN F. BERKLEY.

The bill (S. 2311) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Berkley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Benjamin F. Berkley, formerly of Company C, Seventh Regiment Illinois Cavalry, at the rate of $24 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL FITZPATRICK.

The bill (S. 2803) granting a pension to Michael Fitzpatrick was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that a House bill of precisely similar character is upon the Calendar; and if there be no objection the House bill will be placed before the Senate instead of the Senate bill, and the Senate bill indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask that the House bill be considered.

The bill (H. R. 8963) granting a pension to Michael Fitzpatrick was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Michael Fitzpatrick, late a private in Company A, One hundred and fiftieth New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the bill (S. 2803) granting a pension to Michael Fitzpatrick be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS FOR DEAFNESS AND LOSS OF SIGHT.

The bill (S. 2818) to increase the rate of pension for deafness and loss of sight was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a general bill. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over. The next case will be stated.

MRS. ELIZABETH COLLINS.

The bill (H. R. 7728) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Collins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Elizabeth Collins, widow of William H. Collins, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment of Minnesota Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. LAURENCE.

The bill (H. R. 1617) for the relief of George H. Laurence was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of George H. Laurence, late a first lieutenant and brevet major of Company C, Second Regiment New York Mounted Rifles Volunteers, United States Army, to $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET D. MARCHAND.

The bill (S. 226) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchand was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLATT. I presume that it is not proposed to take that bill up to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is one of the bills vetoed by the President.

Mr. COCKRELL and Mr. HARRIS. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

THEODORE DUNMIRE.

The bill (H. R. 8057) for the relief of Theodore Dunmire was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Theodore Dunmire, late of Company E, First Regiment United States Veteran Engineers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS W. HALDEMAN.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that Order of Business 1695 may be taken up at this time. It is not absolutely a pension case, but it is so near it that I think the Senate will not object. It is a House bill.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read, for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks the unanimous consent of the Senate pending the present order to proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. 658) for the relief of Francis W. Haldeman, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It proposes to pay to Francis W. Haldeman, of Avoca, Iowa, $200, as compensation for services performed and money expended for the benefit of the United States during the late civil war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL SHEEP AND WOOL SHOW.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent to correct a mistake made in the passage of a printing resolution day before yesterday. The Senate, intending to concur with the House in the passage of a joint resolution, acted upon a copy, which was the original House resolution. The House passed an amended resolution, and that is what we intended to concur in. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate ordered to a third reading and passed the joint resolution (H. Res. 138) to print ten thousand copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show, held in Philadelphia in September, 1880.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to have the joint resolution passed. It is the one the Senate thought it was passing, and is the same thing precisely except in line 9 of the copy passed by the Senate the word "three" occurred before the word "thousand" in place of the word "one."

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the number for the Senate and for the House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That there be printed 10,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show, held in Philadelphia, Pa., in September, 1880; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of members of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture; the work to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut wish to have the copy which was passed recalled from the House?

Mr. HAWLEY. It has not been sent to the House. The clerks retained it here.

ARETUS N. BUTLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next pension bill on the Calendar will be proceeded with.

The bill (H. R. 7749) granting a pension to Aretus N. Butler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Aretus N. Butler, late a member of Company B of the Twenty-seventh Iowa Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. PARKS.

The bill (H. R. 7736) granting a pension to George W. Parks was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the rate of pension now allowed to George W. Parks, late a private in Company I, Seventh Regiment Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, from $30 per month to $45 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. H. BUCK.

The bill (H. R. 3118) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Buck was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of William H. H. Buck, late of Company G, First Vermont Cavalry, upon the pension-roll, at the rate of $12 per month, instead of $6 per month, as provided by act of Congress approved March 3, 1879.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL BULMAN.

The bill (H. R. 8977) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Samuel Bulman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-roll the name of Samuel Bulman, late a private in Company M, First Regiment New York Volunteer Artillery, as dependent father of Dewitt C. Bulman, late a private in Company B, Twenty-eighth New York Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR July 13, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8977) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Samuel Bulman, have examined the same, and report:

The facts of this case are briefly stated in the annexed report of the House committee, made during the present session, House Report No. 2551, which we adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill:

The claimant in this case was himself a private of Company M, First Regiment New York Artillery, and, as appears from the official discharge on file, enlisted September 4, 1862, and was discharged March 25, 1863, "for physical disability by reason of old age, no upper teeth, broken-down constitution, and improper enlistment."

The son, Dewitt C. Bulman, private Company B, Twenty-eighth New York Volunteers, was killed in battle at Cedar Mountain, August 9, 1862, as appears by the report from the Adjutant-General's Office.

It appears by the evidence on file in the Pension Office that the son contributed to the support of the claimant $50 per year for the four years prior to his enlistment, and sent home $40 while in the service.

The claimant was placed on the pension-roll July 8, 1869, as the dependent father of said soldier, at the rate of $8 per month, and in November, 1878, he made application for an additional pension for disability incurred while in the service of the United States. While said claim for additional pension was pending the claimant was dropped from the roll as dependent father on the ground that at the time of the death of his son the claimant was not dependent on him, for the reason that he himself was in the United States service as a soldier. The evidence from the Adjutant-General's Office, however, shows that the father enlisted about a month after the death of his son, who for four years had been contributing to his support, and these facts show that the Department was incorrect in its reasons for suspending and dropping him from the rolls.

The special examiner having charge of the examination on the application for additional pension, in his report of date September 16, 1885, finds against his claim for the additional pension, but says:

"The pension as dependent father is undoubtedly very meritorious, and I recommend its continuance."

The claimant is seventy years of age, has been stricken with paralysis, and is poor and dependent. His son, who had contributed to his support for years, was killed in battle. The claim is eminently meritorious, as a dependent father, and the committee recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported as a substitute for House bill 6531, by which the claimant is restored to the pension-roll as the dependent father of Dewitt C. Bulman, late private of Company B, Twenty-eighth New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. AURELIA C. RICHARDSON.

The bill (H. R. 1584) for the relief of Mrs. Aurelia C. Richardson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Aurelia C. Richardson, dependent mother of Albert H. Fillmore, late of Company F, Eleventh New York Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY ANN DOUGHERTY.

The bill (S. 2868) granting a pension to Mary Ann Dougherty was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary Ann Dougherty, at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMMA J. HALLOWAY.

The bill (H. R. 578) for the relief of Emma J. Halloway was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Emma J. Halloway, widow of Henry C. Halloway, late a captain and commissary of subsistence in the United States Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL July 20, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 578) for the relief of Emma J. Halloway, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The committee find upon examination that the papers in the case show the following statement of facts, as set forth in the report of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The claimant is the widow of Henry C. Halloway, who served during the entire war, for the first few months in the Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and later, by appointment of President Lincoln, as assistant commissary of subsistence, with the rank of captain.

The evidence of the late Commissioner of Pensions, Col. W. W. Dudley, is to the effect that he had known the soldier since boyhood, and was a comrade with him in aforesaid Nineteenth Indiana Regiment. He further says "that afterward the said Halloway was serving in the same army and part of the time in the same division with him; that his acquaintance was intimate and that he remembers well that at the battle of Gettysburg the said Halloway was seriously injured by being thrown from his horse, which was shot under him and fell upon him; that he was not an eye-witness to the accident, but that it was a matter of common report in the command in which he was then serving and where Halloway had many warm friends, and that this was known to him very soon after it happened, and that said Halloway was seriously injured in the chest by said accident. He says that Halloway was a stout, robust man when he entered the service, and that he so continued until the time of said accident; that he then complained of said injury and that his health failed him, and that he continued to grow worse, until his death, as said Dudley believes, was the result of said accident. A number of persons testify to the physical soundness of said Halloway prior and up to the time of his entering the army."

Dr. J. K. Bigelow, a member of the board of pension-examining surgeons of Indianapolis, testifies that he began to treat said Halloway in 1866 for lung trouble, and continued his treatment for ten years for that disease, and also for chronic diarrhea.

This officer appears, from the testimony of those who served with him, to have been conspicuous for his gallantry, and although serving on the staff of general officers, in a capacity where he was not required to go into a general engagement, he never lost an opportunity to act as aide-de-camp, and could always be seen in the thickest of the fight. While serving in the Nineteenth Indiana he was engaged in every skirmish and battle in which that regiment took part.

He never applied for a pension, because he said he did not need one. He has, however, left his widow without property, and she, having applied at the Pension Office, has met with a rejection of her claim upon the ground that the origin of his fatal disease in the service was not sufficiently proven.

This committee, after a careful review of the above case, feel justified in reversing the decision of the Pension Office, and without hesitation say that they believe that this officer died of an injury and disease contracted in the military service and in the line of his duty, and that his widow should be pensioned; and therefore report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANN KINNEY.

The bill (H. R. 5389) granting a pension to Ann Kinney was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ann Kinney, widow of Edward Kinney, late a private in Company E, Seventy-seventh Ohio Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER July 20, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5389) granting a pension to Ann Kinney, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant is the widow of Edward Kinney, who was pensioned at the rate of $18 per month. The Pension Office rejected her application on the statements, which were solicited, of two persons who, it is alleged, were prejudiced, and whose statements are positively contradicted by sworn evidence. The report of the House committee is adopted, and is as follows:

"Ann Kinney is the widow of Edward Kinney, who was a private in Company E, Seventy-seventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, who was upon the pension-rolls at $18 per month from 1862 until the time of his death, which occurred September 5, 1875. Mrs. Kinney filed her claim November 28, 1877, alleging that her husband died from the effects of his wounds received at the battle of Shiloh. The Pension Office disputed this fact and alleged that death ensued from the result of a drunken spree, as Kinney was said to have been addicted to the intemperate use of liquors, and for this reason the widow's claim was rejected.

"Only two witnesses are brought up to sustain this allegation—one of them the postmaster at Bellaire, Ohio, and the other the city marshal of the same place. These two persons were not even sworn when giving this testimony, and as both were persons who disliked Kinney, it is not probable they would say anything in his favor. On the other hand, a large amount of testimony, sworn to, was adduced by Mrs. Kinney to the effect that her husband was subject to epileptic fits, and that death ensued from congestion of the brain while in one of those fits. In view of these facts, and that the unsworn testimony of the persons stated seems to be all upon which the rejection of the claim was based, your committee recommend that the bill do pass."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HICKS.

The bill (H. R. 1681) for the relief of William Hicks was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of William Hicks, late of Company D, Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER ADAMS.

The bill (H. R. 7163) granting a pension to Peter Adams was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Peter Adams, late of Company D, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERASTUS W. KENNEDY.

The bill (H. R. 8046) granting a pension to Erastus W. Kennedy was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Erastus W. Kennedy, late a private in Company K, Ninth Regiment Michigan Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WARREN L. RICE.

The bill (H. R. 7517) for the relief of Warren L. Rice was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Warren L. Rice, late a private in Company F, Sixth Michigan Heavy Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES ROBINSON.

The bill (H. R. 7169) to grant a pension to James Robinson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Robinson, late of Company F, Fortieth Regiment United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUCINDA SAWYER.

The bill (H. R. 8333) granting a pension to Lucinda Sawyer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Lucinda Sawyer, stepmother of John Sawyer, late a private in Company C, Third Regiment Maine Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER July 20, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8333) granting a pension to Lucinda Sawyer, have examined the same, and report:

This is the claim of a dependent step-mother. The soldier, John Sawyer, died from wounds received in battle, and his dependent father received a pension until he died. There has been no application for pension, because a step-mother can only be pensioned by special act. The need and worthiness of this claimant is well described in the report of the House committee, which is adopted and is as follows:

"The petitioner is the step-mother of John Sawyer, a private of Company C, Third Regiment Maine Volunteers, who died from wound received in the first battle of Bull Run. The mother of soldier died while he was an infant. His father married the petitioner when John was about three years old, and she filled a mother's place in every particular from that time till the time of his death; in fact, she had the care of him almost from the time of his father's death. She reared him as her own child, nursed, clothed, and worked hard for him, for the family seem to have been poor.

"Leason Sawyer was pensioned as dependent father of the soldier. He died in 1879. The claimant was equally dependent with the father upon the pension for support, but, as a step-mother, can have no claim under the laws governing pensions. She is sixty-three years old, and in feeble health, with no means of support, having no money or property from which she derives any income.

"It is in the line of numerous precedents, and this committee think it is right that this woman, the only mother John Sawyer ever knew, who nursed him and reared him and sent him forth to die in the service of his country, is entitled to the same consideration she would receive as his natural mother.

"We therefore report the accompanying bill and recommend that it do pass."

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1886.

SIR: In response to your request for the papers in the case of Lucinda Sawyer, step-mother of John Sawyer, Company C, Third Maine Volunteers, I have the honor to state that the records and files of this office fail to show that a claim for pension by Mrs. Sawyer, or by any other person on account of the service of the above-named soldier, has ever been filed.

Very respectfully,

JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN I. MITCHELL,
Chairman Senate Committee on Pensions.

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES F. SALYERS.

The bill (H. R. 3948) granting a pension to James F. Salyers was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James F. Salyers, late a private in Company B, Eighteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM P. SHELTON.

The bill (H. R. 3851) granting a pension to William P. Shelton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of William P. Shelton, late of Company A, First Alabama Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB NIX.

The bill (H. R. 8334) granting a pension to Jacob Nix was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob Nix, who served as a captain in the Brown County (Minnesota) militia during the attack of Indians upon New Ulm, Minn., August, 1862, and grant him the pension as a captain.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER July 20, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8334) granting a pension to Jacob Nix, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant was pensioned by special act of Congress, at the rate of $6.66. A recent examination reports him totally disabled. The committee adopt the report of the House committee, which is as follows:

"Claimant was a captain of a company called out by the governor of the State of Minnesota during the Sioux Indian outbreak and massacre, 1862, when he was wounded in the hand and arm, and lost its use on account of said wound.

"The Legislature of the State of Minnesota passed the following resolution:

"'That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to obtain a special act of Congress granting a captain's pension to said Jacob Nix, or such other relief as his condition demands.

"'Approved February 2, 1881.'

"Claimant was granted a pension by act of Congress approved July 22, 1882, with the rank of captain, at the rate of one-third disability. In accordance with said act claimant is now drawing a pension of $6.66⅔ per month. Owing to the act referred to claimant is barred from the relief intended and can not be rated in accordance with his disability. The Mankato board of examining surgeons makes the following report:

"'The examination reveals the following conditions: A circular cicatrix, size of quarter of a dollar, on inner side of left arm, a little anteriorly and about 3 inches above internal condyle of humerus, said to be site of alleged gunshot wound; no exit wound, ball being removed some time after injury; arm and forearm atrophied, measuring 1 inch less than right; loss of left ring finger, it being amputated near metacarpo-phalangal joint; cicatrix adherent to bone and very tender; muscles of left hip, thigh, and leg much atrophied; knee joint enlarged, tender, and painful; is very lame. Claimant connects this condition with gunshot wound. Thinking it not our province to rate this injury we omit it, and rate for gunshot wound of left arm three-fourths of total; for loss of left ring finger one-fourth of total. We find the disabilities entitle him to a total rating.'

"Your committee recommend that House bill 6096 lie on the table and the accompanying substitute be adopted in lieu of said bill."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time and passed.

ELIZABETH S. DE KRAFFT.

The bill (S. 2730) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth S. De Krafft was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth S. De Krafft, widow of John Charles Philip De Krafft, late a commodore and rear-admiral in the United States Navy, at $50 per month, in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS S. DUVALL.

The bill (H. R. 887) granting a pension to Thomas S. Duvall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll the name of Thomas S. Duvall, late captain of Company A, Kentucky Home Guards.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR July 20, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 887) granting a pension to Thomas S. Duvall, have examined the same, and report:

Your committee have considered the facts in this case and adopt the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives made during the present session (House Report No. 2623), and recommend that the bill do pass.

Thomas S. Duvall was captain of Home Guard Company attached to Eighteenth Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, under command of Col. John J. Landrum; that on 17th July, 1862, and during an engagement in the battle of Cynthiana, Ky., he received a gunshot wound in left hand, resulting in amputation. He filed claim for pension June 16, 1882, which was rejected on the ground that no claim of a State militiaman or non-enlisted person, on account of disability from wounds or injury in battle with rebels or Indians while temporarily rendering service, shall be valid unless prosecuted to a successful issue prior to July 4, 1874.

Your committee has invariably recommended the passage of similar bills. This case is a very meritorious one. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALLY A. STONE.

The bill (H. R. 5041) granting a pension to Sally A. Stone was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sally A. Stone, dependent mother of Lieut. Col. Henry M. Stone, deceased, late of the Third New York Volunteer Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE M. LEE.

The bill (S. 2790) granting a pension to Catherine M. Lee was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine M. Lee, a volunteer nurse during the late war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN V. CURRY.

The bill (H. R. 9457) granting a pension to Martin V. Curry was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Martin V. Curry, late a private in Company G, First Regiment United States Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABEL MISHLER.

The bill (H. R. 2964) to restore to the pension-list the name of Abel Mishler, of Pennsylvania, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore to the pension-list the name of Abel Mishler, late a first lieutenant of Company H, One hundred and twenty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and quartermaster of that regiment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JONAS SCHOONOVER.

The bill (H. R. 8663) to increase the pension of Jonas Schoonover was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of Jonas Schoonover, late colonel of the Twenty-ninth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers (who is now on the pension-roll under certificate of invalid pensions numbered ——, at the rate of $30 per month), to $40 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

VETOED PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. The bills on the Calendar from Order of Business No. 1745 to 1760 inclusive, being bills which have been vetoed by the President, should be passed over.

Mr. SAWYER. That is just what I was going to suggest, that we pass over vetoed cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills referred to will be passed over.

THOMAS W. EGAN.

The bill (S. 2682) granting a pension to Thomas W. Eagan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment in line 7, after the word "month," to strike out "from the 29th day of September, 1864, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving," and insert "in lieu of any pension he is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas W. Egan, late colonel of the Fortieth Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $100 per month, in lieu of any pension he is now receiving.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read. The Chair understands it is quite a long report.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill go over then.

Mr. SAWYER. It is report No. 1534.

Mr. CULLOM. May I inquire what the case is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is for the relief of Thomas W. Egan.

Mr. SAWYER. The report is here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the report proper is not very long.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report, submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK from the Committee on Pensions July 20, 1886.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a very long report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the body of the report is not long.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unless there is some grave reason why this pension is put up to $100 I shall have to object.

Mr. SEWELL. I beg that the Senator from Missouri will not object to the case. It is a very peculiar one. I served with General Egan. He was one of the most gallant men in the Army of the Potomac. He is utterly and totally unfit to earn a living and has been for a number of years. He was wounded, I do not know how many times, but a great many. He was one of the most gallant men we had, always in the thickest of the fight, and he always managed to get wounded in almost every fight the Army was engaged in. I look upon it as a most meritorious case, one where you can not in view of the fact that he was a volunteer officer put him on the retired-list as you would an officer of the regular Army similarly situated, utterly unable to earn a living. I think the Senator ought not to object to that. The Senate ought to pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the reading proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is withdrawn.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought all objection was withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want the report read without the exhibits.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2682) granting a pension to Thomas W. Egan, have examined the same, and report as follows:

Thomas W. Egan was colonel of the Fortieth Regiment New York Volunteers; that he is now and has been since 1864 receiving a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

General Egan was a brave, faithful, and distinguished officer—distinguished for long, faithful, and valuable service. His long service was exceptionally brilliant, his many wounds were severe, his injury permanent, his pains and disabilities increasing, so that now and for many years his pension has been inadequate to his just claims.

In 1869 Dr. Potter says:

"Finds gunshot wound of right forearm, fracturing the ulna, from which several pieces of bone have exfoliated, and injuring both the ulna and radial nerve, causing loss of sensation in part of finger and impairing motions of forearm and hand; also a wound of right thigh, through its middle; also wound of thorax, 1 inch to left of spinal column. Disability total; permanent."

In 1873, an examining surgeon in New York city, Thomas Franklin, says:

"About 2½ inches of right ulna has been resected; hand is cold and clammy; complete anchylosis of the wrist joint."

In 1886, Dr. J. E. Dexter, late medical inspector Third Army Corps, states:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., June 23, 1886.

"I knew General Egan when he first entered the military service of the United States, being at that time the assistant surgeon of his regiment. He was then a man in the enjoyment of perfect health. None more active and enthusiastic. I well knew of his gallantry on the field. His record, as it appears in the War Department, does him but partial justice.

"General Egan is at present under my treatment, and I can state that his condition is unqualifiedly deplorable, requiring the regular attendance of another person, or a physician, all the result of wounds received and exposure incident to his military life.

"J. E. DEXTER, M. D.,
"Late Medical Inspector, Third Army Corps."

The following certificate of General Hancock was given January 30, 1869:

"Thomas W. Eagan was a colonel, brigadier-general, and brevet major-general in my command, and is, as I am informed, an applicant for an invalid pension; that he was honorably discharged January 15, 1866, by reason of his services being no longer required, he also tendering his resignation.

"And I further certify that the said Thomas W. Eagan was wounded June 16, 1864, near the Avery House, in front of Petersburg, Va., by being struck over the left kidney with a piece of shell, from the effect of which he fell from his horse and was carried from the field.

"He was also wounded November 14, 1864, on the picket line of my command in front of Petersburg, Va., being struck by a minie-ball, which passed through his right forearm. That at both of these times he was in the line of his duty commanding a brigade of my command. And that the said Thomas W. Egan was in perfectly good health and not suffering from any wound or disability when he entered the service."

The following is a brief statement of the military history and indorsements of General Egan:

"General Thomas W. Egan entered the service in April, 1861, as quartermaster of the "Constitution Guard," afterward known as the "Mozart Regiment" and "Fortieth New York Volunteers." The work of subsisting, clothing, arming, and equipping the regiment fell upon him. On its completion, June 14, 1861, he was commissioned and mustered in as lieutenant-colonel.

"He was in charge of the fatigue parties during the entire siege of Yorktown, Va., they averaging ten thousand men per day. Their supervision demanded constant personal risk and superhuman exertion. For several weeks he passed twenty hours per day in the trenches.

"The gross misconduct of the colonel at Fair Oaks, Va., on May 31, 1862, compelled Eagan to place him under arrest and assume command of the regiment. His (Eagan's) action was fully approved by his superiors, and his subsequent gallantry in the fight was conspicuous. He was commissioned and mustered in as colonel June 5, 1862, commanding the regiment in the battles of Robinson's Field, Savage Station, Charles City, Cross Roads, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Mine Run, Wilderness, and Ny River. He commanded the brigade in the battles of Spottsylvania Court-House, North Anna River (Taylor's Bridge), Cold Harbor, and Petersburg.

"He was wounded at Gettysburg and had two horses killed under him. Scorning to dismount under fire, he always rode into action, and lost eight horses in all.

"He was wounded again at Petersburg, June 16, 1864, and compelled to retire from the field for about two months. This wound was near the spine, and caused a progressive paralysis of the lower limbs.

"On September 3, 1864, he was promoted to brigadier-general. Secretary Stanton handed him his commission in person, accompanying it with passionate encomiums on his military services. He (Egan) was placed in command of the second brigade, second division, Second Army Corps, then in front of Petersburg. He pressed the siege works in his front with his accustomed vigor and address. At the battle of the Boydton Plank Road, October 27, 1864, he commanded the division, consisting of four brigades, with consummate skill and courage, saving the day and converting an impending disaster into a brilliant victory. He was brevetted major-general for his services on that day. He was to have had the full rank, but there was no vacancy.

"This was his last battle, for on November 14, 1864, he was almost fatally wounded in front of Petersburg. On his partial recovery in March, 1865, he was sent to the Shenandoah Valley at General Hancock's personal requests and commanded the provisional division, Army of the Shenandoah. The brigades were commanded by Generals McCook, McKibbin, Banning, Fisher, Raum, and others. The command was under marching orders for General Lee's rear when the news of his surrender and the assassination of the President arrived.

"Egan was held in service until January 15, 1866, the administration expecting a conflict with the Maximilian empire in Mexico, but Bazaine's departure averted the necessity, and Egan was honorably mustered out at his own request.

"He never went through an action without winning the unstinted praise of his superiors and the admiration of his associates and subordinates.

"A single company of his original regiment had forty men killed in battle. This proportion was not greater than that of the whole regiment.

"His gallantry was not greater than his humanity to the enemy, and his ungrudging kindness to such families as the fortunes of war threw within his lines was proverbial.

"His testimonials were written by such men as Lincoln, Stanton, Heintzelman, Sedgwick, Porter, McClellan, Pope, Hancock, Kearny, Birney, Sickles, Berry, Ward, Meade, Hooker, and Grant. Copies of some of them are appended.

THOMAS W. EGAN.

"His wounds have rendered his right arm useless, and partly paralyzed his lower limbs. For two years he has been under the constant care of nurses and physicians. His present pension is wholly insufficient for his support, and he is and always will be unfit for work of any kind."

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION ATLANTIC,
Philadelphia, June 29, 1866.

SIR: I take great pleasure in bearing testimony to the good conduct and meritorious services of General Egan whilst under my command in the Army of the Potomac. He was particularly distinguished for his gallantry at the battle of Hatcher's Run, October 27, 1864, where his good conduct was so conspicuous that at my urgent solicitation he was brevetted a major-general of volunteers.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. G. MEADE,
Maj. Gen., U. S. A.

To his Excellency ANDREW JOHNSON,
President United States.

General Egan served with the Army of the Potomac during all the time I was with it, and I believe from the beginning of the rebellion.

His military record is of the first order, he having risen by merit from lieutenant-colonel to brigadier and brevet major-general during the war.

JULY 24, 1866.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD DIVISION, SECOND CORPS, July 8, 1864.

COLONEL: I have the honor to state, in reply to circular from headquarters Second Army Corps of this date, that I have no recommendation to make, except in the case of Col. Thomas W. Egan, Fortieth New York Volunteers, whom I have already recommended for his gallant conduct, throughout this campaign, particularly at the Wilderness, Spottsylvania, Nortn Anna, and before Petersburg.

Colonel Egan was first brought to my attention at the battle of Fair Oaks. On that occasion I sent for his regiment—Fortieth New York, of which he was lieutenant-colonel—to come to the front. The colonel (Riley) hesitated. Egan, pronouncing him drunk, placed him in close arrest, took command, and reported with his regiment.

At the battles of Glendale, Malvern, and Bull Run his conduct elicited the strongest commendations of myself (his brigadier commander) and of Major-General Kearny, the division commander. In the three battles his conduct was the most distinguished. At the battle of Chantilly, upon the rout of Stevens's division, his regiment (Fortieth New York) under his command held the enemy in check until our line could be re-established, and received my highest praise.

During the battle of Chancellorsville, upon the misbehavior of Colonel ——, Egan was placed in command specially of First Brigade (First Division, Third Corps), and again received the warmest encomiums on his energy and gallantry.

At Gettysburg, when the enemy was pressing Ward's brigade, who reported himself in the last extremities, I sent Egan to charge with the Fortieth. He led his regiment, and succeeded in repulsing three times his number in a bona fide bayonet charge. My staff officer (Capt. James C. Briscoe) reported it to me as the most brilliant affair of the day.

At Kelly's Ford, November 9, 1863, I selected Egan's regiment to storm the enemy's rifle-pits by wading the river. He was entirely successful.

At Paynes's farm, November 27, 1863, in the engagement of the Third Corps, his regiment received my warmest thanks.

During the winter of 1863, under his personal attention, his regiment was not surpassed in its discipline, complete equipment, and soldierly bearing.

On the 5th and 6th of May, 1864, at the Wilderness, his conduct was admirable, and he was selected to command the rear guard, which he did with great address.

On the 12th of May (Spottsylvania) he commanded the brigade, and during that day and all of this campaign, until he was wounded in storming the enemy's works at Petersburg, his conduct met my warmest approval. I was always sure of a warm and hearty co-operation from him.

I have frequently recommended him for promotion. He is one of the oldest colonels in the volunteer service, and his term has expired. He has ever been an active, "healthy," gallant soldier—always at the head of his command.

I earnestly recommend his promotion, to date from the storming of the enemy's works at Taylor's bridge, North Anna River, May 26, 1864.

I have no one in my command who has so well earned promotion. The gallantry and providential escapes of this officer are proverbial in my division. I trust that this officer will be promoted and assigned to my command.

I am, colonel, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

D. B. BIRNEY,
Major-General Volunteers.

Lieut. Col. F. A. WALKER,
Assistant Adjutant-General Second Army Corps:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
City Point, Va., July 22, 1863.

Respectfully forwarded approved, with the remark that the officer herein recommended is worthy, meritorious, and deserving of promotion, or to fill any vacancy that may exist.

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General, &c.

[President Lincoln's indorsement.]

This is a very meritorious case for appointment, which should be made at the earliest opportunity.

A. LINCOLN.

AUGUST 20, 1863.

Extracts from reports of battles and operations in which General Hancock gave General Egan honorable mention.

[Second epoch—Wilderness.]

A strong picket line, under command of Colonel (now Brevet Major-General) Thomas W. Egan, Fortieth New York Volunteers, remained out in front of our line of battle, along the Brock road, to cover the departure of my troops from that position.

[Third epoch—North Anna.]

Egan's brigade, led gallantly by its commander, charged over an open field, several hundred yards in breadth, which ascended sharply towards the enemy's position, carrying the intrenchments, and driving the enemy pell-mell across the stream, with considerable loss to them. I have seldom witnessed such gallantry and spirit as the brigade of Egan displayed in the assault upon the enemy's works which covered the wooden bridge over the North Anna.

[Fifth epoch—Petersburg.]

During this first advance on the morning of the 16th, Egan's brigade of Birney's division made a spirited attack upon the enemy, who held a small redoubt on Birney's left, which was carried by Egan in his usual intrepid manner. * * * The following officer is entitled to my thanks for his distinguished and valuable services: Colonel Egan, commanding First Brigade, Third Division, Second Corps.

[Boydton Road.—Hatcher's Run, October 27, 1864.]

* * * The march was somewhat delayed by obstructions in the road, but the head of Egan's column reached Hatcher's Run very soon after daylight, and Egan at once made his arrangements to force the crossing. The enemy were posted in a rifle-pit on the opposite bank. The approaches were difficult, trees having been filled in the stream, which was waist deep, above and below the ford.

Smythe's brigade was deployed in the first line, and went forward in gallant style, carrying the works with a loss of about fifty, including Lieutenant-Colonel Spalter, Fourth Ohio, killed. Egan then moved by the nearest road to Dabney's Mill.

Here the enemy, under A. P. Hill, charged heavily, forcing their way between Egan's division and Mott's, and capturing a section of Metcalf's battery. Egan formed his men into an irregular square, covering one front with a heavy skirmish line. He was now entirely isolated, but causing the brigade forming the front nearest Mott to face by the rear rank, and execute a "left wheel," he closed the gap and cut off a large body of the enemy.

At the first sound of this attack I sent Major (now Brigadier-General) Mitchell, my senior aid, to General Egan, with orders to desist from his own assault and to face his command to the rear and attack the enemy with his whole command. When Major Mitchell reached General Egan, he found that the general, with the instinct of a true soldier, was already in motion to attack the force in his rear.

General Egan had perhaps an unusual opportunity for distinguishing himself and he availed himself of it to the utmost, materially to our success. He has been recommended for the appointment of brevet major-general of volunteers for his distinguished service and marked gallantry on this occasion. * * *

W. S. HANCOCK,
Major-General, Commanding Second Corps.

[Hatcher's Run.—Meade.]

* * * I have no hesitation in attributing our success and freedom from disaster to the personal exertions of Major-General Hancock and the conspicuous galantry of Brigadier-General Egan.

GEO. G. MEADE, Major-General, U. S. A.

[Fair Oaks.—General Ward.]

* * * I can not find words to express my admiration of the conduct of both officers and men in the discharge of their several duties. I would beg leave to mention as having conspicuously distinguished himself Col. Thomas W. Egan, Fortieth New York Volunteers. Colonel Egan was "superb." * * *

J. H. HOBART WARD,
Brigadier-General.

[Robinson's Field, June 25, 1862.—General Birney.]

I take pleasure in speaking of the high state of discipline manifested by the Fortieth New York Volunteers, Colonel Egan. * * *

D. B. BIRNEY, Brigadier-General.

[Williamsburg.—General Birney.]

* * * The left wing of the Fortieth New York was sent to take the enemy in the rear. The right wing marched steadily in the front and drove the enemy, after a furious contest, from the woods. The Fortieth behaved nobly, and maintained their position.

[Extract from letter of General Porter.—Yorktown.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 16, 1862.

I take great pleasure in bearing testimony to the energy, ability, and excellent judgment of Colonel Egan, Fortieth New York Volunteers, as exhibited by him while under my direction during the siege of Yorktown. He always foresaw what was required and did it without prompting. By his exertions the preparations for the opening of the siege batteries were hastened and prepared.

F. J. PORTER, Major-General.

["Seven Days' Battle."—General Birney.]

* * * On the 1st of July, at Malvern Hill, my brigade was again ordered to the front to meet the advancing enemy. This was done in good order, with full ranks and determined spirits. We held the front line during a furious cannonade and intrenched our whole front under fire. We held the position until 2 a. m. July 2 (having been exposed to nine hours' cannonade unsheltered), and then marched to Harrison's Landing.

[Second Bull Run.—Kearny.]

* * * The Fortieth New York Volunteers, under the brave Colonel Egan suffered the most.

P. KEARNY, Major-General.

[Chantilly.—Birney.]

* * * I immediately ordered forward the Fortieth New York Regiment, and it gallantly advanced, and was soon in active conflict. This regiment held the enemy, and sustained unflinchingly the most murderous fire from a superior force.

D. B. BIRNEY.
Brigadier-General, Commanding Division.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD BRIGADE,
FIRST DIVISION, THIRD CORPS,
Camp near Falmouth, Va., November 24, 1862.

SIR: The friends of Colonel Egan, of the Fortieth New York Volunteers, have applied to me for a letter recommending that officer as a proper person for promotion. I have known Colonel Egan for a year or more. He was always regarded as a most devoted officer. He acted with great gallantry at Williamsburg and Fair Oaks, after which he was made a full colonel. He led his regiment at Fair Oaks, where it did most gallant service. At the "Orchards," Glendale, and Malvern Hill his conduct was no less conspicuous. Under General Pope he did good service, particularly at Chantilly. General Kearny regarded Colonel Egan as one of his best fighting colonels, and as one of his most reliable officers. I do not know of a more gallant officer than Colonel Egan, and no one that I would more like to have in my command, were it admissible.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. G. BERRY,
Brigadier-General Volunteers.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN,
President of the United States.

[General Heintzelman's indorsement and others.]

HEADQUARTERS DEFENSES OF WASHINGTON, December 13, 1862.

The Fortieth New York is one of the most distinguished regiments I have had under my command. Colonel Egan was with it in all the battles, and has always conducted himself with great gallantry and good judgment, and I cheerfully recommend him to the favorable consideration of the President.

S. P. HEINTZELMAN, Major-General.

Colonel Egan was under my command as colonel of Fortieth New York Volunteers for six months. I always regarded him as a faithful, gallant officer, always doing his duty with zeal and ability.

JOHN SEDGWICK,
Major-General Volunteers.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 24, 1862.

I most cordially and heartily indorse the within recommendation. The Fortieth New York belonged to the division of the late lamented Kearny, and rendered the most distinguished and gallant service under my command in the battles at Bull Run and Chantilly. Colonel Egan was regarded by General Kearny as one of his most distinguished and capable officers, and he deserves and should receive promotion.

I most earnestly present his claims to the Government. It will be well for the interests of the Government, as well as a proper tribute of gratitude from the Government, that Colonel Egan should be appointed brigadier-general.

JOHN POPE, Major-General.

I cheerfully concur in all that is said of Colonel Egan by this commanding general, and desire that he be promoted.

JOSEPH HOOKER,
Major-General Commanding.

[Chancellorsville—Birney.]

COLONEL: * * * Among the colonels under my immediate eye in the movement, Col. Thomas W Egan was distinguished for his energy, dash, and enthusiasm. I would call the attention of the major-general commanding the corps to this officer, and would recommend his promotion. * * *

I am, your obedient servant,

D. B. BIRNEY,
Brigadier-General Commanding Division.

Lieut. Col. O. H. HART,
Assistant Adjutant-General, Third Corps.

[Chancellorsville—Sickles.]

I commend to the particular notice of the general-in-chief the high praise bestowed by General Birney upon Col. Thomes W. Egan (Fortieth New York) for the energy and dash which he threw into this attack. All our guns and caissons and a portion of Whipple's mule train were recovered, besides two pieces of the enemy's artillery and three caissons captured.

D. E. SICKLES, Major-General Volunteers.

[Gettysburg—Ward.]

* * * The valuable services rendered by Col. T. W. Egan and his noble regiment (Fortieth New York) at an opportune moment can not be overestimated. Their steadiness and valor were not unknown to me, I having commanded them on other occasions. They came to me at the right time, and well did they perform their duty.

J. H. HOBART WARD, Brigadier-General.

[Gettysburg.—Birney.]

* * * The Fortieth New York, Col. Thomas W. Egan, was sent by me to strengthen Ward's line, and, led by its gallant colonel, charged the enemy and drove him back from his advanced point. * * *

D. B. BIRNEY,
Major-General, Commanding First Division, Third Corps.

[Second Bull Run.—Robinson.]

* * * General Birney turned over to me his Fortieth New York Regiment. These troops were deployed to the right and left of the railroad, and pushed forward. Our men now gained steadily on the enemy, and drove him before them until he brought up fresh masses of troops. Then, with ammunition nearly expended, we withdrew to our second position. Our loss was severe, embracing some of our best officers.

My thanks are due to Col. Thomas W. Egan, Fortieth New York Volunteers, for valuable services.

JOHN C. ROBINSON,
Brigadier-General Volunteers.

[Orange Grove and Kelly's Ford, November, 1863.—Birney.]

* * * General Carr now reporting his center hard pressed, I moved forward the Third Brigade (Egan), and relieved his center line. They were driven back, and the ridge firmly held by Egan. Before daylight on the 30th November, I received orders from General French to be prepared to assault the enemy in my front, crossing Mine Run.

* * * * * * *

The Third Brigade (Egan) was most hotly engaged, and acquitted itself most gallantly. Colonel Egan exhibited much skill in handling the troops.

D. B. BIRNEY,
Major-General Volunteers.

[Mahone's report.—Extract.]

The most prominent action in which Mahone was to emulate the thunderbolt was at Hatcher's Run, on the 27th of October, 1864, when Grant operated to turn Lee's extreme right in order to gain possession of the South Side Railroad. The main movement was intrusted to the Second Corps, Hancock's; subsequently the Second was supported by the Fifth, Warren's. The latter was ordered up to form a connection between Hancock's right and the left of the Ninth (Parke's), who was to engage the attention of the rebel troops in the front while Hancock was making the turning maneuver.

Hatcher's Run is a marshy stream, flowing from east to west through thick forests and dense underbush. Its headwaters are near Zion and Corinth churches, on the South Side Railroad, about 15 miles east-southeast of Petersburg, and it struck the extreme left of the Union lines near Armstrong's, on the Duncan road (Grant's map), about 7 miles of the "Cockade City."

It would be difficult to conceive a more ugly country to operate in. Our maps were defective; brigades and regiments went astray; staff officers sent to disentangle the "Toho Bohn" became lost themselves in the maze; a driving rain and fog made bad worse; night came on, and thus, in an unknown region, "darkness which could be felt" converted the termination of this military movement into a literal groping in the dark. This was one of our disasters, and had Mahone been adequately supported it is impossible to estimate what might have been the extent of our losses. On our side it was redeemed by General Egan, commanding Gibbon's division of the Second Corps. Mahone pays the highest compliments to the ability and intrepidity displayed. Praise from such a man is indeed praise, and Egan deserved it.

While Heth was to head us off at the bridge, at the Burgess Mill Dam, and attack vigorously, and Hampton was to harass us, Mahone, as usual, made a turning march through the woods, and, after a detour, formed his line in their edge, charged across an open field, and struck Egan on the right flank. Egan's division, which was posted on a clearing south of the run, with his guns on an elevation to the left of the Boydton road, made a conversion, wheeled around his guns, and gave Mahone such a stunning reception as finally, after a hard fight, drove him back to the shelter of the forest.

Mahone says the scene was beautiful in the dimness of the mist, and the thickening darkness through which the blaze of the musketry shone like lightning against a black cloud. While he was performing according to his wont, he appears to confine his praise to that officer, Hampton, who did his part well. There seems to have been as little co-operation in our own Army, and the glory of this involved engagement belongs to Egan and Mahone. Our losses were great, the result a failure, and this, as on so many other occasions, was due to that little man whose name is hardly known in the North, and yet was one of our most dangerous and indomitable adversaries. He realized the idea of the "hornet" of the Scripture in the spitefulness and persistency of his attacks. He was a perfect military yellow-jacket wasp.

Historical Magazine, January to June, 1870.
Vol. VII, 2d Series, 17, Rebellion Record.

CITY POINT, October 23, 1864.

To E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War:

The attack on General Hancock, now that a report has been received, proves to be a decided success. He repulsed the enemy and remained in his position, holding possession of the field until midnight, when he commenced withdrawing. Orders had been given for the withdrawal of the Second Corps before the attack was made. We lost no prisoners except the usual stragglers, who are always picked up. Our captures for the day on the South Side, 910.

The rebel General Dering is reported killed.

General Meade in his report says: "I am induced to believe the success of the operation, which was most decided, was mainly due to the personal exertions of Major-General Hancock, and the conspicuous gallantry of Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Egan."

U. S. GRANT, Lieutenant-General.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I regret my condition is such at this time as to be totally unfit for the task I have undertaken. My mind will not obey my wish, and it is very difficult for me to connect two words; still I feel very anxious to say something in your favor where so much is due. I, who was an eye-witness of your conduct on that memorable day, surely ought to be able to say something, but in truth I am not the man to do it justice even at my best. One thing I have kept in view, namely, a strict regard for truth. I have not gone beyond the mark. Much more might be said without infringing on the truth, but if I were to write as I think and feel it would sound like a romance.

Yours, in haste,

J. G. SMITH.

Stray shots from Gettysburg.

The closing conflict of the Fortieth New York Volunteer Regiment and Fourth New York Independent Battery at "Devil's Den." * * *

We had been swept from the crest of "Devil's Den," leaving three of our guns behind, and had opened with the remaining three from a position about 75 yards nearer Little Round Top. Our fire was directed at the enemy there stationed at or near Plum Run Gorge. We were trying to keep up the character of a fight, hoping for help, and fearing the enemy were about to charge us, in which event our weakness would be discovered, and then our bold front would avail us nothing. All that men could do the artillerists of the battery were doing. If the enemy would stand off and fight us the battle would last as long as there was a man left to load a gun, but when it came to a charge we must fall back or yield. During this critical moment the fate of the Round Top hung in the balance; five minutes more and the battery must retire or fall into the enemy's hands. The Round Tops were still defenseless. General Warner, who had gone in search of troops for the purpose of defending this important position, had not yet returned. Time was precious. The nation was greatly in need of men at this particular moment, and at this point of the Federal line.

Brave men had fought over this ground but a few minutes before, and left many of their comrades to tell the tale of the unequal contest. Still the harvest was incomplete, more human grain must be garnered before the demon of destruction could be appeased. It was coming. The Fortieth New York Volunteer Regiment, led by the indomitable Col. Tom W. Egan, has heard the roar of cannon, and, without waiting for orders, following the true instincts of a brave and gallant soldier, noble Tom Egan moved at a double quick with his band of heroes and was soon charging through the battery. A new lease of life was given us; in fact, this timely assistance enabled the battery to renew the contest, and with the aid of the Fortieth New York impose a longer delay of half an hour upon Hood's troops, thereby giving the approaching troops under Vincent O'Rourke and others just sufficient time to scale the summit of Little Round Top, together with Hazlett's Battery, and after a short, sharp struggle repulse the foe.

The importance of Colonel Egan's intelligent and soldierly manner of moving his command to a point of our line where he could do the most good can not be estimated. His practiced ear, ever on the alert for the sound of the enemy's guns, when confronted by the foe, led him to discern where he was most needed. As soon as he arrived he quickly divined the enemy's intentions and made such disposition of his troops as to best delay, if not entirely thwart his purpose. If, as has been said, the enemy lost Little Round Top by less than five minutes, what can be said of Col. Tom Egan's timely arrival, and the importance of his fight at Devil's Den? May it not truly be said of him, "He deserves well of his country?" If the American people had seen this fearless soldier in the battle at "Devil's Den," July 2, 1863, his name would be a household word at every fireside "in the land of the free and the home of the brave."

O. D. GREENE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The present bill provides for arrears of proposed increase of pension. As this is in violation of the well-known policy of Congress, the committee can not recommend that much, but, with an amendment striking out the proposition for increase, they recommend that the bill do pass, adding as a further amendment the words "in lieu of any pension he is now receiving."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOSES B. WALKER.

Mr. SHERMAN. The next case on the Calendar is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. It is to pay a small sum due to an officer, a perfectly clear case, already passed by the House of Representatives and reported by the Military Committee. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to its consideration; it is House bill No. 1802. I ask it now because I can not always attend to these matters.

Mr. SAWYER. I hope it will be passed without reading the report.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1882) for the relief of Moses B. Walker. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter in the records of the Treasury Department the settlement of $550 which is charged in the accounts of Moses B. Walker, late colonel of the Thirty-first Ohio Volunteer Infantry, as of the 30th of September, 1861, for money received by him while in the service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSAN HAWES.

The bill (H. R. 7234) granting a pension to Susan Hawes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Susan Hawes on the pension-roll, she being the mother of Jeremiah H. Hawes, late a private in Howe's battery, Company G, Fourth Artillery, United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT B. KIRKPATRICK.

The bill (H. R. 7244) granting a pension to Robert B. Kirkpatrick, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Robert B. Kirkpatrick, late a private in Company E, Eighty-ninth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS WALSH.

The bill (H. R. 8481) granting a pension to Thomas Walsh was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Thomas Walsh, late of Company F, Seventy-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRAHAM POINTS.

The bill (H. R. 8556) granting a pension to Abraham Points was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Abraham Points, late a private in Company C, Forty-second Regiment Missouri Infantry, and now a resident of Allerton, Iowa, on the pension-roll.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. JOHN F. MORRIS.

The bill (H. R. 9052) granting an increase of pension to Capt. John F. Morris was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of John F. Morris, late captain of Company B, Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, to $72 per month.

Mr. CAMDEN. Let the report in that case be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER July 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9052) granting a pension to John F. Morris, have carefully examined the same, and report, recommending the passage of the bill. The subjoined House report correctly states the facts in the case.

Capt. John F. Morris enlisted August 25, 1861, in Company B of the Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was discharged September 15, 1862. In the battle of Gaines's Mills, June 27, 1862, he received three wounds, one in the hip, one in the side, and a shell wound in the lower portion of his spine.

Soldier was granted a pension of $20 per month from September 15, 1862, upon the report of the examining surgeon, John T. Ray, dated April 29, 1863, which is as follows:

"Captain Morris was wounded in the back by a musket ball, which has never been extracted; also in the side and lower portion of the spine by a fragment of shell. This wound has produced paralysis of left leg, rendering him unable to walk without the assistance of crutches, and then only for a short distance, accompanied by pain and a shrunken condition of the muscles of the thigh and leg."

His pension was increased, as his disability became greater, as follows: May 12, 1882, to $24 per month; by act of March 3, 1883, to $30 per month; and to $50 per month March 6, 1885, upon the report of the examining surgeon, dated June 14, 1882, which states:

"I find shell wound over the lower part of sacrum, also over the right nates; scar of minie-ball in front of trochanter major on right side, also on about opposite the lower dorsal vertebra and to the right of spine 1 inch; shell wound over sacrum very tender and painful; it also extends to foot of left side, especially along the course of sciatic nerve; left limb is atrophied, is 2 inches less in circumference than right around thigh, and 1½ inches less above knee; the temperature is 2 degrees less than right. First and second toes were amputated at the metatarso-phalangeal articulation last August on account of gangrene. Foot is œdematous; general health very poor, and he is now obliged to take 4 grains of morphine per day to keep down the pain, and he requires an attendant most of the time. He came very near dying this spring; is a little better now. Since last sickness he has a feeling of suffocation at times, or dyspnœa; the increased disability has not been caused by any vicious or imprudent habits. Disability is much greater than if whole limb had been amputated and was without pain. I find his disability to entitle him to total first-grade degree of disability."

At a special examination held March 8, 1883, at Meadville, Pa., the board of examining surgeons reported:

"We find wounds by shell and ball, the ball passing through or rather between the eleventh and twelfth ribs. This ball has never been extracted. As it passed very near the spine, it evidently has affected spinal and sciatic nerves on left side. We find atrophy of left hip, thigh, and leg, with paralysis of same. The degree of vitality has been so low that great and second toes have had to be amputated by reason of gangrene. Captain Morris is and has long been known to each member of this board.

"We can certify to his intense suffering day and night for years past, his pains only relieved by large subcutaneous injections of morphia, with all supplemental means that could be devised by his physicians. Captain Morris is entirely unable without constant attendance to care for himself, and requires at all times watchful care, from paralysis of the lower portion of the bowels. They are never moved except by use of injections. We would therefore recommend in this case an increase to $50 a month."

Your committee here append the petition of soldier asking the increase by Congress, together with the affidavits of his attending physicians; also a petition from his comrades.

To the honorable Members of the House of Representatives:

Your petitioner, Capt. John F. Morris, of Company B, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, would state that he enlisted in the service of the United States August 25, A. D. 1881. He served with the Army of the Potomac during all its campaigns up to the battle of Gaines's Mills, June 27, 1862. In that conflict he received three wounds—one in the hip, one in the side, and a shell wound in the lower portion of his spine; the latter caused paralysis of the lower limbs, while the ball from the gunshot still remained lodged under the spine, producing pains to such an extent that it impaired his eyesight to such a degree that it is impossible for him to read or write or perform any duties whatever. He has been bedridden for months, and now gropes his way along on crutches.

His sufferings are intense, relieved only by hypodermics of morphine injected in his limbs, and with no hope for any relief, as he is growing worse, and at times even morphia does not relieve him. He is in need, as he can not support his family, has exhausted means in medical attendance that he had accumulated in his younger days. He made application for an increase some years ago; it was made from $20 to $24; then from that to $30, and, as his disabilities increased, to $50 a month. This does not cover the medical attendance and incidentals consequent upon his constant illness and suffering.

JOHN F. MORRIS.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,
County of Crawford, ss:

Personally came before me, clerk of the court in and for the county aforesaid, John F. Morris, late captain of Company B, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, who, being duly sworn, says that the above and foregoing statement is just and true to the best of his knowledge and belief. And I hereby certify that I have no interest direct or indirect in the prosecution of this claim.

Witness my hand and official seal this 20th May, A. D., 1886.

[SEAL.] A. B. EDSON,
Proth'y and Clerk of Court of Common Pleas.

MEADVILLE, PA., May 20, 1886.

I have known intimately John F. Morris, formerly captain Company B, Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for nearly thirty years, and have been his physician for nearly twenty years. Have attended him profesionally for gunshot wound received in the service of United States. The injury was to his spine and left leg. Left sciatic nerves diseased, consequently circulation very feeble; so much so that two toes had to be removed for gangrene. The pain resulting from this condition has been the most intense I have ever known. After these long years of suffering his general health has given way, and now he is a physical wreck, unable to care for himself in many ways, and in my opinion requires and should have a constant attendant.

I have been in active practice of medicine and surgery for twenty-four years. Have no personal interest in claim for his pension.

T. B. LASHELE, M. D.

Sworn to before me this 20th day of May, 1886.

[SEAL.] JAMES GRAHAM, C'k.

Affidavit of physician or surgeon.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,
County of Philadelphia, ss:

In the pension claim of Capt. John F. Morris, late of Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, personally came before me, a deputy prothonotary, clerk, in and for the aforesaid county and State, Alf. W. Green, a citizen of Meadville, in the county of Crawford and State of Pennsylvania, whom I believe to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows:

That he is a practicing physician, and that he has been acquainted with said soldier for about thirteen years, and that for that length of time have known the aforesaid Capt. John F. Morris intimately; although not his regular physician, have seen him frequently professionally; he has been to my certain knowledge one of the greatest sufferers I have ever met with, the result of wounds received at Gaines's Mills. He is unable to dress himself, and can only limp around with the aid of a crutch and cane; he is totally unable to perform manual or other labor.

He further declares that he has been a practitioner of medicine for forty years, and that he has no interest, either direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

ALF. W. GREEN, Late Surgeon P. R.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 20th day of May, A. D. 1886, and I hereby certify that the affiant is a practicing physician in good professional standing; that the contents of the above declaration, &c., were fully made known unto him before swearing, including the words erased and the words added; and that I have no interest, direct, or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

F. H. SMITH, Deputy Prothonotary.

We, the undersigned, members of the Grand Army of the Republic, would respectfully petition the honorable members of the House of Representatives to a special act for the increase of pension for Capt. John F. Morris, of Company B, Eighty-third Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

We feel that it would be no more than justice to a suffering comrade to grant him the pension he is now applying for.

We subscribe ourselves, respectfully:

Chas. C. Johnson, Thos. A. Stebbins, Chas. W. Lane, S. F. Nelson, C. Van Horne, F. N. Clark, B. F. Smith, J. H. Dickson, R. B. Burns, Sam'l B. Dick, J. D. Gill, E. H. Bernhoft, O. H. Hollister, I. E. Myers, H. H. Davis, S. C. Beach, T. L. Flood, J. W. Cainer, Almond Delamater, H. P. Marley, F. E. Underwood, Wm. Roberts, E. G. Taylor, Lloyd E. Riddle, Benjamin Emerson, John Porter, Frank Shippen, W. P. Porter, A. B. Edson, J. G. Lindeman, John J. Henderson, S. C. McDowell, Sturges T. Dicks, Geo. F. Davenport, H. J. Humes, Geo. A. West, H. E. Wilson, R. Michael, John F. Bruner, M. R. Jenks, F. H. Davis, Robt. Andrews, John Hull.

The evidence as to the condition of this claimant for increase of pension as detailed above has been further supplemented by inquiries made of gentlemen of character whom your committee have consulted concerning this case.

They are therefore fully satisfied that the soldier is suffering as is claimed; that he is practically totally disabled; that he requires the almost constant ministration of others; and that cost of medicines and medical treatment are a heavy tax upon the pension which he now receives.

They therefore report this bill favorably, with an amendment striking out the words "one hundred" in line 6, and inserting the words "seventy-two," and as thus amended recommend that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANNA ETHERIDGE HOOKS.

The bill (2774) to provide a pension for Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions reported an amendment, in line 5, after the words "rate of;" to strike out "fifty and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks, at the rate of $25 per month.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER July 22, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2774) to provide a pension for Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks, have considered the same, and report:

Anna Etheridge, now Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks, shows in her petition that she entered the military service of the United States in May, 1861, among the first to respond to her country's call in its hour of need, with the Second Michigan Volunteer Infantry, determined to serve her flag as long and as faithfully as her comrade brothers in every duty which a woman could do. She remained during the entire war with the Second, Third, and Fifth Regiments Michigan troops attached to the Army of the Potomac, returning home with the Fifth Michigan Volunteer Infantry (which was the Third and Fifth consolidated), in July, 1865.

She was in twenty-eight battles, as will appear from a list presented to her when camped near Jeffersonville, Ind., July 5, 1865, in which she shared with her commands the dangers of the field, having two horses shot under her, and the hardships of the camp hospital, under fire, dressing the wounds of the fallen, caring for the dying, and preparing and supplying from the stores in her care the nourishment and stimulants which alone could save the lives of many of our brave men.

During her four years' service she was in every battle in which the Army of the Potomac was engaged, except South Mountain and Antietam, when her division was temporarily detached and left in front of Washington.

She was also one of the few among the meritorious and distinguished non-commissioned officers and privates who received the "Kearny Cross," the division decoration.

She received no compensation whatever during the war for any services, and, more than that, expended a considerable amount out of her own funds for expenses in living, clothing, transportation, &c., for which she has never been recompensed in any way.

She is now poor and needy, has never recovered from the results of her long and arduous service, and now asks this recognition of her services, sacrifices, and disabilities incurred during the war.

Your committee report back the bill with a recommendation that the word "fifty," in line 5, be changed to "twenty-five," and with this amendment that the bill do pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must have some explanation of that bill. Here is a soldier who served four years as a non-commissioned officer. Why has not the Pension Office granted the pension? The report does not state what capacity she served in or anything about it. I should like to know on what evidence the report is based. The only thing it refers to there is her petition. I should like to know whether there is any other evidence than her petition.

Mr. PALMER. This is one of those few cases that were well known all through the Army of the Potomac. This woman has had one of the most remarkable and dramatic records of any woman that was ever in the Army of the Potomac. At Chancellorsville when the Michigan Eighth, I think it was, were repulsed, she rallied them and led them again to the attack. She was a woman who went on the battlefield in the face of fire. At it appears in the report, two horses were shot under her. The evidence that was put before the committee was too long to print; but, if it had gone into the report, it would have been enough to convince any one that she was entitled to fifty dollars a month instead of twenty-five.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was she enlisted? Was her name on any muster-roll?

Mr. PALMER. Not that I know of.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report says she was a non-commissioned officer.

Mr. SAWYER. I think not.

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator misapprehended the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether I do or not.

The report says:

She was also one of the few among the meritorious and distinguished non-commissioned officers and privates who received the "Kearny Cross," the division decoration.

I apprehend she was a soldier if she received that.

Mr. PALMER. I imagine that was put in because although she was neither a private nor a commissioned officer, she was regarded as one of the regiment, and she was so endeared to the soldiers that she was called "our Anna."

I hope no levity will be indulged in, for this really is a very dramatic case, and if I could take up the time of the Senate I think I could convince them that she is entitled to $75 a month.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must have more of an explanation. I am examining the papers; I ask that the case be passed over. I want to see if there is any evidence here besides her own petition, because this report is evidently inaccurate, as it is admitted here on the floor of the Senate. It is stated in the report that she was a non-commissioned officer or a private.

Mr. PALMER. I think it does not follow as a matter of course from the phraseology of the report that she was either a private or a non-commissioned officer, but she was among them. What they call a vivandière in the French army might be considered among the privates and non-commissioned officers, but still she would not be either of them, but she was among them.

Mr. SAWYER. That is the idea. The language may be unfortunate.

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator from Missouri misapprehends the statement. I hope he will make no objection. I know that his kind heart, if he knew the whole case, would permit the bill to go through without objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. If I knew all about the case, perhaps I would; but my trouble is that I want to know about it. I think we can ascertain by an examination of the papers; and if there is any other business that can be transacted, it will take less time than to have these whole documents read. Therefore I ask that it be passed over.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator insists, I ask that it be passed over informally, not losing its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, that order will be made.

ELLEN J. WELCH.

The bill (H. R. 7721) granting a pension to Ellen J. Welch was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Ellen J. Welch, widow of John H. Welch, late of the Third Massachusetts Light Battery Artillery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. CUTLER.

The bill (H. R. 3551) granting a pension to George W. Cutler, late a private in Company B, Ninth New Hampshire Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET S. FAIN.

The bill (H. R. 260) for the relief of Margaret S. Fain was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret S. Fain, widow of William C. Fain, who was killed while recruiting a regiment about April 6, 1864, at Pitman's Ferry, Hope County, Tennessee, and to pay her the pension allowed to the widow of a captain.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M'GOWAN.

The bill (H. R. 4032) granting a pension to John McGowan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John McGowan, late of Company K, Twenty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES SAVERCOOL.

The bill (H. R. 6824) granting a pension to James Savercool was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of James Savercool, late of the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI A. CRONKHITE.

The bill (H. R. 8352) for the relief of Levi A. Cronkhite was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Levi A. Cronkhite, late a private in Company E, Eighty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SAWYER July 23, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8352) granting a pension to Levi A. Cronkhite, have examined the same, and report:

The report of the House committee is full and conclusive, and the committee believe that the facts fully warrant its approval of this claim. It is adopted, and is as follows:

"Cronkhite served as private of Company E, Eighty-sixth Indiana Volunteers, from August 15, 1862, to June 6, 1865. He applied for pension July 29, 1871, alleging that he contracted measles in November, 1862, in consequence of which he is suffering from disease of eyes. The record of the War Department shows that he was absent, sick, from October, 1862, to February, 1863, but the Surgeon-General reports the absence of the medical records which cover the period of aforesaid treatment.

"Two comrades testify to claimant's sickness after enlistment, but can no now recall the nature of the disease.

"Dr. Asa Bigelow testifies that he treated claimant for measles on November 21 and 24, 1862, also on December 4 and 11, 1862, as shown by his books. Claimant was then at home on furlough.

"Assistant Surgeon Van Vorhis, of claimant's regiment, testifies that, at New Hope Church, May 27, 1864, claimant received an injury to eyes by explosion of shell; was taken to the rear and affiant examined him. Found that dirt and gravel had been thrown with great violence in his face, injuring his eyes very much; remained under treatment for about three weeks, but returned to duty and suffered with impaired eyesight during remainder of his service. Claimant is now (August, 1882) almost blind in right eye, with vision of left eye much impaired. Affiant does believe that this condition is due to the injury above mentioned.

"Joseph Jones, late surgeon of the regiment, testifies that claimant had an attack of measles after his enlistment; that he took cold while convalescent, which greatly impaired his eye-sight, but continued to do duty until he was stunned and blinded by the explosion of a shell in May, 1864, while in battle, after which he became so disabled in his sight that he was transferred to the Pioneer Corps.

"Medical examination in August, 1881, showed asthenopia, which the examining surgeon states was undoubtedly caused from the effects of measles.

"Doubts as to claimant's soundness before enlistment were thrown in the case by information furnished the office, tending to show that claimant, prior to his enlistment, was slightly near-sighted, and the case was specially examined. The examination was concluded in December last, the case being returned to the Pension Office, with the special examiner's recommendation for admission. In April last claimant was again examined by an oculist, who pronounced the defective vision the result of hypermetropic astigmatism, which is probably congenital. Upon this finding the claim was rejected by the medical referee.

"There may have been some defect in claimant's sight prior to his service, but he was not disqualified in any way to perform military duty until after he suffered from an attack of measles, and still later, when he received a more serious injury to his eyes, as is shown by the unimpeached testimony of both the surgeon and assistant surgeon of the regiment.

"He is now in a deplorable condition, and in the opinion of this committee should receive the benefit of whatever doubt may exist in the case.

"The Commissioner of Pensions, in a recent letter to this committee, says:

"The action of rejection was based on the opinion of the medical referee of this Bureau, who was unable, on the testimony on file, to accept that the disease of eyes alleged by claimant was caused by, or due to, his army service. In my opinion it is an equitable case, worthy the consideration and action of your committee."

The bill is herewith reported to the Senate, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRENE GOOGINS.

The bill (H. R. 8635) granting a pension to Irene Googins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Irene Googins, widow of Oscar Googins, late a private in Company B, Seventh Regiment of Minnesota Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VIRGINIA TAYLOR RANDALL.

The bill (H. R. 7712) granting a pension to Virginia Taylor Randall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Virginia Taylor Randall, widow of Lieut. Col. Burton Randall, late a surgeon in the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAWYER. I believe that finishes up the pension bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That closes the list.

MRS. BARBARA FUCHS.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask that Calendar No. 1177, being House bill 6489 granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs, be now taken up. It was passed over on a former call.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be read for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Barbara Fuchs, stepmother of John Fuchs, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. GORMAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

R. D. BECKLEY AND LEON HOWARD.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask consent of the Senate to proceed at this time to the consideration of Calendar No. 1639. It is House bill 5872, granting compensation to two colored employés of the House, about $600 between the two. I ask the Senate to consider it at this time.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5872) for the relief of R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for payment to R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard, late employés under the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, Forty-eighth Congress, the sum of $368 each, being the difference in salary paid to laborers and that paid to messengers, which latter office they respectively filled from the 2d of January, 1884, to the 7th of July, 1884, and from the 1st of December, 1884, to the 4th of March, 1885, aggregating nine months and six days, during which they performed all of the duties of messengers and received only the pay of laborers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOTEL AT FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to consider Senate joint resolution 73. There will be no objection to it, I think. It is Order of Business 1629.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 73) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlin to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va.

Mr. VEST. This is reported with the recommendation of the Secretary of War and the commanding general of the Army. I move in line 7, after the words "Secretary of War," to strike out "and the commanding officer at Fortress Monroe," so as to leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, after the words "Secretary of War," it is proposed to strike out "and the commanding officer at Fortress Monroe;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to John F. Chamberlin to build a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va., upon such site and with such plans and dimensions as may be approved by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARROLLTON TURNPIKE.

Mr. BECK. I ask to take up Order of Business 1679, being House bill 4503.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4503) to authorize the Secretary of War to permit the Corrollton and Lock Number One Turnpike Road Company to locate and construct its road on land belonging to the United States at Lock No. 1, on the Kentucky River, in the State of Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. This is reported by both the Committee on Public Buildings and the Committee on Commerce. The company undertook to do it themselves, but found that they had to come to Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND OFFICE AT LAMAR, COLO.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to call up Order of Business 1692, being the bill (S. 2796) to establish a land office at Lamar, Colo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-BUILDINGS BILLS.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask to take up the few remaining public-buildings bills. The first in order is Order of Business 1678.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks permission to call up in order the public-buildings bills. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT READING, PA.

The bill (H. R. 1983) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Reading, Pa., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OWENSBOROUGH, KY.

The bill (S. 1536) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Owensborough, in the State of Kentucky, and the erection thereon of a public building for the post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, and appropriating money for said purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HAVERHILL, MASS.

The bill (S. 2194) for the erection of a public building at Haverhill, Mass., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LA CROSSE, WIS.

The bill (S. 2242) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at La Crosse, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT GALVESTON, TEX.

The bill (H. R. 2475) to amend an act approved May 25, 1882, entitled "An act for the construction of a public building at Galveston, Tex." was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OXFORD, MISS.

The bill (S. 2794) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection and construction of a public building at Oxford, Miss.," approved July 12, 1882, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BROOKLYN, N. Y.

The bill (S. 1847) for the purchase of land for the Federal building in Brooklyn, N. Y., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The bill (S. 246) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlotte, N. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ABINGDON, VA.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that Order of Business 1699, being the bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building, for more suitable property, be recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES CAIN.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask for the consideration of Order of Business 1627, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 5552) for the relief James Cain was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to change the record of James Cain, late a captain in the One hundred and fifty-eighth Regiment of Infantry, New York State Volunteers, and grant to him an honorable discharge, with the rank held by him at the time his connection with the service was severed, such change of record not to involve any claim for pay or services from the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIDNEY R. SMITH.

Mr. SEWELL. I have two more bills from the Committee on Military Affairs which I should like the Senate to indulge me in considering, the first one being Order of Business No. 1628.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 1511) for the relief of Sidney R. Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to Sidney R. Smith, late a sergeant in the Thirty-third Regiment of New Jersey Infantry Volunteers, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from the 10th of March, 1864, the date at which he was assigned to duty under his commission as such, to the date of his actual discharge from service, deducting therefrom the pay received by him as sergeant during that period.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET F. RYAN.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask to take up Order of Business No. 1702.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1249) for the relief of Margaret F. Ryan was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Margaret F. Ryan, late widow of George F. Cole, late a private in Company F, Fifty-first Regiment of New York Infantry Volunteers, the amount due Cole for military services rendered by him from the 15th of August, 1864, to the 25th of July, 1865; also commutation for rations and clothing not drawn by him while a prisoner of war, from the 30th of September, 1864, to the date of the discharge of his regiment from the service, July 25, 1865; and, further, to pay to her such bounty as she is by existing law entitled on account of the services of Cole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY POST AT DENVER.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask to take up Order of Business No. 1706.

The bill (S. 2477) making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is by the bill appropriated for the establishment and erection of a military post or garrison near the city of Denver, Colo., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that to be selected without any action on the part of the War Department and the commanding general?

Mr. SEWELL. Oh, no; the report will show that the War Department approve, it and the commanding general is very anxious to have this post established in order to abandon four other posts.

Mr. SHERMAN. The report had better be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the report is called for. It will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SEWELL July 13, 1886:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2477) making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado, beg leave to report as follows:

The committee present the following communications from the Secretary of War and the Lieutenant-General commanding the Army, and make them a part of their report:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, July 7, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 4th ultimo, inclosing a copy of Senate bill No. 2477, "making an appropriation for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, in the State of Colorado," and requesting to be furnished with my opinion upon the proposed measure, accompanied with such facts and information as the Department may possess.

In reply I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of the report of the Lieutenant-General of the Army, made to me under date of the 8th ultimo, upon this subject.

The subject-matter of this bill involves, in its consideration, the question of abandonment of numerous small posts that are no longer necessary, and the concentration of larger forces at strategic points near the frontier, or at points of railroad intersection. This question has hitherto engaged the attention of the Department, and has been presented to Congress through the annual reports of the Secretary of War for several successive years.

There can be no doubt that such a policy would prove highly advantageous to the military service, and result in greater economy, and I think from such facts as are before me and such consideration as I have been able to give the subject, that Denver should be one of the points at which one of the permanent military posts of the country should be located, and with that view I do not think there would be any objection to making an appropriation now for that purpose. If such an appropriation is made and a military post near Denver established, the following smaller posts could be disposed of, as no longer needed for military purposes, namely: Forts Lyon, Colorado; Union, New Mexico; Fred. Steele, Wyoming, and the cantonment on the Uncompahgre, Colorado.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WILLIAM J. SEWELL,
Of Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 8, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith Senate bill 2477, making an appropriation of $250,000 for the establishment and erection of a military post near the city of Denver, Colo.

The city of Denver is situated in about the center of population of the State of Colorado. It is at the base of the Rocky Mountains, and is noted for its picturesque beauty and healthfulness. It is the center of a railroad system which embraces several transcontinental and one continental railroad, and strategically answers all the conditions of speedy transfer of troops in all directions. It is inexpensive compared with other posts, and the troops at Forts Lyon and Union could be advantageously quartered there at a much less expense to the Government. These posts have outlived the wants of the country surrounding them, and there is no necessity of keeping them up except to furnish shelter for the troops. If a post be established at Denver it would be attended with much less expense to the Government than the maintenance of the troops at the posts of Forts Lyon and Union.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General, Commanding.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

The committee, after full consideration of this bill, believe that there is now no doubt as to the propriety of concentrating the posts of the Army, and to abandoning the numerous small ones, which, by reason of the settlement of the country, have, to a certain extent, become unnecessary to the service.

The concentration of the troops and the establishment of larger posts at points where railroad facilities are such that they can be maintained at minimum cost, and the commands distributed, in case of necessity, with the least possible delay, seem to the committee to be the policy which should be adopted by the Government. Denver is admirably situated for this purpose.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. MANDERSON. I report from the Committee on Printing the joint resolution (H. Res. 201) for printing report of the Commissioner of Agriculture favorably, with amendments, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing with amendments, in section 1, line 3, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and forty;" in the same section, lines 5 and 6, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and thirty-three;" in the same section, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "seventy-five;" and in the same section, line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-one" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be printed 400,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1886; 300,000 copies for the use of Members and Delegates of the House of Representatives, and 75,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 25,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the cost of the publication of said report.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the amendments may be put as one amendment, and I will explain what they are. We reduce the total number 40,000 and make a different distribution, giving 300,000 to the House of Representatives, 75,000 to members of the Senate, and 25,000 to the Department of Agriculture, which is the usual proportion of these reports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the question will be put on all the amendments as one.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE BOWMAN ACT.

Mr. HOAR. I move to take up Senate bill 2643.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2643) supplemental to an act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government."

Mr. SHERMAN. I give notice that after this bill is disposed of I will move an adjournment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT MEMPHIS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair takes the liberty to say that there are two or three Senators who have applied for recognition, and the Chair promised to recognize them. The Senator from Tennessee is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the consideration at this time of Order of Business 1563, being the bill (S. 2516) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. CULLOM. I object to that.

Mr. SHERMAN. There being objection, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 27, 1886, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Otis G. King to be postmaster at Kenosha, Kenosha County, Wisconsin, commission expired.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate July 10, 1886.

B. F. Ellsberry to be postmaster at Ironton, Lawrence County, Ohio.

The injunction of secrecy having been removed from the report in this case it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Your Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have considered the case of S. B. Steece, suspended and to be removed from the office of postmaster at Ironton, in the State of Ohio, and the appointment of B. F. Ellsberry to the same. The response of the Postmaster-General to the request of the committee for information, supplemented by their investigation elsewhere, satisfies them that Major Steece was a brave and faithful soldier in the Union Army in the war of the rebellion; that he is a reputable citizen of unblemished character and undoubted integrity; that his conduct of the affairs of his office was unexceptionable; that he was not removed for any cause affecting his official or personal character, but for political reasons alone.

Your committee further find that the appointee, Ellsberry, is entirely competent for the performance of the duties of this office, and, as Major Steece has no wish touching this suspension and appointment other than full vindication of his personal and official character against any suspicion that might attach from the same, they report back to the Senate this nomination with the recommendation that the nominee be confirmed.

O. D. CONGER, of Committee.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 26, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK, of Washington, D. C.

CORRECTION OF JOURNAL.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Journal wherein it states that on the last bill under consideration at the evening session on Saturday, on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] for the previous question on the bill and pending amendments, it was announced that no quorum voted thereon. That point was made, and the House, under a misapprehension, supposed it was so. In fact a quorum had voted, and the previous question was ordered. The RECORD shows there were 128 yeas and 37 nays, making 165 votes. That was the fact; but the House, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] that no quorum had voted, accepted that as correct, although in fact a quorum had voted and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected in accordance with the statement of the gentleman from Alabama. The Chair desires to state as a matter of justice to the tally clerk, that in recording the affirmative vote in the column assigned for that purpose upon the sheet, when that vote had reached 49, he put down the figures 49, and called two or three more names before there was any other vote in the affirmative. When the next gentleman voted in the affirmative the tally clerk, looking back to his previous figures, took the 9 for a 4, and it looks very much like a 4, as the gentleman from Alabama will see if he examines it, and therefore recorded the next vote as 45, when it should have been 50; and that error was continued until the close of the roll-call, and the footings were made accordingly. It was a mistake made simply by the tally clerk on account of mistaking the figure. The Chair therefore thinks the Journal should be corrected to show the previous question was ordered. On the next vote taken in the House a quorum did not vote, and further proceedings were stopped.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that much inconvenience may result from going back from the announcement made, if under a mistake the Chair makes an incorrect statement and the House proceeds with the current business.

The SPEAKER. But the session of Saturday evening was a special session. The only effect of the mistake was to prevent apparently the previous question being ordered on that bill. As a matter of fact the previous question was ordered. The Chair thinks the Journal should be corrected; and the bill comes over when next taken up for consideration with the previous question ordered on the amendments and the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. OATES. The RECORD does not show that the Speaker pro tempore announced that no quorum had voted. It says: "The vote was then announced as above recorded." The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] suggested that no quorum had voted, and the House accepted that statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that the House got as far as it could in the proceedings anyhow, because on the next vote it was clear there was no quorum on the call of the yeas and nays.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not know what the RECORD shows, but as a matter of fact, misled by the mistake to which the Speaker has called attention, I, being in the chair at the time, announced that no quorum had voted. I was under the same misapprehension as the clerk was.

The SPEAKER. The mistake of 5 votes in the tally would show no quorum. The Journal will be corrected, and without objection will be approved as corrected.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LAFFOON, for to-day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. SMALLS, until Tuesday next.

To Mr. WADE, for this day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HOWARD, until Thursday, the 29th instant, on account of important business.

To Mr. MORROW, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 9807) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Smith has been erroneously referred to the Committee on Pensions. It should have been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. That order will be made.

YELLOW FEVER COMMISSION.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 1730, with amendments, providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the truth of alleged discoveries of the specific cause of yellow fever, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill and amendments were read.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to introduce the amended Senate bill as a distinct bill.

Mr. DOWDNEY. I object.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE, SECOND JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 8599, providing an additional circuit judge in the second judicial district, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. COX. Let the report be read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, as the consideration of this bill is likely to occupy more time than we can give to it this morning, I shall call for the regular order, suggesting that the bill go over until to-morrow morning, and reserving my right to object.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the sundry civil appropriation bill taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object. Let it go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report:

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7087) entitled "An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to said bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add to Senate amendment the following: "Provided further, That no forfeiture shall be deemed to have accrued solely because of a default in payment of principal or interest becoming due April 30, 1886, if the interest due upon said date shall be paid within sixty days after the passage of this act;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

OLIN WELLBORN,
T. G. SKINNER,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

H. L. DAWES.
BENJ. HARRISON,
S. B. MAXEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. Unless some gentleman desires an explanation I move that the conference report be adopted.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter morton was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] withdraw his objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the sundry civil appropriation bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed?

Mr. HEPBURN. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 453) for the erection of a public building at Jacksonville, Fla.;

A bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler;

A bill (S. 1421) granting a pension to William H. Weaver; and

A bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Joseph S. Moody.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to submit as a privileged question the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

W. S. HOLMAN,
GEORGE C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following is the statement accompanying the report:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for 1887 submit the following written statement in explanation of the accompanying report from the conference committee:

The amendments referred to and considered by the conference committee relate to the payment of clerks to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, the increase of the amount for payment of subordinate officers of the internal-revenue service from $1,900,000 to $2,050,000, and the sum of $10,000 proposed for the collection of statistics relating to the laws of marriage and divorce. Being unable to agree upon any of said amendments, the bill is in the same condition as when last considered by the House.

WM. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this report will be accepted.

Mr. HOLMAN. The conferees of the two Houses have been unable to agree on the first of the three pending points of disagreement; that is, the appropriation of $23,250 for clerks of Senators. The other two points of disagreement are more formal than real. The real point of disagreement is in regard to the clerks for Senators. I believe this is the second or third time the subject has been reported to the House. The conferees on the part of the Senate are not willing to recede, and the question is what the House shall do.

I wish to state as a reason why this subject should be disposed of at the earliest moment that the bill, as already agreed upon by the two Houses, materially reduces the number of employés of the Government, so that every day that this bill is delayed in becoming a law expense is being incurred to the extent of several thousand dollars more than would be incurred if the bill were in force. I mention this as a reason why it is important the two Houses should come to an agreement at the earliest moment. Every day's delay involves an extra expenditure of several thousand dollars. As a matter of form, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. STRUBLE. Why does the gentleman make that motion "as a matter of form?"

Mr. HOLMAN. So that any gentleman may make any other motion he thinks proper.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether it is not true that the main question now in controversy is in reference to the salaries of clerks of Senators.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what I have been attempting to say. That is really the point of disagreement.

Mr. BLOUNT. In an experience of many years has not the Senate always insisted firmly on this point and has not the House always yielded; and is not that likely to be our experience at this time? If so, and if the delay in the passage of the bill is imposing expense upon the Government, had we not better yield at once than yield later on after further expenditure has been incurred?

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, experience demonstrates that the House finally yields the point. [Laughter.] And the subject is presented in this form—that the Senate is a unit in insisting upon this provision, while the House is not a unit in opposition to it.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think the House has held out long enough to satisfy the country of the reform tendency of the House? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it important the measure should be disposed of promptly. I think that this expenditure of several thousand dollars a day ought to be saved.

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. As the gentleman from Indiana feels a delicacy in making the motion I will move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call the previous question.

Mr. CABELL. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House concur in the Senate amendments. I do not think we ought to concur as to the first amendment. I am perfectly willing for the House to say what should be done in regard to the other amendments; but as to the first amendment, I think it possible we may come to some agreement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Alabama to move that the House recede from its disagreement to amendments numbered 2 and 17 and agree to the same, those being the amendments relating to compensation of clerks of Senators.

Mr. OATES. That is my motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two other matters pending and not finally disposed of; but an agreement is practically reached upon those. I call the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] give us some reason in favor of his motion?

Mr. OATES. I think it is right. Senators have determined that they ought to have clerks, that the clerks are necessary for the performance of the duties of Senators; and I think they ought to have them.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman give us some reason why the pay of a Senator should practically be $19.69 a day, while that of a Representative is only $13.69?

Mr. OATES. Perhaps that is the fault of the House; perhaps the trouble is that Representatives have not asked for what they are entitled to in this respect. I am in favor of members of the House who are not chairmen of committees having clerks.

Mr. BURROWS. I am opposed to the inequality. I would like to hear some reason for allowing a Senator $6 more compensation per diem than a Representative.

Mr. OATES. Well, as I said, it is perhaps the fault of the House that we have not asked for an allowance of this kind; otherwise we might be on equal terms with the Senators.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 2 and 17 and agree to the same, those being the amendments which provide compensation for Senators' clerks.

Mr. COX. I demand a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 61, noes 45.

Mr. PAYSON and Mr. REED, of Maine, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being—ayes 35, noes 73; more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

The question was taken and there were—yeas 96, nays 121, not voting 105; as follows:

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. WADE.
Mr. HALSELL with Mr. ELY.
Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. BRUMM.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House still further insist upon the amendments numbered 2, 88, 179, and 180, the remaining amendments, and ask a further conference; and on that I call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CABELL, and Mr. CANNON as conferees on the part of the House.

CORRECTION OF A ROLL.

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD of the 23d instant. I am recorded as voting upon the last ballot recorded on page 7341. That is a mistake. I had been called out of the House and was not present during that ballot, but was paired with my friend from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE]. The pair is inserted, but my name is erroneously recorded as voting in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman indicate the matter under consideration on that occasion?

Mr. COWLES. The question was on considering the bill (H. R. 9114) to provide for the fortification of wine for exportation.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that members be allowed to hand their bills to the Clerk for reference to-day, without taking the time of the House to call the States in their alphabetical order, just as was done on last Monday. I make this request for the purpose of saving time.

The SPEAKER. For how long a time? Will the gentleman indicate? The leave on last Monday was quite indefinite, and members continued to hand bills in at the desk for a day or two afterward.

Mr. TAULBEE. Only for this day.

Mr. STRAIT. I object.

HARRIET A. ROBB.

Mr. DUNN introduced a bill (H. R. 9936) for the relief of Harriet A. Robb; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAREY introduced a bill (H. R. 9986) to establish the Sweetwater land district, in the Territory of Wyoming; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW FOR LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. LAWLER introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That on Saturday evening, July 31, the House shall take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of Senate bill 2076, passed by the Senate, and entitled "An act to extend to letter-carriers the advantages secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes relating to the hours of labor," and known as "the eight-hour law."

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. HERBERT introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the first Wednesday after the first Monday of December, 1886, and from day to day thereafter, after the morning hour for the consideration of bills and resolutions be set apart for the consideration of business from the Committee on Naval Affairs; not to interfere with revenue nor general appropriation bills, nor with prior orders, nor with the consideration of reports from the Committee on Public Lands under the special order, nor with the business of Mondays and Fridays; and the consideration of such business from said Committee on Naval Affairs shall be continued subject to the limitation until the said committee shall have occupied for two days the time remaining after the expiration of said morning hour for the consideration of bills and resolutions.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following tittles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5038) for the relief of Stephen Sauer;

A bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry free of duty of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 54) to credit Lieutenants Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 129) directing the Public Printer to forward the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to our legations abroad.

FORFEITURE OF NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND GRANT.

Mr. HENLEY. I rise to make a privileged report for present consideration from the Committee on the Public Lands.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

The following substitute proposed by the Committee on the Public Lands as an amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That except as to all lands granted for that portion of the road of the Northern Pacific Railroad which was completed before July 4, A. D. 1879, and also excepting the right of way, with necessary lands used in operating said railroad, and also except all lands included within the limit of any village, town, or city site, the grant of public lands made in aid of the construction of the said Northern Pacific Railroad by act of Congress approved July 2, A. D. 1866 (13 Statutes at Large, page 365), be, and it is hereby, declared forfeited and determined; and the said act making the grant is, so far as said grant is concerned, hereby repealed, and said lands are hereby restored to the public domain, for sale and settlement under existing laws of the United States; and all of said lands shall be held and treated as though said grant and the withdrawals under it had never been made: Provided, That in case of any of the lands embraced within the terms of this act, to which said railroad company would have been entitled had the said road been constructed as provided in the act making the grant, have been sold by said company prior to January 1, A. D. 1884, the party or person so purchasing any of said lands, his heirs and assigns, shall have the right to the lands so purchased to the extent of 320 acres, upon making proof of the fact of such purchase before the register at the local land office of the district where said land may be located; and upon proof as above within twelve months of the passage of this act patents shall issue to the parties entitled thereto for the land; and in any case of purchase or settlement, as contemplated in this act, of more than 320 acres by each settler, the 320 acres to each settler may be selected by him within one year from the passage of this act, he filing the description of such selection at the proper land office or with the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SEC. 2. That all persons who have made actual settlement or have made valuable improvements upon the odd-numbered sections adjacent to the said road or branch thereof, with or without contract of purchase therefor, with a bona fide intent to secure title thereto by purchase from said Northern Pacific Railroad Company when the said company had earned the same by compliance with the conditions and requirements of said act, or to acquire title to the same under the public-land laws of the United States, and being a citizen of the United States, or having declared his intention to become one in compliance with the naturalization laws of the United States, shall be entitled to enter one-quarter section of 160 acres each, of the lands so settled upon or improved by such person, under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States; and in case such person has exhausted his or her right under said laws, then and in that case such person may enter one-quarter section, of 160 acres, of the land so settled upon or improved, by paying therefor $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 3. That the following words in act of July 2, 1864, section 2, "and the right of way shall be exempt from taxation within the Territories of the United States" are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. DUNHAM. How does this bill come here?

The SPEAKER. By report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then it goes to the Calendar, does it not?

The SPEAKER. It does not. The committee reports it under a rule of the House.

Mr. HENLEY. It is a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The committee makes a privileged report, and asks its immediate consideration.

Mr. DUNHAM. How does it become privileged?

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House, clause 49, Rule XI, give to the committee the right to report at any time upon certain classes of bills.

Mr. DUNHAM. Do I understand that this is a substitute for a bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. The committee reports back a Senate bill with a recommendation that a substitute be adopted.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill?

The SPEAKER. It is. It has just been read.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is it in order to vote on the question at this time?

The SPEAKER. The bill is up for consideration unless the question of consideration be raised against it—it is before the House for a vote or for debate or amendment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. DUNHAM. Has the bill been printed?

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill, as the Chair supposes, was printed; and the bill offered as a substitute appears to be in print.

Mr. DUNHAM. Has the amendment been printed?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, it would seem advisable to have some understanding about the limit of debate on this question. This bill is simply an amendment of the bill passed by the Senate. The distinctive difference between the Senate bill and the House bill is this: The Senate bill proposes to forfeit all the lands within the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company from the town of Wallula, Wash., to the city of Portland, Oreg.

The House committee have recommended the amendment of that bill, including the forfeiture of the grant from Bismarck out to the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. Speaker, those are the distinctive features of difference between the two measures.

I should like now to hear from the other side; that is, from the opponents of this measure, if there be any, as to the limitation of this debate.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What is the difference as to the number of acres of land?

Mr. HENLEY. It amounts to somewhere between 33,000,000 and 34,000,000 of acres.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. In favor of your bill?

Mr. HENLEY. Yes; in favor of the House bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. This is the land the Government granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad?

Mr. HENLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Now, does he propose to take it back?

Mr. HENLEY. Yes, sir. Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to get the bill before the House so that we may have action at the earliest possible period, I ask by unanimous consent that all general debate be closed at 4 o'clock this afternoon. [Cries of "No!" "That is too long!"] Then I will amend by saying 3 o'clock.

Mr. VAN EATON. No; say 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks that by unanimous consent the previous question shall be considered as ordered on this bill. Does the gentleman ask that it shall be ordered on the passage of the bill or on the engrossment and third reading of the bill?

Mr. HENLEY. On the passage of the bill.

Mr. VAN EATON. I wish to say a word, if I may be allowed to do so——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi has the right to make a suggestion.

Mr. VAN EATON. I favor the adoption of the Senate bill, and so far shall antagonize the gentleman from California. This is a matter of grave importance, and, I take it, ought to be discussed at length. Such time as members wish for its discussion ought to be allowed. It was discussed for nearly two weeks in the Senate. It is a matter of too grave importance to force it to a vote without both sides being fairly heard. I think it would be better not to fix a limitation to the debate at this time, but to allow it to run on for a time, and then after members have been heard on both sides we can with more judgment fix a time for closing debate.

Mr. HENLEY. It is quite true as stated by the gentleman from Mississippi, but the very fact the subject has been discussed so elaborately during the two weeks in the Senate furnishes an additional reason why we should not spend much time on the subject in this House. Members have undoubtedly informed themselves by perusal of those debates in the Senate and are prepared to vote on one side or the other. My proposition is that general debate be limited, and I therefore move that the previous question be called on the passage of the bill at 3 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done. The gentleman can not move the previous question in advance. At any time he gets the floor he has the right to move the previous question.

Mr. HENLEY. I give notice, then, Mr. Speaker, that I will call the previous question at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. PAYSON. On the third reading and engrossment of the bill?

Mr. HENLEY. Yes, on the third reading and engrossment of the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does the bill make an appropriation of money or land?

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, it forfeits land to the United States.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If it can.

Mr. HENLEY. It is understood that the opponents of the bill are to have half the time allowed for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to recognize members alternately.

Mr. VAN EATON. I ask to be recognized as in control of the time on the other side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not control the time. He will have one hour, of course.

Mr. REED, of Maine. He has his hour.

The SPEAKER. Yes; he will have his hour, and other gentlemen will get each his hour.

Mr. HENLEY. It will probably conform to the wishes of a number of gentlemen upon the floor if I request that members so desiring may have leave to print remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing members to print remarks in the RECORD on this subject?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is proper I should submit some preliminary remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit some preliminary remarks in reference to this measure, and for the reasons which I hope to be able to outline to secure the favorable regard of the House in its behalf.

I am quite certain that I could do nothing better, that I could by no possibility better employ my time or my imperfect powers of advocacy in any way more directly responsive than this to the pledges of the national platform upon which the Democracy won its late victory and placed in the Presidential chair that calm, self-poised, self-reliant man and statesman who now illustrates the highest tenets of its faith and upholds its loftiest traditions.

Sir, a simple invocation to members of this House to discharge a plain duty, to vindicate a solemn promise, solemnly made by the chosen representatives of the dominant party of this mighty nation in convention assempled at Chicago, could not assume a more impressive shape than by this bill, which proposes to wrest from the clutch of corporate rapacity 35,000,000 of acres of the public domain and turn them over to those from whom they were originally taken and to whom, by reason of the breach of the conditions of their bestowal, they now rightfully belong—the people of this Union of American States.

To the discharge of this high, this imperative, this necessitous duty, to its discharge in a manner and with that unanimity that shall leave no doubt that gladly and freely and cordially we do it, I now invoke the patient and earnest consideration of this House. And, sir, speaking in this regard at least for the Representatives of the Democracy on this floor, I may be permitted to say that with a purpose of showing the world that there was no disposition to dally or palter with the obligations of this lofty duty we have first presented for forfeiture the most valuable of all of the grants that was ever made in the history of this Government, the Northern Pacific.

Now, let me be understood. I say again that in order to make the test in respect to the forfeiture of land grants crucial, to the end that all doubt should be dispelled from the mind of every human being on earth desiring to be informed thereon as to the honesty and earnestness of the promises contained in our platform, we have selected for our first action the largest and most valuable grant of land that any government has made probably for two hundred years to a corporation, and which from its immensity and its almost incalculable value has, according to report, brought into play for its perpetuity and to defeat its forfeiture multitudinous agencies, powerful influences, and every meretricious method of controlling legislation that could be devised.

To give an adequate conception of the vastness of this grant I will state that it reaches from Lake Superior to Puget Sound on the Pacific Ocean, embraces 12,800 acres of land for every mile of railroad built in the States and 25,600 acres for every mile built in the Territories, and amounts to about forty-seven millions of acres, worth, at the lowest calculation, $4 per acre, making a grand aggregate of $188,000,000.

Including its indemnity limits, by this grant Congress ceded to this corporation the absolute power to exclude, as a trespasser, any American citizen who should attempt to set his foot within one-half of a scope of country reaching across the continent from one of our great lakes to the Pacific, being 2,000 miles in length and 120 miles in breadth in the Territories and 100 miles in the States. It is larger than the State of Indiana multiplied by nine; larger than France.

Well has one of our great statesmen, Senator Casserly, of California, speaking in the Forty-first Congress of the magnitude of this grant, said:

> Sir, it is not much to say that no such grant was ever before made by our Government. None such has been made within the last one hundred and fifty or two hundred years by any government in Europe to any private corporation, nor indeed to any grantee. No emperor or minister there to-day, however secure his power, would venture on such a spoliation of his country. Considering the wide difference between to-day in the United States, with all its golden promise, and a hundred years ago in India, I greatly doubt whether the grant made in 1864 to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is not equal in all real elements of wealth, prosperity, and power to the vast Indian possessions held in the latter part of the last century by the East India Company, the mightiest chartered company the world has ever seen, or I hope will ever see again.

Mr. Speaker, it is upon this grant, environed and buttressed by so many of the potentialities ever arrayed in behalf of great wealth, that we propose to make the test of our fidelity to the platform upon which we solicited the votes of the American people in the late political campaign.

"This grant," we said to the people, "will afford roof and livelihood to homeless millions; in an hour of reckless or criminal improvidence, or overpowered and subdued by the artful solicitations of the myrmidons of corporate power, Congress gave this, your heritage, away; restore to us the supremacy, and we will give you back your land, whereon you may make your homes." The people, believing in our sincerity, gave us a majority in this House, and now the hour for the redemption of our pledge has arrived, and by the passage of this bill more than any other before the House that act may be consummated.

PROMISES IN PLATFORMS.

I beg to pause right here to advert somewhat to this matter of promises made in political platforms. A great English jurist and philosopher, Lord Brougham, upon a memorable occasion in defending his queen against an accusation involving her honor, involving her right to be received among the reputable matrons of England, in a burst of inspirational eloquence declared that a lawyer's duty to his client should be held paramount to every other earthly consideration; fame, fortune, life, property, even one's country, should be subordinate to the one great object, namely: the successful issue of the litigation or other matter in hand.

In my humble judgment there is one other duty of equal solemnity, of loftier dignity, whose obligation can never be forgotten without a forfeiture of self-respect, nor ignored without personal dishonor. I mean that deathless devotion that a public officer owes to his constituency. This he never, never should forget. This, whenever he does forget, he thereby is self-decreed to political outlawry; this, if he be a man of rectitude of character, he can not forget; it should be ever present to him to guide, control, and dominate his public acts. He should have no wish that does not emanate from his constituents; no hope that is not born of a free and frank communion with them, and no aspiration that does not spring from a constant and fervid desire to do the very thing that he has promised them to do.

It is the custom of political parties to require of their candidates pledges. These pledges are ordinarily contained in the party platforms of the conventions nominating the candidates. No compulsion is used to make a man run for office, and if he can not stand on the platform he should decline the nomination. But if he does accept, then he pledges himself thereby to support the platform—a pledge from which no power short of Omnipotence can absolve him, except the reassembling of another convention of his party. But suppose he does violate his pledges; suppose that being instructed by his platform to do a certain thing, he does another and a different thing, what then? You can not punish him by the instrumentality of sheriff, juries, or courts; he has violated no penal statute, and is not amenable to indictment or trial.

What then should be done in such a case? Sir, the only available remedy is to make such recreant feel the weight of a people's wrath in some other way; and I declare here and now that he who being elected by the people to office upon a platform suffers himself to be beguiled by any means or any agency or influenced to a betrayal of these pledges should be burned with a brand so that he may be known of all men, a "fixed figure for the time of scorn to point its slow unmoving finger at;" he should be forever pilloried in the stocks of infamy and shame.

Mr. Speaker, every party that ran a ticket in the late campaign pledged itself to the forfeiture of railroad land grants—Democratic, Republican, Prohibition, and Greenback Labor parties—all by their platforms recognized the widely prevalent, in fact the universality, of the desire of the people for this legislation, and pledged themselves to that end. In truth, it is about the only great question upon which all parties united in their professions and promises.

We of the Democracy pointed to the record of the Republican party, which showed that in thirteen years, namely, from 1860 to 1873, that party had given about 180,000,000 acres of the public domain to corporations, while the entire amount given before then during the history of the Government extending over a period of ninety-seven years was but 30,000,000. We drew public attention to the shameful saturnalia of maladministration and corruption that were the natural concomitants of these vast and prodigal gratuities, all of which was in apt and truthful phraseology described in the Senate by a distinguished Republican, Hon. G. F. HOAR, from whose speech I quote one paragraph:

When the greatest railroad of the world, binding together the continent and uniting the two great seas which wash our shores, was finished, I have seen our national triumph and exultation turned to bitterness and shame by the unanimous reports of three committees of Congress—two of the House and one here—that every step of that mighty enterprise had been taken in fraud.

These things we dwelt upon in every town and city, in every hamlet and at every cross-roads in the land, and my judgment is, that it was the confidence that our record and our promises created in the people's mind, more than any other one thing, that reinstated us in the political supremacy after so many years.

PROPOSITIONS OF LAW CONSIDERED.

Now, sir, as to certain legal propositions. I beg the House to remember that we are merely acting as trustees in our dealing with the public lands and that the duty of a trustee prohibits the exercise of generosity or the play of those delicate sensibilities by which we might be animated were we acting for ourselves. These lands belong to the people, and we as trustees are only permitted to stand upon the law.

Another thing that should never be lost sight of. In the interpretation of a public grant its provisions are always to be construed most strongly against the grantee, reversing the rule which obtains in reference to grants from one private party to another.

The consideration of the case involves two general and leading questions: First, the power of Congress to declare a grant of public lands forfeited for breach of condition-subsequent; second, whether, this power being established, there are any features in this particular case excepting the grant from the general rule.

The power of Congress to declare forfeited a grant of the public lands, made to either a corporation or a State, by an act containing a clause providing that the lands should revert upon failure to build the road within a specified time, is established beyond all controversy by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court.

It is specially so held in United States vs. Repentigny (5 Wall., 211) and Schulenburg vs. Harriman (21 Wall., 44).

Following these cases is another which even more unequivocally defines the power of Congress in this regard. In Farnsworth vs. Minnesota and Pacific Railroad Company (92 U. S., 66), the court, considering the question, said:

A forfeiture by the State of an interest in lands and connected franchises granted for the construction of a public work, may be declared for non-compliance with the conditions annexed to their grant or their possession, when forfeiture is provided by statute, without judicial proceedings to ascertain and determine the failure of the grantee to perform the conditions.

Following these authoritative expositions of the law, as well as the reasons and sense of the principle involved, your committee have uniformly held that jurisdiction existed in Congress to declare these grants forfeited and have reported several bills to accomplish that purpose, some of which have already passed the House. We adhere to this position in the case under consideration.

The question turns upon a consideration of sections 3, 5, 8, and 9, hereinbefore quoted. The company claim that they constitute an absolute dedication of the lands to the purpose of constructing the road; and that the only power in the United States is the power through Congress to adopt such measures as may be necessary to insure the completion of the road in case the company does not build it.

On the other hand, I regard this construction as utterly untenable, and am of the opinion—

1. That section 8 of the act declares a condition-subsequent, namely, that the road shall be completed within a certain time, upon breach of which the grantor may declare a forfeiture.

2. That section 9 is in no way repugnant to section 8, but while embracing all that is included therein, and to that extent perhaps cumulative, is also, in connection with section 5, a declaration of further and additional conditions-subsequent, for breach of which Congress may interfere to protect the rights of the United States.

3. That under either of said sections, or both together, the United States, by Congress, has the right to declare the grant forfeited for failure to build the road within the limitation.

Section 8 is perfectly plain in the language used and the purpose contemplated. It declares in so many words that the grant made is given by the United States and accepted by the company "subject to the following conditions, namely, that the said company * * * shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road," &c. This is too plain for any construction. Congress intended to provide, and did provide, that the road should be completed within a certain time, and that that should be a condition of the grant. If a condition, the grant is determinable upon its breach, at the option of the grantor.

The argument of the company rests upon the absence of express words declaring a reversion in case of the breach. The estate, so conditioned, is created by declaring the condition, not by declaring the result of its breach. The latter, re-entry or its equivalent, follows as matter of legal effect. Every lawyer knows the result of a breach of condition-subsequent, and the statement of that result in any grant adds nothing to the previous description of the estate created. The land does "revert" by operation of law upon the breach being enforced by re-entry or its equivalent; but the right to that re-entry depends upon no express provisions that the land shall revert. It stands upon the condition declared and its breach. Upon this point I beg to quote from the report of the Public Lands Committee, made at this session of Congress, upon the bill forfeiting the Texas Pacific land grant, reported to the House by Judge PAYSON:

In other words, generally stated, the distinguished counsel for the company declares that in law the power to declare a forfeiture of a grant made on condition-subsequent for breach of the condition must be reserved to the grantor by express terms in the act making the grant, or it does not exist.

No authority was produced to the committee except the statement of the attorneys asserting this extraordinary doctrine in support of it; but the interest being so great, we have examined the books on the question, and are not able to find a single authority in support of the proposition, and we believe none can be found.

On the contrary, Washburn on Real Property (vol. 2, 3d ed., p. 15) asserts the rule to be: "Where the condition of a grant is express there is no need of reserving a right of entry for a breach thereof in order to enable the grantor to avail himself of it." See also Jackson vs. Allen (3 Cowan, 220; Gray vs. Blanchard, 8 Pic., 284; Littleton, sec. 331.)

Indeed, all the decided cases we can find, as well as the text-books, are in harmony and to the same effect; so we do not present argument upon it here.

The estate is created by proper words of description declaring the condition, and the legal effect of what follows the breach is exactly the same whether it be described in the grant or not. Thus in the case under consideration the estate upon condition is created by the specific language used. The legal effect of reversion follows the breach and declaration of forfeiture. No provision that the land should revert was necessary, and if added would simply have described the legal result of what preceded it.

The Touchstone, page 122, thus describes the operative words creating an estate on condition:

Conditions annexed to estates are sometimes so placed and confounded among covenants, sometimes so ambiguously drawn, and at all times have in their drawing so much affinity with limitations, that it is hard to discern and distinguish them. Know, therefore, for the most part, conditions have conditional words in their frontispiece, and do begin therewith, and that among these words there are three words that are most proper, which in their own nature and efficacy, without any addition of other words of re-entry in the conclusion of the condition, do make the estate conditional, as proviso, ita quod and sub conditione.

Washburn, in his work on Real Property, marginal page 42, says:

Among the forms of expression, which imply a condition in a grant, the writers give the following: "On condition," "provided always," "if it shall so happen," or "so that the grantee pay, &c., within a specified time," and grants made upon any of these terms vest a conditional estate in the grantee.

When the condition of a grant is express, there is no necessity of reserving a right of entry for breach of the condition in order to enable the grantor to take advantage of it. (Jackson vs. Allen, 3 Cow., 220; Gray vs. Blanchard, 8 Pick., 284.)

That the words "upon condition," and even words less specifically expressing the intent, are construed as establishing an estate upon condition-subsequent, without further description, is shown by many authorities. (Littleton, pp. 228, 329, 330, Com. Dig. Condition A 2; 2 Wood, Com. Powell's ed., 505, 512, et seq.; Wheeler vs. Walker, 2 Conn., 201; Thomas vs. Record, 477 Me., 500; Sharon Iron Co. vs. Brin, 41 Penn. St., 341; Taylor vs. Cedar Rapid R. R. Co., 25 Iowa, 371; Attorney-General vs. Merrimack Co., 14 Gray, 612; Hadley vs. Hadley, 4 Gray, 145; Rawson vs. School District, 7 Allen, 128; Caw. vs. Robertson, 1 Selden, 125; Pickle vs. McKissick, 21 Penn. St., 232; Hooper vs. Cummings, 45 Me., 359; Chapin vs. School, 35 N. H., 450; Wiggin vs. Berry, 2 Foster, 114; Hayden vs. Stoughton, 5 Pick., 534; Wright vs. Tuttle, 4 Day, 326.)

Authorities upon this point might be multiplied. It is the construction of principle and authority, and your committee have been referred to no case which in their judgment militates at all against the position here assumed. The Touchstone, at page 122, immediately following the quotation which we have made, is suggested as modifying the authority of the citation in its applicability to the case under consideration. But no such effect can possibly be given the language used. After stating the broad proposition quoted, the writer proceeds to say that although the words mentioned are "the most proper words to make conditions," yet that they are sometimes used for other purposes. He then points out instances where the word "proviso" in certain particular relations may be given a different meaning.

But the entire discussion is limited to that particular word—does not once mention the words "sub conditione" or name a single instance where they are used in a sense contrary to the general rule, and even in respect to the word "proviso" the exception could not apply to the case under consideration, for it is expressly limited to a use of the word where it does not stand "originally, by and of itself."

The other authorities to which I have referred are not in any sense repugnant to the view of the law I adopt. They are few in numbers, and at the best simply hold that these apt words may, in certain instances, be restricted by immediate reference to other portions of the deed clearly expressing a different intent in the grantor. That this is true is not denied; but it does not change the general rule, and its applicability to the case under consideration will more properly be noticed hereafter.

I am, therefore, clearly of the opinion that section 8 of the act, by the express language used, created an estate upon condition-subsequent, forfeitable upon breach of the condition.

FINANCIAL MANIPULATION.

As to the financial features attendant upon the construction of this road I can do no better than quote from a speech made in the Senate this session by that stalwart and able champion of the people's rights, Hon. J. Z. GEORGE, of Mississippi. The Senator, speaking of the reorganization that took in the company in 1875, and after showing how the corporators allowed ten long years to pass by without sticking a spade in the ground or without making any visible effort to build the road, said:

Then came reorganization; and how did they reorganize? With only 530 miles of road completed, this is the way they reorganized: they reorganized by issuing to the bondholders $30,000,000 which had been spent on building these 530 miles of road in preferred stock guaranteed to pay 8 per cent. interest and $21,000,000 more of preferred stock—$51,000,000. Then what became of the balance? They could not give up this magnificent empire, and so they issued $49,000,000 of common stock to the stockholders.

My friend from Texas [Mr. COKE] a few days ago told us something of the watering of stock by the railroads of this country. I do not know whether he referred to this company or not. If he did not, when he has occasion again to say as he did then in eloquent and strong pointed language anything about the watering of stock he ought to talk about this. All other waterings of stock were mere little dews falling on the morning grass to vivify and make it fresh; but here, when the stockholders had never paid a cent, as was charged by Mr. Thurman in his speech, and he challenged Senators on the other side to show that they had ever paid a cent, they turned loose a Niagara of water into the stock of this corporation—$51,000,000 of preferred stock and $49,000,000 of common stock, $100,000,000 to represent 530 miles of completed road!

Mr. President, that is not all. Here is $100,000,000 to represent 530 miles of road, just $25,000,000 more than the Commissioner of Railroads estimates as the cost of the whole 2,000 miles.

* * * * * * *

Now let us see what else they did. This $100,000,000 of stock, preferred and common, represented $188,698 a mile of railroad built. The line built was the easiest in the world. One Senator said they had nothing to do but to stick a spade in the ground and level it a little and put the cross-ties on, and the Commissioner of Railroads put the cost at $28,000 a mile. That left $160,000 of stock to each mile of the railroad for $28,000 a mile of actual expenditure.

That was not all. They were entitled on the 530 miles to a land grant and nobody proposed to take it away from them. That land grant amounted to 10,518,756 acres. At $1 an acre—and they sold their lands at that, and those 530 miles of road were in the best part of the country, as I understand—its value was $42,075,000, or at the rate of $78,000 a mile for a road which ought not to have cost and did not cost over $28,000 a mile.

A land grant worth over twice the cost of the road and $100,000,000 of stock were the proceeds of this first operation on the property of the American people; and yet we are told that we are bound in good faith or we are bound by some sort of generosity on subjects of this sort to waive the right of the American people in order that the men who captured 530 miles of this railroad and this enormous sum may capture still more. The company reported that it cost them $40,000 a mile to build the road.

Mr. VAN WYCK. At what time was that report?

Mr. GEORGE. They reported that the first 530 miles cost $40,000 a mile.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Allow me right there to say that in 1872 there was an investigation ordered in regard to this road by the House of Representatives, if it is proper to refer to it.

Mr. TELLER. That was a past House. You can refer to that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. In that investigation this question was put:

"What has been the total cost of the work done, and the cost per mile; first, for the eastern division; second, for the western division?"

This was to Mr. J. Gregory Smith, president of the Northern Pacific at that time.

"Answer. The roadway and superstructure on 229 miles of the eastern end of the road cost $5,397,843, or $23,571 per mile; the same for the 25 miles on the west end of the road cost $714,000, or $28,560 per mile. All the elements of railroad construction cost more on the Pacific slope than on the Atlantic slope."

Mr. GEORGE. Is that their own report?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is the sworn statement of Smith, the president of the road in 1872.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no doubt that was ample, and I was going further to quote the Commissioner of Railroads.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Allow me right there——

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; I prefer to go on. I am very much disposed to oblige everybody, but I shall never get through if I keep on yielding; and I am getting weary, and I prefer to go on. I would yield to the Senator from New Jersey as soon as to anybody living, but I want to get through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. They charge $42,000 a mile in the report. I will show you how they made up that charge. It appears that in this $42,000 a mile was $1,108,278.52 or $1,900 a mile for surveys. That is a good deal for surveys of 530 miles, and it would almost build the road. The equipment was put at $2,434,346, a pretty extensive equipment, indicating, if it was an honest and just amount, the doing of an immense business on the 530 miles of railroad. Then there was $2,728,346.25 which they expended for what they called "auxiliary railroad and water lines," which they had no right, as far as I can see, to expend.

I understand that stock represents money paid into the corporate treasury. Is that right, I ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]? He nods assent. Stock represents money paid into the treasury of the corporation. Then at the end of 530 miles, with all these magnificent land grants, they had $100,000,000 stock, and according to the estimation of the Commissioner of Railroads only $75,000,000 was necessary to complete the entire road for 2,000 miles.

I think that even these poor men who happened to be so unfortunate as to get all these magnificent grants from Congress ought to have been satisfied with the gains they had then made. But suppose we go on and give them all they ask, still let us see how they will come out. Their grant, as estimated by the Commissioner of Railroads, amounts to 42,000,000 acres of land, or 65,620 square miles—a little more than twice the size of the State of Indiana, about as large as the State of Indiana and the State of Ohio combined. An empire the size of these two great States is the game for which the Northern Pacific is playing now in the American Congress and before the American people.

The Railroad Commissioner estimates these lands in 1881 as follows: They had sold, up to the 30th of June, 1880, 2,600,000 acres of this land, for $9,000,000, about $4 an acre. The rest of this land, estimated at $2.50 per acre by the Railroad Commissioner, amounts to $99,750,000; total, $108,750,000; and then the watered stock of $100,000,000; when the whole cost of the road did not exceed $75,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, I want to put before the Senate and the country some thing about the character of this railroad. Gentlemen talk about it being built over mountains and through a vast desert plain and all that sort of thing, and tell us that the immense cost justified these enormous drafts. I will read from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1869:

"The Northern Pacific presents as one of its strong claims to public attention its comparatively low summit levels. It proposes to cross the Cascade Mountains in Washington Territory by the Snoqualmie Pass, 3,000 feet above sea level, and the highest range of the Rocky Mountains by Cadotte's Pass, whose elevation of 6,167 feet may be reduced to 5,337 feet by a tunnel 2¼ miles long. Blodget's charts show that the respective points where the Northern Pacific and the Union Pacific pass the main range of the Rocky Mountains are on nearly the same winter isothermal parallel of 20° Fahrenheit, with about the same winter temperature on the adjacent plains and foot-hills, and with a summit level at Cadotte's Pass"—

That is on the Northern Pacific—

"three thousand feet lower than that at Evans's Pass"—

Which is on the Union Pacific Railroad. The Commissioner continues:

"The Northern Pacific offers a pretty safe guarantee against these formidable obstructions from snow which the more southern route has already experienced. The Northern Pacific route claims to be the shortest and most central from the tributary waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans."

Then, speaking of the company, he says:

"The undeveloped resources of this company are attracting the attention of capitalists. Its landed subsidy is double that of the Union Pacific road. Comparatively a very small proportion of its line runs through an elevated region. Governor Stevens was of the opinion that not more than one-fifth of the land from Red River to Puget Sound is inarable"—

Not fit for cultivation—

"and that this is largely made up of mountains covered with valuable timber."

Says the Commissioner:

"It is evident that an immense agricultural area is here awaiting development. The great wheat-growing regions, on the left bank of the Upper Missouri, promise speedy settlement upon the opening of an avenue for the transportation of their products to market."

That is the kind of country, four-fifths of it arable, a great wheat-producing country.

The foregoing clearly shows that this company have no ground to complain of the severity of this measure; that in fact they have never spent one dollar of their own money and have built the entire road from Government bounty.

DANGERS OF MONOPOLY.

Nearly one year to-day I addressed an audience in the city of San Francisco, and I am prompted right here to read an extract from that speech.

In 1836 Jackson aroused the people to the danger of monopoly in a message that rang like the peal of a clarion from end to end of this continent. He solemnly admonished them that their dearest rights and liberties were menaced by the great monopolistic power of that day, namely, the United States Bank. He removed the deposits and vetoed the bill rechartering the bank. Then came the mighty contest, the shock of which rocked our political fabric to its foundation. As Judge Black says of it, Jackson knew the corporators had done wrong and he would make no compromise with wrong. Do not we know our corporators have done wrong, and, if so, shall we dally or compromise with wrong? Nothing was spared to swerve him from his lofty purpose. But his steadfast and unquailing heart never knew a pulsation of doubt. The bank suddenly withdrew her discounts and pressed her debtors. This created widespread distress and ruin, and the bank pointed to Jackson as the prime cause. Committees from all over the Union waited upon him, protesting against his course; bitter complaints assailed him on all sides; two-thirds of the press, three-fourths of the orators, abused him with an acrimony of temper and a variety and recklessness of assault never before equaled; violence and assassination were threatened, but there stood Jackson, "constant as the Northern Star, of whose true, fixed, and resting quality there is no fellow in the firmament."

Well has his great eulogist Judge Black said of him: "The electric chain of communication between him and the people was still unbroken, and whatever link of that chain was struck by his master hand the response was a deep thrill of sympathy from the hearts of millions. His steady and fearless voice was ever heard above the din of conflict and it went over the land like the tones of a trumpet ringing full on the ear, banishing doubt, inspiring confidence, and swelling the hearts of the people with a foretaste of victory."

He pointed out the incalculable power wielded by those moneyed institutions with their $35,000,000 of capital, and controlling $70,000,000 of indebtedness. The danger, at that time, was tangible, ominous, and it startled the nation by its gigantic proportions. It was promptly grappled, met by that intrepid old hero and those whom he marshaled in his train, beaten down, and overthrown. If the danger really existed at that time, what shall be said of that which threatens us to-day? Thirty-five million dollars appalled the stout heart of Jackson.

A combination representing hundreds of millions have inaugurated the crusade against your rights and liberties, and it reaches out with the arms of the fabled Briareus in countless directions. It is seen in every phase of life that confronts us—moral, social, political. In the highways, in the marts of commerce, in the counting-house and shop, at the fireside, in every pursuit, trade, and avocation, the sorcery of this all-prevading and infernal influence is felt. It is as widespread as the winds, and its universality is as the light of the opening of day. You have seen it, as we all have; you have seen what you have presumed to be the keenest sense of honor, the highest obligations, the most solemn ties of gratitude or friendship, the dearest affections, everything that you revere, love, or cherish, fade and wither at the touch of corporate power or like the flower before the sirocco's breath; while laws, ordinances, and constitutions are but as cobwebs in the pathway of its consuming desires.

I defy contradiction upon the asseveration. It is within the knowledge and profound belief of every one who listens that these corporations have habitually, by money, controlled primary elections, suborned conventions, and purchased Legislatures ever since their origin, and now I ask you, my countrymen, how long this thing shall last. It is a disgrace that burns so deeply, an iniquity so monstrous that upon every side it uprears its crest and challenges our attention in tones that we dare not deny. [Loud applause.] Of course, in addressing you thus, I know what the penalty is going to be. It will be fraught with nothing that I can contemplate with unconcern. The assaults upon me will intensify in fierceness, but through no merit or seeking of my own, the logic of events has cast upon me a duty from which I can not escape without dishonor, and I shall take no step in retrogression, come what may. And I confess to you that I do not say this without trepidation. I know the power of constant, unsparing, and remorseless detraction. I know what it has accomplished in former times and with others, and I have no reason to doubt of its malign efficacy today. I may, and probably will, be finally overborne, find myself circumvented, baffled, with my influence and power destroyed or materially abridged; but somebody else will be my successor, able, more capable, and will find some of the work already accomplished.

Besides, my overthrow is of trivial moment and does not weigh even as the dust in the balance compared with those mighty issues, the evolution of which now progresses and will soon confront with solemn and portentous aspect for permanent solution this American people. The brutal and arbitrary exercise of power, the scornful disregard by its possessors of the rights of those who are enthralled from the beginning of time, has brought upon itself, sooner or later, atonement, expiation, justice. Lurid, dark, and ghastly, we summon from the chambers of our memory a recollection of the unimaginable excesses of the French Revolution, when for eighteen never-to-be-forgotten months the streets of Paris were red and slippery with carnage, and, as a writer describes it, "the sun's eye had a sickly glare and the world grew faint with horror." Abnormal causes produce like results.

The signs of the times are not to be mistaken; mutterings of discontent are heard throughout the land; a cloud heavy and dark with a people's wrath overspreads the sky, and the red bolt of retribution threatens soon to descend and scathe these transgressors. In many States besides our own the law has been cloven down and lies prone beneath the parted and satanic hoof of corporate insolence and greed. But time wears apace; the handwriting upon the wall is visible, but not, my friends, by violence or the inauguration of chaos—not in the wild swirl of physical strife nor with the concommitants of havoc or the destruction of property, but peacefully, calmly—with that majesty that befits a great cause; but inexorably these corporations will be reduced to subordination, to justice, and to law. And this revolution, though peaceful, is, as I have said, near at hand. "It comes with a force that nothing can stay; a force that is so stupendous that it can only be likened to the great ocean when it lifts itself beneath a darkened sky and a rolling thunder and resists everything short of the Supreme Power with an elemental force and fury that defies the expedients of carping man."

Never again say, as I have heard said: "Don't quarrel with the railroad, temporize with them or with money they will beat us." Oh, fatal, false, perfidious words! Even if they were true, could they speak who have gone before us, who have passed to the "realms of shade," they would tell us as our own manhood tells, that better, a thousand times better, to go down fighting like free men, than to live in servitude, than to live lifting to the gaze of mankind our wrists encircled with the galling manacles of a willing degradation. [Loud and continued applause.] But it is not true. The fear is begotten of abjectness and cowardice. Never tell me that the gallant, free, chivalric, hospitable, cultivated people of America are, when the battle comes, to be dragged at the chariot wheels of monopoly, and that money has so debauched or devitalized their lofty, imperial manhood. Never say that money can control our elections. The record belies the assumption. Whenever the test has been fairly made the corporations have been defeated. Their impotency was demonstrated in last election, when money was lavished without stint, and every one for sale was purchased. He lies in his throat and slanders our people who asserts it. And I deny it. In the name of an educated, Christianized people I deny it; in the name of bright-eyed Truth; in the name of the dauntless, invincible spirit of Democracy; in the name of the on-rushing, stalwart, ever-progressive genius of American civilization, I deny this allegation, and denounce it as the slanderous outgrowth of either the hopeless pessimist or corporation sycophant.

Therefore I say again to you, my friends, stop this folly. Tear from your bosoms this loathsome fetichism, this frightful superstition, which has lured you on and on until you have found yourselves prostrate before an idol falser than hell, fouler to the sight than the beast of the Apocalypse, and whose votaries can not worship at the same shrine with freemen, whose ministrations are death to free government, and the incense from whose altar is a poisonous stench in the nostrils of Democracy. [Cheers.] Together then let us gird up our loins; together we will storm the temple of this base and paltry idol. Aye, by the beard we will drag him from his unclean sanctuary, disrobed and unsceptered; and then this grand constellated sisterhood of States will look upon the vision prefigured by the blazing genius of Milton: "Methinks I see a noble and puissant nation arousing herself like a giant and shaking her invincible locks; methinks I see her as an eagle, renewing her mighty youth and kindling her undazzled eyes in the full midday beam."

Sir, as we have seen in other days and generations, humanity has been beaten down, humiliated, and oppressed, and has finally turned upon their oppressors. From the speech of the eloquent Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] I am furnished a suggestion. I am minded, sir, to read a page from that wizard of literature, Charles Dickens, in his wonderful creation entitled A Tale of Two Cities. While something may be conceded to the advance of thought and the humanizing tendencies of widely disseminated education, yet the railway magnate of to-day, in his disregard of natural right and the imperial reach of his ambition and sway, presents many points in common with his predecessor, the marquis of the last century.

Yes. It took four men, all four ablaze with gorgeous decoration, and the chief of them unable to exist with fewer than two gold watches in his pocket, emulative of the noble and chaste fashion set by Monseigneur, to conduct the happy chocolate to Monseigneur's lips. One lackey carried the chocolate pot into the sacred presence; a second milled and frothed the chocolate with the little instrument he bore for that function; a third presented the favored napkin; a fourth (he of the two gold watches), poured the chocolate out. It was impossible for Monseigneur to dispense with one of these attendants on the chocolate and hold his high place under the admiring heavens. Deep would have been the blot upon his escutcheon if his chocolate had been ignobly waited on by only three men; he must have died of two.

Monseigneur had been out at a little supper last night, where the Comedy and the Grand Opera were charmingly represented. Monseigneur was out at a little supper most nights, with fascinating company. So polite and so impressible was Monseigneur, that the Comedy and the Grand Opera had far more influence with him in the tiresome articles of State affairs and State secrets, than the needs of all France. A happy circumstance for France, as the like always is for all countries similarly favored—always was for England (by way of example) in the regretted days of the merry Stuart who sold it.

Monseigneur had one truly noble idea of general public business, which was, to let everything go on in its own way; of particular public business, Monseigneur had the other truly noble idea that it must all go his way—tend to his own power and pocket. Of his pleasures, general and particular, Monseigneur had the other truly noble idea, that the world was made for them. The text of his order (altered from the original by only a pronoun, which is not much) ran: "The earth and the fullness thereof are mine, saith Monseigneur."

Yet Monseigneur had slowly found that vulgar embarrassments crept into his affairs, both private and public; and he had, as to both classes of affairs, allied himself perforce with the Farmer-general. As to finances public, because Monseigneur could not make anything at all of them, and must consequently let them out to somebody who could; as to finances private, because Farmer-generals were rich, and Monseigneur, after generations of great luxury and expense, was growing poor. Hence Monseigneur had taken his sister from a convent, while there was yet time to ward off in the impending veil, the cheapest garment she could wear, and had bestowed her as a prize upon a very rich Farmer-general, poor in family. Which Farmer-general, carrying an appropriate cane with a golden apple on the top of it, was now among the company in the outer rooms, much prostrated before by mankind—always excepting superior mankind of the blood of Monseigneur, who, his own wife included, looked down upon him with the loftiest contempt.

* * * * * * *

Monseigneur having eased his four men of their burdens and taken his chocolate, caused the doors of the holiest of holiests to be thrown open, and issued forth. Then, what submission, what cringing and fawning, what servility, what abject humiliation! As to bowing down in body and spirit nothing in that way was left for Heaven—which may have been one among other reasons why the worshipers of Monseigneur never troubled it. Bestowing a word of promise here and a smile there, a whisper on one happy slave and a wave of the hand on another, Monseigneur affably passed through his rooms to the remote region of the Circumference of Truth. There, Monseigneur turned, and came back again, and so in due course of time got himself shut up in his sanctuary by the chocolate sprites, and was seen no more.

* * * * * * *

Its owner [the marquis] went down-stairs into the court-yard, got into his carriage, and drove away. Not many people had talked with him at the reception; he had stood in a little space apart, and Monseigneur might have been warmer in his manner. It appeared, under the circumstances, rather agreeable to him to see the common people dispersed before his horses, and often barely escaping from being run down. His man drove as if he were charging an enemy, and the furious recklessness of the man brought no check into the face or to the lips of the master. The complaint had sometimes made itself audible, even in that deaf city and dumb age, that in the narrow streets without footways the fierce patrician custom of hard driving endangered and maimed the mere vulgar in a barbarous manner. But few cared enough for that to think of it a second time, and in this matter, as in all others, the common wretches were left to get out of their difficulties as they could.

With a wild rattle and clatter, and an inhuman abandonment of consideration not easy to be understood in these days, the carriage dashed through streets and swept round corners, with women screaming before it, and men clutching each other and clutching children out of its way. At last, swooping at a street corner by a fountain, one of its wheels came to a sickening little jolt, and there was a loud cry from a number of voices, and the horses reared and plunged. But for the latter inconvenience the carriage probably would not have stopped; carriages were often known to drive on, and leave their wounded behind, and why not? But the frightened valet had got down in a hurry, and there were twenty hands at the horses' bridles.

"What has gone wrong?" said Monsieur, calmly looking out.

A tall man in a nightcap had caught up a bundle from among the feet of the horses, and had laid it on the basement of the fountain, and was down in the mud and wet, howling over it like a wild animal.

"Pardon, Monsieur the Marquis!" said a ragged and submissive man, "it is a child."

"Why does he make that abominable noise? Is it his child?"

"Excuse me, Monsieur the Marquis—it is a pity—yes."

The fountain was a little removed; for the street opened, where it was, into a space some 10 or 12 yards square. As the tall man suddenly got up from the ground, and came running at the carriage, Monsieur the Marquis clapped his hand for an instant on his sword-hilt.

"Killed!" shrieked the man, in wild desperation, extending both arms at their length above his head and staring at him. "Dead!"

The people closed round and looked at Monsieur the Marquis. There was nothing revealed by the many eyes that looked at him but watchfulness and eagerness; there was no visible menacing or anger. Neither did the people say anything; after the first cry they had been silent, and they remained so. The voice of the submissive man who had spoken was flat and tame in its extreme submission. Monsieur the Marquis ran his eyes over them all, as if they had been mere rats come out of their holes.

He took out his purse.

"It is extraordinary to me," said he, "that you people can not take care of yourselves and your children. One or the other of you is forever in the way. How do I know what injury you have done my horses. See! Give him that."

He threw out a gold coin for the valet to pick up, and all the heads craned forward that all the eyes might look down at it as it fell. The tall man called out again with a most unearthly cry, "Dead!"

He was arrested by the quick arrival of another man, for whom the rest made way. On seeing him, the miserable creature fell upon his shoulder, sobbing and crying, and pointing to the fountain, where some women were stooping over the motionless bundle, and moving gently about it. They were as silent, however, as the men.

"I know all, I know all," said the last comer. "Be a brave man, my Gaspard! It is better for the poor little plaything to die so than to live. It has died in a moment without pain. Could it have lived an hour as happily?"

"You are a philosopher, you there," said the Marquis, smiling. "How do they call you?"

"They call me Defarge."

"Of what trade?"

"Monsieur the Marquis, vendor of wine."

"Pick up that, philosopher and vendor of wine," said the Marquis, throwing him another gold coin, "and spend it as you will. The horses there; are they right?"

Without deigning to look at the assemblage a second time, Monsieur the Marquis leaned back in his seat, and was just being driven away with the air of a gentleman who had accidentally broken some common thing, and had paid for it, and could afford to pay for it, when his ease was suddenly disturbed by a coin flying into his carriage, and ringing on its floor.

"Hold!" said Monsieur the Marquis. "Hold the horses! Who threw that?"

He looked to the spot where Defarge the vendor of wine had stood a moment before; but the wretched father was groveling on his face on the pavement in that spot, and the figure that stood beside him was the figure of a dark, stout woman, knitting.

"You dogs!" said the Marquis, but smoothly, and with an unchanged front except as to the spots on his nose: "I would ride over any of you very willingly and exterminate you from the earth. If I knew which rascal threw at the carriage, and if that brigand were sufficiently near it, he should be crushed under the wheels."

So cowed was their condition, and so long and hard their experience of what such a man could do to them, within the law and beyond it, that not a voice, or a hand, or even an eye was raised.

The foregoing, though professing to be a fiction, is conceded by all students of history to be a true portraiture of the condition of things at that time.

Is there no moral to be drawn from all this? Must we stand idly by, in the face of all our professions, and do nothing to abate the evils resulting from corporate power that seem to multiply every day? I hope not.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the time for this House to hesitate or falter in its onward course in this matter of land forfeiture. We have thus far done good work. Right nobly have we responded to the obligations of our platforms. Thus far the Public Lands Committee has considered and favorably reported and has on the Calendar now ready for action the following bills: The Atlantic and Pacific grant; Memphis and Charleston Railroad; Savannah and Albany Company; the Southern Pacific; the Northern Pacific; the Ontonagon and Wisconsin State Line; the Oregon and California; the California and Oregon; the Houghton, Marquette and Ontonagon; the Ontonagon and Brulé River; the Mobile and Girard Company.

The foregoing embraces over 70,000,000 of acres to be reclaimed from the corporations and returned to the people.

Then, gentlemen, I adjure you, stand to your promises now, stand to them ever. Renew in yourselves the purer and better days of your party and of the Republic. Reclaim this vast area of land for your countrymen and for their wives and children. They ask it, and it is for you to award it. And remember, if in this beautiful country of ours, whose landscape to-day laughs in its exuberant and abounding fertility, there be disquiet and unrest; if it be true that the affluence of the few waxes and the independence of the many wanes; if there be "sloth in the mart and schism in the temple;" if the omnipotence of wealth has indeed undermined the people's faith in the integrity of the judiciary, than which nothing can be more ominous of ill in a free government; if in many instances justice has been cloven down and dragged from its high eminence by the hand of official malversation; if Congress has come to be regarded in the last twenty years as the arena for the employment of those malign agencies that thrive and fatten upon wrongdoing and misrule; if within sight of the palatial home may be heard ascending to Heaven from poverty's wan lips the unavailing prayer for bread; if the millionaire's invocation for the law's protection be sometimes drowned by the starving laborer's malediction upon a system that denies him the means of decent sustenance; if peace and content, the offspring of requited toil, find no longer an abiding-place at the hearthstone of labor; if the bomb-thrower, if the mad, insensate spirit of the Old World that impels men to the wanton destruction of life and property has found a lodgment with us; if, in other words, the red specter of communism has dared to imprint its cloven hoof and uprear its hideous crest upon American soil; if these things have gone on and on and on until the heart sickens and the pulses of the nation throb with apprehension of some vague, unspoken, undefined disaster; if any or all of these things be true, then remember, Representatives, that the primary, substantial cause therefor is to be found in the concentration of colossal fortunes in the hands of the few, which, in turn, was caused by those enormous gifts of the public lands, one of which gifts this measure is designed to reclaim. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

The message also announced that the Senate agreed to the resolution of the House of Representatives of July 17 to print the annual report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States, with amendments, requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the said resolution and amendments, and had appointed Mr. GORMAN, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. HAWLEY the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment (two-thirds agreeing therein) the bill (H. R. 7881) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas R. Ware, of Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 22) authorizing the preparation of a compilation of the reports of committees of the Senate and House of Representatives; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 142) authorizing and directing the Commissioner of Labor to make an investigation as to convict labor, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, joint resolution (H. Res. 160) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 15,000 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for printing 2,500 additional copies of the report of the electrical conference at Philadelphia in 1884, for the use of the Department of State.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for printing 6,000 additional copies of the official opinions of the Attorneys-General of the United States from 1789 to 1881, to which shall be added a digest of such official opinions from 1881 to the date of publication.

The message also requested the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide for terms of court in Colorado.

NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND-GRANT FORFEITURE.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt, as gentlemen have said, that both political parties come here pledged to restore to the public domain all of such lands as have been granted but not earned by the grantees, and for one, sir, I came here to fulfill that pledge, and so I believe did every member of this House. Now, sir, the history of land-grant legislation is perhaps the most singular chapter in the legislative history of this country. It is true that between about 1860 and 1870 Congress voted away the public lands with the utmost profusion and recklessness. It is also true that shortly after that time the tide turned, and to-day we are feeling the force of the refluent wave. So strong is the demand among the people that lands not earned shall be restored to the public domain that it has been formulated as a plank in I believe each political platform. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen can not frighten me from my legal position by intimating that I am not standing upon that platform if I take a view of the law and of the equity of the case different from that taken by other gentlemen. As time is limited, I will come at once to the point. I take it we all wish to forfeit these lands so far as they are forfeitable. I take it that we wish, all of us, to restore all of them that ought to be restored to the public domain. For one I certainly do. There is, however, a difference in men's minds about this question of "earned lands"—a difference in the minds of the members of the Committee on Public Lands—and I will state it briefly.

The majority of the committee hold that where lands have been granted to aid, for instance, in the construction of a railroad, if the entire road has not been completed within the time fixed, the entire grant is forfeitable, utterly regardless of any rights or equities that may have grown up.

A MEMBER. Except the road-bed.

Mr. VAN EATON. Except the road-bed. They, however, qualify that position to the extent of saying that for reasons of public policy they do not favor forfeiting the lands coterminous with the portions of the road completed within time, as it is called. The view of the minority of the committee, and the view, as I understand, of other gentlemen upon this floor is, that where the road has been completed strictly in accordance with the law, strictly in accordance with the terms of the granting act, whether in time or out of time, even if built after the time limited for the completion of the whole road, if that road has been examined, accepted, and certified to the company before any steps have been taken by the Government to declare the lands forfeited, then the granted lands coterminous with the portions of the road so completed are earned lands, and not to be forfeited.

Mr. Speaker, I hold not only that this view is correct, in accordance with law and in accordance with right, but I take the further position that it has been emphatically sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in every word, line, and letter that the minority claim, and to that I shall now address the argument. Understand me. Wherever any portion of the road has been completed without any attempt at forfeiture, where it has been constructed according to law, strictly according to the bond, and examined, accepted, and certified, although out of time, the coterminous lands, whether patented or not, are lands upon which we have no right to lay our hands. I propose to show that the Supreme Court of the United States has already decided this point, so that it is now the settled law of the land; and I propose to show that the decisions of the Supreme Court are in exact accord with what the minority of the committee claim, and what I understand to be claimed by many members on this floor.

Let us, in the first place, examine the grant. It is contained in the act of July 2, 1864, 13 Statutes, 362, and reads as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the "Northern Pacific Railroad Company," its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores, over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as said company may adopt, through the Territories of the United States, and ten alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad whenever it passes through any State, and whenever on the line thereof, the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption, or other claims or rights, at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed, and a plat thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and whenever, prior to said time, any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, or pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections, and designated by odd numbers, not more than 10 miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections: Provided, That if said route shall be found upon the line of any other railroad route to aid in the construction of which lands have been heretofore granted by the United States, as far as the routes are upon the the same general line, the amount of land heretofore granted shall be deducted from the amount granted by this act.

Wherever the lands are referred to in succeeding sections they are spoken of as "the lands hereby granted." Now, as to the decisions of the Supreme Court, I commence with the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, reported in 21 Wallace. The grant in that case was to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a railroad, and the language of the granting act was the same as in the case of this Northern Pacific grant, "that there be and is hereby granted," &c. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is important to notice the condition of things when the circumstances took place out which this controversy grew. The grahting language, as I said, is identical in both these acts. In the case to which this decision relates, when the trouble arose out of which the lawsuit grew, there had not been one single foot of the road constructed, and the time limited for its construction had expired. That was the condition of things, the land having been granted to the State by this language, "be and is hereby granted." The time limited had expired without the road being built. Harriman was the agent of the State. Schulenberg went upon the land and cut logs. Harriman seized them. Schulenberg brought replevin, and in that way the case went to the Supreme Court, and the court decided that the title to the lands remained in the State. Why?

The Supreme Court, on page 59 of the volume which I hold in my hand, 21 Wallace, in speaking of this question, say:

The company named in the act never constructed any portion of the road; and there is no evidence the State ever exercised the power to sell, &c.

Now, what does the Supreme Court say about that grant—a grant of the identical sort that we have here in the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad? I ask the Clerk to read from page 60 the passage I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

First. That the act of Congress of June 3, 1856, passed a present interest in the lands designated there can be no doubt. The language used imports a present grant, and admits of no other meaning. The language of the first section is "that there be and is hereby granted to the State of Wisconsin" the lands specified. The third section declares "that the said lands hereby granted to said State shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof;" and the fourth section provides in what manner sales shall be made and enacts that if the road shall not be completed in ten years "no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States." The power of disposal and the provision for the lands reverting both imply what the first section in terms declares, that a grant is made, that is, that the title is transferred to the State. It is true that the route of the railroad, for the construction of which the grant was made, was yet to be designated, and until such designation the title did not attach to any specific tracts of land. The title passed to the sections, to be afterward located; when the route was fixed their location became certain, and the title, which was previously imperfect, acquired precision and became attached to the land.

In the case of Rutherford vs. Greene's Heirs, reported in 2 Wheaton, a similar construction was given by this court to an act of North Carolina passed in 1782, which provided that 25,000 acres of land should be allotted and given to General Greene and his heirs within the limits of a tract reserved for the use of the Army, to be laid off by commissioners appointed for that purpose. The commissioners, pursuant to the directions of the act, allotted the 25,000 acres, and caused the quantity to be surveyed and the survey to be returned to the proper office, and the questions raised in the case related to the validity of the title of General Greene and the date at which it commenced. The court held that the general gift of 25,000 acres lying in the territory reserved became by the survey a particular gift of the quantity contained in the survey, and concluded an extended examination of the title by stating that it was the clear and unanimous opinion of the court that the act of 1872 vested a title in General Greene to the 25,000 acres, to be laid off whithin the bounds designated, and that the survey made in pursuance of the act gave precision to that title and attached it to the land surveyed.

On the 6th of March, 1820, Congress passed an act for the admission of Missouri into the Union, and among other regulations to aid the new State enacted "that four entire sections of land be, and the same are hereby, granted to said State for the purpose of fixing the seat of government thereon, which said sections shall, under the direction of the Legislature of said State, be located as near as may be in one body, at any time, in such townships and ranges as the Legislature aforesaid may select, on any of the public lands of the United States." In Lessieur vs. Price, reported in the twelfth of Howard, the operation of this act was considered, and the court said:

The land was granted by the act of 1820; it was a present grant, wanting identity to make it perfect; and the Legislature was vested with full power to select and locate the land; and we need only say here, what was substantially said by this court in the case of Rutherford vs. Greene's Heirs, that the act of 1820 vested a title in the State of Missouri of four sections, and that the selection made by the State Legislature pursuant to the act of Congress, and the notice given of such location to the surveyor-general and the register of the local district where the land lay, gave precision to the title, and attached to it the land selected. The United States assented to this mode of proceeding, nor can an individual call it in question.

Numerous other decisions might be cited to the same purport. They establish the conclusion that unless there are other clauses in a statute restraining the operation of words of present grant, these must be taken in their natural sense to import an immediate transfer of title, although subsequent proceedings may be required to give precision to that title and attach it to specific tracts. No individual can call in question the validity of the proceeding by which precision is thus given to the title where the United States are satisfied with them.

The rules applicable to private transactions, which regard grants of future application, of lands to be afterward designated, as mere contracts to convey, and not as actual conveyances, are founded upon the common law, which requires the possibility of present identification of property to the validity of its transfer. A legislative grant operates as a law as well as a transfer of the property, and has such force as the intent of the Legislature requires.

The case of Rice vs. Railroad Company, reported in 1 Black, does not conflict with these views. The words of present grant in the first section of the act there under consideration were restrained by a provision in a subsequent section declaring that the title should not vest in the Territory of Minnesota until the road or portions of it were built.

Mr. VAN EATON. I have had that read to show, and the majority of the committee admit it in their report, that this sort of a grant is a grant in præsenti with a condition subsequent; that is to say, the title passes eo instanti when the act is approved.

Mr. CASWELL. And without any reversionary clause.

Mr. VAN EATON. And in this case without any reversionary clause. I will come to that directly. The Supreme Court hold that although a definite line of location is required to give the grant precision, yet the title passed out of the grantor and into the grantee at the date of the approval of the act. This being the case, what rights has the grantee and when do those rights terminate?

I pause right here to remark that it has been held in both ends of this Capitol by committees of both bodies, by lawyers, by everybody who has ever discussed the question as a lawyer so far as I know—it has been held on all hands until a recent date that this is just that sort of a grant, a grant passing the title at once with a condition-subsequent. In these latter days it has been assumed by some that it is a grant upon condition-precedent, and that the title never passed until the condition was performed, and even the case of Rice vs. The Railroad Company has been quoted to sustain that doctrine.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me this question? Has he considered in this connection the act of July 1, 1868, in which it is provided—

That section 8 of an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast," is hereby so amended as to read as follows: That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: that the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from and after the 2d day of July, 1868, and shall complete not less than 100 miles per year after the second year thereafter, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1877.

Mr. VAN EATON. Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker, I have considered all that.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the express condition on which the grant was made.

Mr. VAN EATON. No, sir; the grant had been made long before that.

Mr. HOLMAN. But had the road been constructed?

Mr. VAN EATON. This was an added burden placed upon this road, and had nothing to do with the grant, because the title had already passed. If the title had passed what could any subsequent legislation do to affect what had already taken place, except to resume the grant, &c.?

Mr. HOLMAN. This provision was put upon the law before the road was constructed.

Mr. VAN EATON. I can not yield; I have not the time. If the gentleman will get the House to vote down the previous question, if it should be called at 3 o'clock, he will have just as much time as he wants; but I can not now yield further.

I was saying that in these late days it has been held, and sometimes in high quarters, that this is a grant upon a condition-precedent, and the case of Rice vs. The Railroad Company has even been quoted in support of that doctrine. But in this case the Supreme Court considers that question and brushes it aside as having nothing to do with this sort of a grant. Why? Because in that particular case after the granting words "be and are hereby granted" it was subsequently provided in that case in express terms that no title should pass until certain things had been done and so much of the road completed.

Mr. STRUBLE. Does the gentleman refer to the Wisconsin grant?

Mr. VAN EATON. I am referring to the case of Rice vs. The Railroad Company, which was discussed by the court in the case of Schulenburg vs. Harriman; and the court shows distinctly that the two grants were not of the same class, for the reason that in Rice vs. The Railroad Company the words "be and are hereby granted" in the first section were restricted by a provision in a subsequent section declaring that the title should not vest until the road or certain portions of it had been completed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having established that this is a present grant, conveying a title at once with a condition-subsequent, the next question is, what happens if the condition-subsequent is broken? Very strange to say up to the time of this decision it had been held, I believe, to a very great extent by the profession that in a case where the granting act provided that if the road should not be built within a certain time the lands should revert, that the lands reverted ipso facto on the termination of the time designated.

Surely if lawyers had looked into the law relating to this subject more carefully they would never have come to such a conclusion as that. Let us see what the Supreme Court has to say on that subject:

The provision in the act of Congress of 1856 that the lands remaining unsold after ten years shall revert to the United States if the roads be not then completed is no more than the grant shall be void if the condition-subsequent be not fulfilled.

There was the plain provision—not found in the granting act to the Northern Pacific—that the land should revert and no further sales should be made if the road was not built in time, in ten years. When this time elapsed and the road was not built, then what? The Supreme Court holds that the provision against further sales in that event adds nothing to the force of the provision, and if the condition be not enforced the power to sell continues as before the breach. Mark the language—limited only by the object of the grant. What was the object of the grant? To build the road. They said in a preceding page the sale never could be made so as to pass title only as the road is built. Here they say, although the time is out, although the time in which the road was to be built has long since passed, if there has been no entry on the part of the grantor the power to sell continues as before its breach limited only by the object of the grant.

I think up to this point I have established two steps in this argument: First, the character of the grant, being a present grant on a condition-subsequent; secondly, when the condition is broken the grantee may then comply with the condition and earn the grant if the grantor stands by and allows it to be done. I think that is decided emphatically.

I should have remarked, but being hurried I overlooked it when I started, and I shall take occasion to do so now, that in this case the road was completed to the Missouri River—to Bismarck—within the time limited, July 4, 1879. It is true the grant was made on the 2d of July, 1866, and the road was to be completed by July 4, 1876, but it was afterward extended, by law and by construction of the Interior Department, until the time for building the road was said to be July 4, 1879.

Mr. PAYSON. That was under numerous Congressional extensions.

Mr. VAN EATON. I said that by acts of Congress and departmental constructions it might go on until the 4th of July, 1879. This road was completed to Bismarck in time. After the time, I admit it, the road was built to Wallula. From Wallula to Portland, 214 miles, the company leased a road which they found completed between those points. From Portland to Tacoma they built their road. They are now engaged in the construction of what is called the Cascade branch. There is no dispute about the facts. There is no dispute except as to the law.

Now, having shown why the minority of the committee hold as we do, let me read further. This decision of the Supreme Court has been criticised. I have heard men, not lawyers, speak of it in terms of great opprobrium. I have heard lawyers assert if the Supreme Court had the chance again they would decide differently; reverse their decision in Schulenberg vs. Harrimon. Let us see whether that is possible. The Supreme Court on page 63 say:

> The prohibition against further sales, if the road be not completed within the period prescribed, adds nothing to the force of the provision. A cessation of sales in that event is implied in the condition that the lands shall then revert; if the condition be not enforced the power to sell continues as before its breach, limited only by the objects of the grant and the manner of sale prescribed in the act.
> And it is settled law that no one can take advantage of the non-performance of a condition-subsequent annexed to an estate in fee, but the grantor or his heirs, or the successors of the grantor if the grant proceed from an artificial person; and if they do not see fit to assert their right to enforce a forfeiture on that ground the title remains unimpaired in the grantee. The authorities on this point, with hardly an exception, are all one way from the Year Books down. And the same doctrine obtains where the grant upon condition proceeds from the Government; no individual can assail the title it has conveyed on the ground that the grantee has failed to perform the conditions annexed.
> In what manner the reserved right of the grantor for breach of the condition must be asserted so as to restore the estate depends upon the character of the grant. If it be a private grant, that right must be asserted by entry or its equivalent. If the grant be a public one it must be asserted by judicial proceedings authorized by law, the equivalent of an inquest of office at common law, finding the fact of forfeiture and adjudging the restoration of the estate on that ground, or there must be some legislative assertion of ownership of the property for breach of the condition, such as an act directing the possession and appropriation of the property, or that it be offered for sale or settlement. At common law the sovereign could not make an entry in person, and, therefore, and office-found was necessary to determine the estate, but, as said by this court in a late case, "the mode of asserting or of resuming the ferfeited grant is subject to the legislative authority of the Government. It may after judicial investigation, or by taking possession directly under the authority of the Government without these preliminary proceedings." In the present case no action has been taken either by legislation or judicial proceedings to enforce a forfeiture of the estate granted by the acts of 1856 and 1864. The title remains, therefore, in the State as completely as it existed on the day when the title by location of the route of the railroad acquired precision and became attached to the adjoining alternate sections.

Mr. PAYSON. The same title they had by act of Congress.

Mr. VAN EATON. Why, of course.

Mr. PAYSON. Precisely.

Mr. VAN EATON. And by the act of Congress they had a right to build the road. They have the same right to build it if the Government did not see fit to enforce the forfeiture of the grant that they had in the beginning. The title remains unimpaired in the grantee. But if there is a possibility of being mistaken in that point there are two other points to which I desire to call attention. In 12 Howard I find this in the case of The Propeller Genesee Chief et al. vs. Fitzhugh et al., and which I believe first laid down the doctrine in referencs to maritime law as applicable to fresh-water rivers and lakes. The Supreme Court had previously decided differently in the case of the Thomas Jefferson. In the present case the court go on to hold, page 76:

> The case of the Thomas Jefferson did not decide any question of property or lay down any rule by which the right of property should be determined. If it had we should have felt ourselves bound to follow it, notwithstanding the opinion we have expressed. For every one would suppose that after the decision of this court in a matter of that kind he might safely enter into contracts upon the faith that rights thus acquired would not be disturbed. In such a case stare decisis is the safe and established rule of judicial policy and should always be adhered to. For if the law as pronounced by the court ought not to stand, it is in the power of the Legislature to amend it without imparing rights acquired under it.
> But the decision referred to has no relation to rights of property. It was a question of jurisdiction only, and the judgment we now give can disturb no rights of property nor interfere with any contracts heretofore made. The rights of property and of parties will be the same by whatever court the law is administered.
> And as we are convinced that the former decision was founded in error and that the error, if not corrected, must produce serious public as well as private inconvenience and loss, it becomes our duty not to perpetuate it.

Under this decision (Schulenberg vs. Harrimon) rights have been acquired, rights innumerable, and that would be the reason why the Supreme Court, even if it were not the established law, would never interfere. But, again, I hold in my hand a letter from the Interior Department written by Commissioner Sparks, in which he holds this language; he was answering a question:

> The rights of the State and of the company claiming under the State were not vacated by the failure to complete the road within the time required. In the case of Schulenberg vs. Harrimon (21 Wallace, 44) the Supreme Court of the United States held that until some action be taken either by legislation or judicial proceedings to enforce a forfeiture of the grant, the title remains in the State as completely as it did on the day that it took effect by the location of the road.
> The Department has been, and is now, governed by that decision in all cases to which it is applicable, and in view thereof it is not seen how the grant can be considered as "vacated" until a forfeiture of the same has been declared.

Then, the point is this: That since the decision of the case in Schulenberg against Harriman, rendered in 1874, this has been the accepted doctrine upon which the Interior Department and the Commissioner of the General Land Office have acted namely, that the grantee company may go on and build their road just as well after the ten years (or the time limited) had expired as before, and the constant practice is that when the road is built in sections each section, say, of 25 miles for instance, as completed is examined by special examiners sent out by the President, who report the fact of the completion within the terms of the law; and I repeat that has been the practice and still remains the practice, and that is just what has been done in this particular case.

My text, so to speak, is that these lands can not be forfeited, and that is what I promised to prove. Having gone as far as I have with reference to the nature and effect of the grant, I want to call attention to another decision that in my opinion settles beyond all possibility of controversy the correctness of the position I assume with reference to the language of this grant. I refer now to the case of Van Wyck vs. Knevals (106 United States Rep., page 368). This is a very important decision in connection with the argument I am making, because if there is anything that has been left out as far as I have gone with these decisions, it is completed or supplemented in this case. I quote now from the case to which I have referred, 106 United States Rep., 16 Otto. In this case it was provided, and I want it distinctly understood—but I had better read the language:

> The third section provides that the lands granted "shall inure to the benefit of said company as follows: When the governor of the State of Kansas shall certify that any section of 10 consecutive miles of said road is completed in good, substantial, and workmanlike manner as a first-class railroad, then the Secretary of the Interior shall issue to the said company patents for so many sections of said land hereinbefore granted as lie opposite to and coterminous with the said completed sections, and when certificates of the governor aforesaid shall be presented to the Secretary of the completion as aforesaid of each successive section of 10 consecutive miles of said road the said Secretary shall in like manner issue to said company patents for the said sections of said lands as aforesaid for each of said sections of road until said road shall be completed: Provided, That if said railroad company or its assigns shall fail to complete at least one section of said road each year from the date of its acceptance of the grant provided for in this act, then its right to the lands for said section so failing of completion shall revert to the Government of the United States: Provided further, That if said road is not completed within ten years from the date of the acceptance of the grant hereinbefore made, the lands remaining unpatented shall revert to the United States."

What I wish to remark in this connection is this, and it will be seen by the language of the granting act, that if this road was not completed within the ten years the unpatented lands should revert to the United States. The Supreme Court held that all the lands coterminous with the completed portion of the road belonged to it, whether patented to it or not, and right in the face of the language of the granting act.

> The defendant having failed to establish the validity of his own title, attacks the right of the company to the lands covered by the grant, alleging that the company never completed the construction of the entire road for which the grant was made; that after filing its map with the Secretary of the Interior it changed, for part of the distance, the route of the road, and that it never complied with the conditions of the laws of Nebraska for the extension of its road within the limits of that State.
> We do not deem these objections when considered with the facts on which they are based as having any force. There is to them a ready and conclusive answer. Assuming that the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad with which the company's road connected was not, as averred by the complainant, a branch of the Union Pacific Railroad, and that, therefore, the company's proposed road was not entirely completed the fact remains that the company constructed a portion of the proposed road, and that portion was accepted as completed in the manner required by the act of Congress. Patents for some of the adjoining sections were accordingly issued to the company and a right to all of them, not especially reserved by the condition of the grant, was vested in it.

Then, so far as that portion of the road which was completed and accepted is concerned, the contract of the company was executed.

> So far as that portion of the road which was completed and accepted is concerned, the contract of the company was executed, and as to the lands patented the transaction on the part of the Government was closed and the title of the company perfected. The right of the company to the remaining odd-numbered sections adjoining the road completed and accepted, not reserved, is equally clear. If the whole of the proposed road has not been completed any forfeiture consequent thereon can be asserted only by the grantor, the United States, through judicial proceedings or through the action of Congress. (Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wall., 44.) A third party can not take upon himself to enforce conditions attached to the grant when the Government does not complain of their breach. The holder of an invalid title does not strengthen his position by showing how badly the Government has been treated with respect to the property.

Although the act provided that the unpatented lands should revert to the United States, yet having built the road and earned them, the Supreme Court held that the title of the road is as clear to these lands as it is or was to those that were patented. I should before this have read section 4 of the granting act to the Northern Pacific Railroad. I will read it now:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever said "Northern Pacific Railroad Company" shall have 25 consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners to examine the same, and and if it shall appear that 25 consecutive miles of said road and telegraph line have been completed in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner, as in all other respects required by this act, the commissioners shall so report to the President of the United States, and patents of lands as aforesaid shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands, situated opposite to, and conterminous with, said completed section of said road; and, from time to time, whenever 25 additional consecutive miles shall have been constructed, completed, and in readiness as aforesaid, and verified by said commissioners to the President of the United States, then patents shall be issued to said company conveying the additional sections of land as aforesaid, and so on as fast as every 25 miles of said road is completed as aforesaid: Provided, That no more than ten sections of land per mile, as said road shall be completed, shall be conveyed to said company for all that part of said railroad lying east of the western boundary of the State of Minnesota, until the whole of said railroad shall be finished and in good running order, as a first-class railroad, from the place of beginning on Lake Superior to the western boundary of Minnesota: Provided also, That lands shall not be granted under the provisions of this act on account of any railroad, or part thereof, constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

That is our case on the law up to this time. I have brought these decisions down now so as to apply the law to the exact case before us, making it applicable to the existing facts. Although much of this road was built out of time, yet it was built when there was no act of forfeiture on the part of the grantor. On the contrary the grantor was cooperating with the builders of the road all the time, sending out examiners, inspecting portions of the road completed, certifying to the fact that it was properly constructed and patenting the conterminous lands.

Mr. MCKENNA. Is that under the act?

Mr. VAN EATON. Yes, sir; in strict accordance with the very letter of the law.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. I might stop here and claim that this land coterminous with the built portion of the road is not forfeitable. But I have something else to submit on this point. I will refer here to Ludlow's case in 12 Barber, and to the text in 2 Washburne on Real Property, where the following is held:

Where, however, a grant to a railroad company of land was upon condition that the road should be completed by a certain time, which was not done, and after that, the grantor knowing the fact, suffered the company to go on and incur expenses in constructing their road and made no objection, it was held to be a waiver of the condition and forfeiture. And it is laid down as a general principle that a condition which, if taken advantage of, destroys the whole estate, if once dispensed with, in whole or in part, is gone forever, for a condition being an entire thing can not be apportioned except by law. Thus, where a grant was made to a company on condition that they should erect a bloomery on the estate by such a time, and the grantor afterward waived that and gave them permission to erect a blast-furnace in its stead, and extended the time for its erection, it was held that a failure to erect the furnace within the extended time was not a ground for forfeiture. The condition was gone, and the terms of the grant did not create a covenant.

That was the case of a road built out of time. Yet the grantor saying nothing, the court held the title was good to the land. It is true that was an individual, but the great principles of right and justice, I take it, are the same between nations and individuals and corporations as they are between individuals.

There is another thing to which I wish to call the attention of the House particularly. The facts in this case were that no road had been built up to March, 1869. The granting act provided that the company should not put out any mortage bonds on any of its property without the consent of Congress. In 1869 Congress authorized the company to issue its bonds and secure the same by mortgage on its railroad and telegraph line. Even on that no money was raised and no road was built.

What was done next? We now come to the joint resolution of May 31, 1870. The gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] who opened this argument treated this very lightly; but I think it is absolutely conclusive.

In section 10 of the original granting act this was provided:

SEC. 10. And be it further enacted, That all people of the United States shall have the right to subscribe to the stock of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company until the whole capital named in this act of incorporation is taken up, by complying with the terms of subscription; and no mortgage or construction bonds shall ever be issued by said company on said road, or mortgage, or lien made in any way, except by the consent of the Congress of the United States.

Well, now we come down to 1870, and find this state of things. No road had been built. It was not even commenced. Then Congress came in and did this. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it would have been wiser then to have repealed the act and resumed the land. But, sir, they did not do it. Congress, in 1870, passed this joint resolution, approved May 31:

[Resolution of May 31, 1870.]

No. 67.—A resolution authorizing the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to issue its bonds for the construction of its road and to secure the same by mortgage, and for other purposes.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Northern Pacific Railroad Company be, and hereby is, authorized to issue its bonds to aid in the construction and equipment of its road, and to secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, including its franchises as a corporation; and, as proof and notice of its legal execution and effectual delivery, said mortgage shall be filed and recorded in the office of the Secretary of the Interior; and also to locate and construct, under the provisions and with the privileges, grants, and duties provided for in its act of incorporation, its main road to some point on Puget Sound, via the valley of the Columbia River, with the right to locate and construct its branch from some convenient point on its main trunk line across the Cascade Mountains to Puget Sound; and in the event of there not being in any State or Territory in which said main line or branch may be located, at the time of the final location thereof, the amount of lands per mile granted by Congress to said company, within the limits prescribed by its charter, then said company shall be entitled, under the directions of the Secretary of the Interior, to receive so many sections of land belonging to the United States, and designated by odd numbers, in such State or Territory, within 10 miles on each side of said road, beyond the limits prescribed in said charter, as will make up such deficiency; on said main line or branch, except mineral and other lands as exempted in the charter of said company of 1864, to the amount of the lands that have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of subsequent to the passage of the act of July 2, 1864, and that 25 miles of said main line between its western terminus and the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, shall be completed by the 1st day of January A. D. 1872, and 40 miles of the remaining portion thereof each year thereafter, until the whole shall be completed between said points: Provided, That all lands hereby granted to said company which shall not be sold or disposed of or remain subject to the mortgage by this act authorized, at the expiration of five years after the completion of the entire road, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption like other lands, at a price to be paid to said company not exceeding $2.50 per acre; and if the mortgage hereby authorized shall at any time be enforced by foreclosure or other legal proceeding, or the mortgaged lands hereby granted, or any of them, be sold by the trustees to whom such mortgage may be executed, either at its maturity or for any failure or default of said company under the terms thereof, such lands shall be sold at public sale, at places within the States and Territories in which they shall be situate, after not less than sixty days previous notice, in single sections or subdivisions thereof, to the highest and best bidder: Provided further, That in the construction of the said railroad, American iron or steel only shall be used, the same to be manufactured from American ores exclusively.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That Congress may at any time alter or amend this joint resolution, having due regard to the rights of said company, and any other parties.

Approved May 31, 1870.

The gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] said if they meant to give the road any greater right or title to these lands than had been already given why not set it up in this amending act or joint resolution? Why, Mr. Speaker, that is just what they did do. I do not think Congress could have done it in any plainer language than they have done it in this act. They provide this:

Provided, That all lands hereby granted to said company which shall not be sold or disposed of or remain subject to the mortgage by this act authorized, at the expiration of five years after the completion of the entire road, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption like other lands, at a price to be paid to said company not exceeding $2.50 per acre; and if the mortgage hereby authorized shall at any time be enforced by foreclosure or other legal proceeding, or the mortgaged lands hereby granted, or any of them, be sold by the trustees to whom such mortgage may be executed, either at its maturity or for any failure or default of said company under the terms thereof, such lands shall be sold at public sale, at places within the States and Territories in which they shall be situate, after not less than sixty days' previous notice, in single sections or subdivisions thereof, to the highest and best bidder.

Mr. Speaker, I put it to any lawyer, is the express permission to mortgage the granted lands and the specific directions as to the manner of sale in case the mortgage is foreclosed consistent with the idea that Congress also and at the same time or at any time can declare a forfeiture of the lands, and so destroy the very security it has authorized?

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit me one question?

Mr. VAN EATON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Does he think as a matter of law that under the mortgage any better title would pass than the mortgagor himself had at the time of its execution?

Mr. VAN EATON. No, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. In other words, the power to mortgage being given in 1870, when the time for the construction of the road did not expire until 1879, and the general grant contained the conditions of which the gentleman has spoken, does he not think, as a lawyer, the same conditions attach to the land after the mortgage as before?

Mr. VAN EATON. With this exception, that by this very permission that condition was waived.

Mr. PAYSON. How?

Mr. VAN EATON. By allowing these lands to be mortgaged and inviting the people of the United States to come in and take these mortgage bonds to enable them to build the road, and this permission, when that act was passed, they had.

Mr. PAYSON. Except, subject to the condition.

Mr. VAN EATON. The condition of forfeiture as far as that is concerned is waived. The mortgage was authorized expressly to "aid the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the construction and equipment of its road."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. They had the land on certain conditions.

Mr. VAN EATON. Please make your speeches in your own time.

Now, sir, let us look at this for a minute in a common-sense point of view. What was the object of allowing the railroad company to mortgage these lands? Was it not to raise money to build the road? Now, suppose the men who loaned the money had said to the company, "You are giving us a mortgage on these lands, it is true, but suppose you do not build the road in time and the United States Government forfeits the lands, what security have we got?" and suppose that right then and there a competent authority could have told the money-lenders, "You run the risk of losing your money if this road is not built in time, strictly up to the letter of the bond," do you suppose any money-lender in Christendom would have invested his money on such conditions? Certainly not. But when he looked at the resolution granting to the company the right to mortgage these lands and saw prescribed the manner in which they should be sold in case the debt was not paid, and saw further that the road was to be completed in 25-mile sections and the coterminous lands patented, then he could not doubt any longer.

Mr. McKENNA. Do you not suppose the money-lender would take into consideration the power of the road to complete the road within the prescribed time, and thereby to earn the land grant?

Mr. VAN EATON. Very likely he would; and he would know perfectly well, too, that just as the road was built the lands coterminous with that portion of it would be earned and a security for his debt.

Mr. FINDLAY. How long did these bonds run?

Mr. VAN EATON. I do not remember just now; but I will answer the gentleman later. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention at this point to what was done under this resolution. After the passage of the said resolution giving the company permission to mortgage the road mortgages were made as follows:

1. The mortgage of July 1, 1870, now represented by the preferred stock of the company.
2. The Missouri division mortgage of March 1, 1879.
3. The Pend d'Oreille mortgage on that portion of the line of September 1, 1879.
4. The general mortgage of June 1, 1881, at the rate of $25,000 per mile, now the first mortgage on the greater portion of the main line.
5. The second mortgage of November 20, 1883, for $20,000,000.

The outstanding mortgage bonds of the company were as follows July 30, 1883, the close of last financial year:

General first-mortgage bonds	$43,403,000
General second-mortgage bonds	18,857,000
Missouri division mortgage bonds	2,233,500
Pend d'Oreille division mortgage bonds	3,240,000
	67,833,500
Add to this preferred stock, which is an equitable mortgage, being the old first mortgage converted into stock	38,610,584
	106,454,084

The power to make these mortgages and give a valid title which could be enforced by foreclosure is utterly inconsistent with the existence of a forfeiture.

However, I must go back a little before I leave the subject of the mortgage. I want to call attention to one point in the second section of the resolution passsed in May, 1870, and I lay particular stress upon it. It is this: "Congress may at any time alter or amend this joint resolution, having due regard to the rights of said company and any other parties." Now, that is very important. What other parties were there? What other parties could there be than the creditors of the road? And if Congress altered the act, it was to be done with due regard not only to the rights of the railroad company but to the rights of "any other parties." As throwing further light on what the object of the grant was I wish to call attention to the recapitulation in section 20, and I read it:

The better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line and keeping the same in working order, to secure to the Government at all times, but particularly in time of war, the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

There you have the object of the grant recited and repeated.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we have this state of facts: The road virtually completed, at least so far so as to obtain the object of the grant, and the cars running from lake to ocean, completed and accepted from Lake Superior to Wallula, say 2,000 miles, connection of Wallula and Portland by leased lines, and built from Portland to Tacoma, with the Cascade branch from Wallula to Seattle in rapid process of construction, and since February, 1884, 150 miles of the road have been accepted and approved by the President of the United States, and of this 25 miles of the Cascade branch by President Cleveland, November 18, 1885.

Great quantities of the lands proposed to be forfeited are in the hands of innocent purchasers. Five mortgages, ranging in date from July 1, 1870, to November 20, 1883, have been executed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, all covering the lands filed in the Interior Department and recorded in the proper offices along the line of the road.

And this was done under authority of Congress. We know it was the intention of Congress to allow the entire land grant to be mortgaged, and that the lands were so mortgaged five times with the knowledge of Congress and the Interior and Executive Departments. It is a fact that the bonds issued under the mortgage have been sold to citizens who paid their money for them. They have gone into the business of the country, and are held by innocent purchasers. In fact it is said, and no doubt truly, that these bonds are held in every State in the Union. There can be no doubt that all this has been done under the firm and confident belief that every step was taken under the approbation of Congress and to carry out its policy. The bondholders, citizens everywhere, have now this day the lands and all the lands for their security. If we have the power, have we the right to deprive them of that security? Is it only the railroad we are injuring? Are we not deranging the business of the country to the extent of depreciating these securities in the hands of all sorts of people, not simply bankers and capitalists?

Again, have the purchasers of these lands no rights we are bound to respect? Oh, yes, say the majority. We will give each of these 360 acres, no more, whether he be settler, or purchaser for investment, as doubtless many of them are. A father may have invested his hard earnings for the benefit of his growing family; another may have invested all his earnings, looking prudently forward to a rise in price. Ownership of these lands may in many cases stand for the earnings of a lifetime. No matter; ruthlessly sweep all away save only 360 acres, say the majority of the committee. What for, I would respectfully ask? Why, simply to drive out the present settlers and purchasers to let others come in.

A great deal of rhetoric has been expended in describing the magnitude of this grant, and it is a large one; but what has that to do with the argument? The grant is for the alternate odd-numbered sections of the public lands, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of the line of the road, through the Territories, and ten alternate sections on each side in the States, with an addition of not more than ten sections on each side for indemnity limits. Now, gentlemen speak of the grant as if it comprised a tract of land 60 miles wide from the lakes to the Pacific Ocean, which is a gross exaggeration. In the Territories very little indemnity lands will be required, and whatever the quantity it must be borne in mind an equal quantity, the even-numbered sections, are along the line of the road, and remain at the disposal of the Government for the benefit of settlers and purchasers. Gentlemen speak of the granted lands as if they were lost, obliterated, wiped out. Why, they are still there in place, open for settlement the same as they ever were. True, they can not be homesteaded, and there may be some increase in the price, but so far, as a general thing, very little, if any, more than the lands reserved by the Government.

Again, much is said of the great munificence of this grant and its vast pecuniary value. This, as I have said, is greatly exaggerated, but even if true what gives the lands their increased value? What but this very road it is proposed to deprive of the lands? Why, it is well known that but for the road these lands would have no present value, could not be sold for any price, nor could they be taken for homesteads. To illustrate how railroads enhance the price of lands coterminous with their lines, I venture to read here an extract from the Commercial Herald of recent date, a progressive and representative paper of my State, published in the city of Vicksburg. Speaking of a road recently constructed through Mississippi, and forming, I believe, a part of what is known as the Huntington system, that paper in a late issue said:

THE BOOM.

We print this morning a letter from a correspondent, which shows how railroads develop a country. We venture the assertion that the magnificent trunk line known as the Louisiana, New Orleans and Texas Railroad has added to values in the State five times what the road coast, and its own value in addition, for it runs through the State on a longer line than any other road. Its building and operation have acted like magic. The trackless swamps of the Mississippi River have been subdued, and the famed tales of Aladdin's lamp are surpassed by the reality. On all the line through the State prosperity prevails, and the throb of renewed life is given to lands that were before considered worthless. Where a forest stood before, in old abandoned fields, in the tangled jungles of the great valley, may now be seen thriving towns, cities, and villages, and happy homes. It is almost beyond the most ardent hopes of the friends of railway development what has actually been the direct result of the construction of this road through our State.

These results are to be observed by all, but there are others, not to be estimated in dollars and cents, but fully appreciated, and perhaps more valuable to the Yazoo Delta. The people of the Delta have a powerful ally to protect their lands from the floods of the mighty Mississippi, and an indorser of their credit to enable them to utilize in the best manner their own means of protection. Years ago we wrote up this giant enterprise, but as hopeful as we were we dared not anticipate what has actually occurred.

These values have been added in a very short time, and the future is before us. Who can tell the full extent of the benefit the country will receive? Who can tell what limits our city will reach in business and growth as the years roll by, if our citizens realize the advantages now within our grasp? Let our citizens resolve not to be outstripped by any city, no matter what its size. Let the boom be kept up, and in a short while those who knew the old sluggish town of Vicksburg will see in its place a large and rapidly growing city. Certainly these results are to be obtained with the proper co-operation and effort.

Now, Mr. Speaker, where much of this improvement and prosperity are being developed three years ago were impenetrable jungles and swamps, rarely penetrated by man save by the adventurous hunter. The much-abused railroad has been the agent of the change, and what a change! So with trackless deserts where now runs the Northern Pacific. Where only wild beasts and wild Indians roamed, fields and villages and settlements with all the appliances of civilized life abound. Yes, the lands are increasing in value and will continue to increase as population surges westward, and all on account of the Northern Pacific Railroad. This road is abused as an oppressive corporation and monopoly, and for all I know, justly; of that I know nothing. Nor has that anything to do with the question before the House. I am not the apologist of the road; in fact, I know nothing about it, its owners, directors, or officers. I am simply arguing a legal question; and it seems to me all the rhetoric brought into requisition to excite undue prejudice against the road is simply wasted in the argument. If this road or any other is guilty of acts of oppression let us apply the correctives proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], or something in that direction, and to that I have no sort of objection.

The lands granted in aid of the building of this road should be forfeited, we are told, because the road was not completed in time. Well, why was it not so completed?

In the first place, the building of the road was greatly retarded by the financial troubles of 1873. It is in the memory of members that for several years after that panic no enterprise of this kind could be prosecuted, the money could not be had, and so several years passed and nothing was done or could be. But that was not all. It was part of the contract on the part of the Government that surveys should be made as fast as might be required for the construction of the road. Section 6 of the granting act provided as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States shall cause the lands to be surveyed for 40 miles in width on both sides of the entire line of said road, after the general route shall be fixed; and as fast as may be required by the construction of said railroad; and the odd sections of land hereby granted shall not be liable to sale, or entry, or pre-emption before or after they are surveyed, except by said company, as provided in this act; but the provisions of the act of September, 1841, granting pre-emption rights, and the acts amendatory thereof, and of the act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, shall be, and the same are hereby, extended to all other lands on the line of said road, when surveyed, excepting those hereby granted to said company. And the reserved alternate sections shall not be sold by the Government at a price less than $2.50 per acre when offered for sale.

How did the Government comply with its part of this agreement? The answer is found in the views of the minority as set forth on pages 22, 23, which I here quote:

3. The grantor agreed to clear the right of way of Indians to enable the grantee to construct its road. The grantor alone had the power to do that. It was not done, and many of the surveying parties of the company were killed while endeavoring to select a route for said road. What was the condition of the country through which said road has subsequently been built prior to July, 1879? Let the commanding officers of the United States Army tell. General Brisbin, commanding at Fort Keogh, wrote from that place under date of April 23, 1882, as follows:

"I mention these incidents to show you the condition of the Yellowstone country prior to 1877. It was so unsafe that not less than one thousand armed men could penetrate it without suffering great risk. I advised the delay or abandonment of the survey for the Northern Pacific Railroad because we had not sufficient men to make the country safe. These brave fellows were several times attacked, and I expected they would be massacred."

General Gibbon, April 27, 1882, wrote:

"From 1870, when I first went to Montana, till 1876, that whole region (between Mandan, Dak., and Bozeman, Mont.) was an almost unknown wilderness, where it was not safe for any but large and well-organized parties of white men to go. Engineer parties had upon all occasions to be well protected with troops, and even after the establishment of Forts Keogh and Custer, in 1876-'77, the bands of roving, hostile Indians rendered engineering operations along the line of the Northern Pacific Railway hazardous."

On same date General Terry, commanding the department, wrote from Fort Snelling:

"I came into command in this department in January, 1873. From that time up to the beginning of 1877 it would have been impossible to make surveys in the valley of the Yellowstone from the mouth of the river to the western part of the Crow reservation except under the protection of a very large escort of troops. That portion of the valley of which I have spoken has been constantly overrun by hostile Sioux, and even with a powerful escort surveys could have been prosecuted only at a very great disadvantage."

Under such circumstances, we think that the company has done all that a reasonable government could expect or require. The condition was one which it was impossible to peform within the time required. It was rendered impossible by the failure of the grantor to keep its part of the contract. There was, therefore, no breach of condition. (2 Blackstone's Com. (by Cooley), 156, note 11; 4 Kent's Com., 129, 130; Coke's Ins., 206*b*, 2209*a*; Sheppard's Touchstone, 133; United States vs. Maca, 18 Howard, p. 557; United States vs. Reading, 18 Howard, 1.)

But this is not all. In section 2 of the granting act is found these words:

The United States shall extinguish, as rapidly as may be consistent with public policy and the welfare of the said Indians, the Indian titles to all lands falling under the operation of this act, and acquired in the donation to the [road] named in this bill.

Now, when the engineers and construction men reached the Crow reservation in Montana they were stopped by the Indian agent and threatened with military force if they entered, and thus they were halted until the treaty of 1882.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as late as 1882 what did Congress do? I contend they condoned any delay on the part of the company, acknowledged its right to go on and build the road, and again waived any right of forfeiture (if any existed, which I deny, and will attempt to prove if I have time) on the part of the Government.

Let us see. Chapter 284, 22 Stat., page 157, July 10, 1882, was "an act to accept and ratify an agreement with the Crow Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in the Territory of Montana required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same." In this act the right of the company to construct its road through this reservation is distinctly recognized, and the fact that it had filed a map showing the definite location of the road was conceded, and then the act recites—

Whereas the said company desires to construct its line of railroad upon such designated route, and claims the right by virtue of said act (the act granting the lands) so to do: Now, therefore, to fulfill the obligations of the Government, &c.

Then follows the act ratifying the treaty with the Crow Indians. What for? To enable the company to construct its road through their reservation. And this was as late as July 10, 1882, barely four years ago and more than three years after the time for the completion of the road had elapsed. Comment, Mr. Speaker, is unnecessary. In the case of United States vs. Union Pacific Railroad Company (9 Supreme Court Reports, page 72), the Supreme Court, in rendering their decision, have so well described the interests requiring and the difficulties attending the construction of such a road as this that I quote what they have to say in the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Davis. All that was said on the subject with regard to the building of that road applies with equal force to this:

In construing an act of Congress we are not at liberty to recur to the views of individual members in debate nor to consider the motives which influenced them to vote for or against its passage. The act itself speaks the will of Congress, and this is to be ascertained from the language used. But courts, in construing a statute, may with propriety recur to the history of the times when it was passed; and this is frequently necessary in order to ascertain the reason as well as the meaning of particular provisions in it. (Aldridge vs. Williams, 3 How., 24; Preston vs. Browder, 1 Wheat., 120.)

Many of the provisions in the original act of 1862 are outside of the usual course of legislative action concerning grants to railroads, and can not be properly construed without reference to the circumstances which existed when it was passed. The war of the rebellion was in progress; and, owing to complications with England, the country had become alarmed for the safety of our Pacific possessions. The loss of them was feared in case those complications should result in an open rupture; but, even if this fear were groundless, it was quite apparent that we were unable to furnish that degree of protection to the people occupying them which every government owes to its citizens. It is true, the threatened danger was happily averted; but wisdom pointed out the necessity of making suitable provisions for the future.

This could be done in no better way than by the construction of a railroad across the continent. Such a road would bind together the widely separated parts of our common country and furnish a cheap and expeditious mode for the transportation of troops and supplies. If it did nothing more than afford the required protection to the Pacific States, it was felt that the Government, in the performance of an imperative duty, could not justly withhold the aid necessary to build it; and so strong and pervading was this opinion that it is by no means certain that the people would not have justified Congress if it had departed from the then settled policy of the country regarding works of internal improvement and charged the Government itself with the direct execution of the enterprise.

This enterprise was viewed as a national undertaking for national purposes, and the public mind was directed to the end in view rather than to the particular means of securing it. Although this road was a military necessity there were other reasons active at the time in producing an opinion for its completion besides the protection of an exposed frontier. There was a vast unpeopled territory lying between the Missouri and Sacramento Rivers which was practically worthless without the facilities afforded by a railroad for the transportation of persons and property. With its construction the agricultural and mineral resources of this territory could be developed, settlements made where settlements were possible, and thereby the wealth and power of the United States largely increased; and there was also the pressing want, in time of peace even, of an improved and cheaper method for the transportation of the mails and of supplies for the Army and the Indians.

It was in the presence of these facts that Congress undertook to deal with the subject of this railroad. The difficulties in the way of building it were great, and by many intelligent persons considered insurmountable.

Although a free people, when resolved upon a course of action, can accomplish great results, the scheme for building a railroad 2,000 miles in length, over deserts, across mountains, and through a country inhabited by Indians, jealous of intrusion upon their rights, was universally regarded at the time as a bold and hazardous undertaking. It is nothing to the purpose that the apprehended difficulties in a great measure disappeared after trial, and that the road was constructed at less cost of time and money than had been considered possible. No argument can be drawn from the wisdom that comes after the fact. Congress acted with reference to a state of things believed at the time to exist; and, in interpreting its legislation, no aid can be derived from subsequent events. The project of building the road was not conceived for private ends; and the prevalent opinion was, that it could not be worked out by private capital alone. It was a national work, originating in national necessities, and requiring national assistance.

The policy of the country, to say nothing of the supposed want of constitutional power, stood in the way of the United States taking the work into its own hands. Even if this were not so, reasons of economy suggested that it were better to enlist private capital and enterprise in the project by offering the requisite inducements. Congress undertook to do this, in order to promote the construction and operation of a work deemed essential to the security of great public interests.

It is true the scheme contemplated profit to individuals; for, without a reasonable expectation of this, capital could not be obtained, nor the requisite skill and enterprise. But this consideration does not in itself change the relation of the parties to this suit. This might have been so if the Government had incorporated a company to advance private interests, and agreed to aid it on account of the supposed incidental advantages which the public would derive from the completion of the projected railway. But the primary object of the Government was to advance its own interests, and it endeavored to engage individual co-operation as a means to an end—the securing a road which could be used for its own purposes. The obligations, therefore, which were imposed on the company incorporated to build it must depend on the true meaning of the enactment itself, viewed in the light of contemporaneous history.

Here I desire to call attention to the report of the Commissioner of Railroads for 1885. Speaking of the Northern Pacific he says:

The eastern portion of the road has been completed to Ashland, the last section being accepted by the President January 6, 1885. On October 7, 1884, 25 miles eastward from Tacoma, constructed in 1877, were accepted; and on December 9, 1884, 37¼ miles westward from the Columbia, and January 17, 1885, 25 miles more, were accepted.

The length of the company's road, including the Cascade branch, is 2,029.58 miles. It has leased 143.34 miles, and the length of its branches is 477.65 miles.

The length of road finished would entitle the company to 43,200,000 acres of land. It had sold to June 30, 1885, 5,468,779.97 acres.

The rolling-stock consists of 391 engines, 167 with air-brakes; 274 passenger cars with train-brakes; and 9,217 freight cars of all kinds, 1,097 of which have train-brakes.

The terminus at Duluth and the recent extensions to Superior and Ashland give such excellent connections with the Lake Superior trade and with the railways from the ports South and East that its through traffic may be considered quite well secured at these points.

The road-bed has been well constructed throughout nearly the whole length; good provision made for drainage; bridges and trestles strongly built; good buildings put up at all stations; abundant water supply provided; and the track put in good order, much more than half its length being well ballasted with good gravel and stone.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, if we wish to do something practicable and practical we should pass the Senate bill that declares forfeited all the granted lands coterminous with the uncompleted portions of the road. For myself I should be willing to except the lands along the Cascade branch, for the reason that the road there is being constructed about as fast as is humanly possible, considering the natural obstructions in the way; at the same time I would not make a point on that. Gentlemen may insist on passing the House bill, but I have no idea one of us here will ever live to see it become law.

In the mean time the settlers along the unbuilt portions of the road, on lands clearly forfeitable, are begging us for action; petitions signed by hundreds and hundreds of these hardy pioneers have been received by their Representatives on this floor begging Congress to do something for their relief, so that they may know when they have titles to their lands. They pray to be separated and relieved from the ever-returning attempt to forfeit the entire grant, or that portion between Bismarck and Wallula. They pray for speedy, separate relief for themselves first, and action, if we see proper, as to the rest afterward.

And exactly this, Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill gives us an opportunity to do—the last section providing as it does that the act shall not be construed to estop the Government from proceeding in future against the rest of the grant. If we refuse this, if we turn a deaf ear to the prayers of these settlers, it will not be long before they will lay the blame of our non-action at the right door. Session after session Congress goes through this farce of demanding what we know we can not get, and nothing is done, and no relief is furnished to anybody.

Each succeeding Congress we commence where we left off, and at the close of the session we leave off where we commenced. Some day our masters, the people, will get tired of this game of hide-and-seek, fast-and-loose, and will send men here who will act and will effect something.

Mr. Speaker, I am just as anxious as any member on this floor to forfeit every acre of land that has been granted to railroads or other corporations or enterprises, and which they have not earned. The people demand such forfeitures, and they demand speedy action, and they are right, and it is our bounden duty to execute their will in this respect. Why, sir, there is no official, no body, no man in this Capitol or in this country that is or can be superior to or independent of the will of the people. And it is equally certain the people do not and will not demand an unjust thing. Why, sir, what does the forfeiture demanded by the majority of the committee mean? That the Government, the representatives of the people, shall forfeit the grant of these lands, utterly reckless and regardless of all rights, not of the railroad simply, but of the innocent holders of their bonds, of the settlers all along the line of the road, of the purchasers of these lands, and of the multitudes of rights and interests which for years have been both accumulating and maturing in connection with this grant.

Are there no people living along the long line of this road worthy of our consideration? Have no rights grown up there which we are bound in all fairness and strict justice to regard? Can we now enter as of our first estate? Suppose we can and do forfeit all these lands and enter, what will be the state of affairs? Well, we shall resume the grant, take back all the lands on the faith of which the money was loaned which built the road and developed that vast country. We shall ignore the rights of every person who has invested honest money in bonds or lands. We shall have the lands we have reserved, the even-numbered sections, doubled or trebled in value by the road, and the others, the odd-numbered sections, the ones we forfeit, according to the argument of some gentlemen quadrupled in value, an immense accretion and aggregate of wealth literally created by this very road. We shall get all the advantages of the road. We shall get just that for which the grant was made—and then get back the lands largely increased in value We shall impoverish vast numbers of purchasers and holders of these lands, and owners of the bonds—but we shall have all the lands. We shall have the road with all its measureless advantages, while all these others, who trusted in the good faith of their Government, shall have nothing! Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the people, our masters, demand at our hands any such course of conduct. The people, sir, are not unjust, they are not cruel, they ask at our hands only even-handed justice, and this, so long as I remain in public life, I shall endeavor, so far as in me lies, to mete out to all comers without regard to ephemeral popular clamor and without regard to the position, standing, wealth, or poverty of the comers!

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCREARY). The Chair will inform the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] that he has consumed fifty-five minutes of his hour.

Mr. VAN EATON. This argument ought to go on a little longer. I ask that I may have fifteen minutes in addition to my hour.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. VAN EATON. I would like to finish my argument.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I hope the time which the gentleman from Mississippi asks will be granted. This is a matter of very great consequence.

Mr. HENLEY. How much time does the gentleman desire to occupy?

Mr. VAN EATON. I desire an hour and a quarter in all.

Mr. HENLEY. I have no objection, but I give notice that I propose to adhere to my original determination in regard to calling the previous question.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. We will vote that down.

Mr. VAN EATON. I hope there will be no objection to giving me an hour and a quarter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks an extension of fifteen minutes beyond his hour.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. HENLEY. I consider that the fate of this bill depends on reaching a vote to-day.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think after eight months' waiting we can afford to give some time to this discussion.

Mr. COBB. It is not necessary for the gentleman from Maine to be making charges against the committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. No, it is not necessary; that is so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] objects to the extension.

Mr. VAN EATON. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the objection.

Mr. COBB. Let the time be granted by some of your friends. We want to reach a vote.

Mr. HERMANN. I give notice that, representing a great State in the Northwest directly interested in this question, I propose to ask for at least thirty minutes. It is neither courteous nor just to the great Northwest that we should be cut off in this manner.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], or does he propose to occupy all his time himself? The gentleman has five minutes more in his own right, but the Chair was informed that he had agreed to yield those five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. VAN EATON. I trust I may be allowed ten minutes additional.

Mr. HENLEY. I would have no objection if we could arrive at an amicable understanding, but I have understood——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. HENLEY. Precisely. I was about to say that there is an evident disposition to defeat this bill at any rate by the consumption of time, and I do not see that anything is to be gained by attempting to reach an understanding.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, when this wrangling commenced the Chair stated that I had five minutes remaining. Certainly this colloquy is not to be deducted from my time, and I ought to have five minutes now. I yield those five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and ask leave to print the residue of my remarks.

Mr. HENLEY. I believe there has been a general leave to print.

Mr. NEGLEY. No, there has not been.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks permission to print the residue of his remarks in the RECORD, and without objection permission is granted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HENLEY. Do I understand that the request is for general leave to print?

Mr. VAN EATON. I believe I will make the request general.

Mr. HENLEY. I object to a general leave.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks that all members be allowed to print in the RECORD their remarks on this bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object.

Mr. HENLEY. I object to the gentleman from Mississippi being allowed to print. Let him control those who are on his side.

Several MEMBERS. The objection comes too late.

Mr. VAN EATON. I had permission already.

Mr. COBB. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi was granted leave to print additional remarks in the RECORD on condition that the same privilege was granted to others.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understood.

Mr. COBB. And objection being made, he can not print.

Mr. HENLEY. I objected under a misapprehension. I am reminded that while I was speaking I asked leave to print in my remarks something which I had not time to read, and leave was granted me. I am therefore not in condition to object to the gentleman from Mississippi having such leave.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the request again. The gentleman from Mississippi asks permission to print in the RECORD the residue of his remarks.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi already has permission——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the permission is granted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi had fifteen minutes to conclude his remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; there was objection to that request.

Mr. REED, of Maine. By whom was the objection made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB].

Mr. COBB. I made the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] is now entitled to occupy the floor for five minutes, granted to him by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON].

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposition to forfeit 6,170,640 acres of land yet unearned on 340 miles of road now unconstructed, and also to forfeit 30,737,101 acres on 1,492 miles of road constructed since the expiration of the time named in the original grant. As I imperfectly caught the remarks of the gentleman who advocated the passage of this bill, he referred to declarations made by the several political platforms in 1884 on this question as a justification for pursuing the course indicated by this bill. I desire to call attention to the fact that no political party that ever had existence has by any declaration in any platform ever enunciated any such doctrine. Take the Republican platform of 1884, and we find this language:

We demand of Congress the speedy forfeiture of all land grants which have lapsed by reason of non-compliance with acts of incorporation, in all cases where there has been no attempt in good faith to perform the conditions of such grants.

That certainly does not justify the passage of this bill.

Take the platform of the Democratic party of 1884 and we find this language:

We believe that the public land ought, as far as possible, to be kept as homesteads for actual settlers; that all unearned lands heretofore improvidently granted to railroad corporations by the action of the Republican party should be restored to the public domain, and that no more grants of land shall be made to corporations, or be allowed to fall into the ownership of alien absentees.

"All unearned grants!" Nobody will pretend to say there has not been by virtue of this grant 30,737,101 acres earned since the expiration of the time limited by the original grant.

Next we find that the anti-monopoly national convention said:

That no further grants of public lands shall be made to corporations. All enactments granting land to corporations should be strictly construed, and all land-grants should be forfeited where the terms upon which the grants were made have not been strictly complied with. The public lands must be held for homes for actual settlers, and must not be subject to purchase or control by non-resident foreigners or other speculators.

That certainly will not justify the forfeiture of this land which has been earned by the construction of this road.

One other party and I am done.

A MEMBER. What party?

Mr. PRICE. I will read a plank from the platform of the Prohibition national convention—a party small in numbers but magnificent in its principles. [Laughter and applause.] Yes, gentlemen, a party behind which is a more vital principle than ever governed any political party which ever rose or ruled or exists or has fallen in this country. This party platform affords no justification on the part of this Government to violate the contract under which this railroad corporation has gone on to finish its road.

A MEMBER. You have not read what the platform of that party is.

Mr. PRICE. I will read from the platform of the Prohibition national convention of 1884:

That the public lands should be held for homes for the people and not for gifts to corporations, or to be held in large bodies for speculation upon the needs of actual settlers.

You and I, Mr. Speaker, and all of us were before the people on these various platforms avowing the doctrine which has been expressed in the language I have read to the House. We must stick to our pledges to the people, and if we do observe the spirit of those pledges, it is not possible that we can advocate the forfeiture of the land granted for the construction of this Northern Pacific Railroad. It has been earned by that corporation under an implied contract, upon which they have gone on to finish the road. Such forfeiture, I may say, would be inequitable.

I deny there was ever an acre of land given to this road. It was a fair contract by which the Government was to be the beneficiary, and by which the road was to be also benefited. The Government was to be benefited in the construction of the road so that emigrants might be able to get into and open up to settlement and cultivation that then almost inaccessible Territory. In consideration of the construction of this road for that purpose the corporation was to be compensated by this grant of lands.

As I have said, it was a fair contract, with obligations on both sides, and no one can say the road has not fulfilled fairly its part of the contract to the extent that it is built.

While the Government was justified under the then existing circumstances in accepting such a policy, change of circumstance makes a change of policy necessary. It was necessary at that time to do as we did, but under all the circumstances we do not now wish to go further. I am willing to bow to the very general sentiment which seems to prevail throughout the country on the subject of withholding further land grants, but I am opposed to doing any injustice under the contract we have made with this road, or to violating the pledges made by the several parties in national conventions, under which we have been elected to seats upon this floor. Every principle of justice is hostile to the destruction of the right inherent in this road by reason of the contract which it made with the Government.

We will not pretend to interfere with that contract if we are wise. If we do, every good lawyer will see at once they will only have to carry the investigation into the courts to secure every acre of the land belonging to the road as its part of the consideration under that contract with the Government.

This bill is wrong in principle, illegal, illogical, and contrary to the stipulations and pledges upon which at the last election we went before the people of the United States and were elected to this House of Representatives.

Mr. NEGLEY. And it is the sheerest demagogy.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, demagogy of the cheapest class. Let us stick to our promises. We have received our consideration under the contract; let us not deny to the road the consideration which belongs to it under the same contract.

It is true they only built a part of the road within the time limited, but it is equally true that they have built 1,492 miles since that time in good faith, and we have raised no protest against it, but have stood by and justified it by examining it and accepting it, and have compelled the company to carry our mails at the reduced rates allowed to land-grant roads, by which reduction we have been benefited over a million dollars.

Strike from the bill the provision forfeiting the lands earned between the time limited by the grant and the passage of the bill, and I will join its friends in forfeiting the lands unearned at this time; and I do this more in obedience to the will of the people as expressed in platforms to which I have subscribed than because I believe it to be right.

My own idea is that all grants that are now being earned in good faith should remain undisturbed.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Speaker, when, on the 2d day of July, 1864, Congress passed the act granting lands to aid in the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad, there was entailed upon all the communities through which the road extends the blighting and far-reaching curse which inevitably attends the control of large landed estates by corporations.

Born, as it was, in the midst of falling homes and shattered hearthstones, when the wheels of progress were clogged by the disasters of civil war, this corporation, through all the years of its existence, seemingly drawing its inspiration from the unsettled period of its creation, has been essentially a stumbling-block and an obstruction in the way of the material progress of the country through which it passes. For nearly a generation the people of Washington Territory have watched and waited for the consummation of this enterprise, to aid in the completion of which Congress granted, with unexampled munificence, nearly 50,000,000 acres of the public domain. They believed in the honeyed promises of this corporation. They believed that, fostered as it has been by the generous care of the Government, it would come as the evangel of a broader and more comprehensive civilization. They believed that in its coming they would find a mighty ally in their struggles to meet the rapidly increasing demands of the tax-gatherer. They congratulated themselves that the completion of this transcontinental highway would afford cheaper and more expeditious transportation for the products of their industry. These were the vain and illusive dreams of the hardy pioneer, whose unflinching courage and intelligent industry had overcome the savagery of man and beast, as well as of nature, long before the first evidences of the completion of this enterprise began to appear. The assurance had gone forth that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was to be regarded as a "benevolent monopoly," which was to result in naught save the choicest blessings and benefits to the people.

Scarcely had the sound of the construction hammer with which was driven the last spike on that portion of the road which was completed in September, 1883, died away, when the people were rudely and savagely awakened from their dreams of security against corporate oppression because of the benevolence of their masters. With the completion of the greater portion of their road it was believed that Congress could be induced to ignore the flagrant breach in the conditions of the grants, and that there existed no further necessity for concealing the cloven foot which had up to that time been so cleverly hidden from public view. Big with this idea they have dominated the various governmental Departments, dictated the laws touching their interests, and have by every conceivable method endeavored to set at defiance every legitimate right of the people and to escape the exactions of any portions of the public burdens. By the exercise of their peculiar tactics they have succeeded in securing within the Territory of Washington immunity from the burdens of taxation in respect of all their real property. The present law providing a scheme for the taxation of railroad property in Washington Territory was born in the law offices of the attorneys of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and by them lobbied through the Territorial Legislature. With insufferable and amazing effrontry the principal counsel of this company in Washington Territory sought and obtained an opportunity to lecture the representatives of the people in the Territorial Legislature upon their duties in providing for the taxation of railroad property.

The result of this intermeddling of railroad attorneys was the enactment of a law which, for cold-blooded and grotesque iniquity, has seldom, if ever, been paralleled in the entire history of bad legislation. After providing that 2 per cent. of the gross earnings shall constitute the full measure of taxation upon railroad property within the Territory, and providing a scheme for its collection, the very apex of infamy was reached when section 5 was incorporated into the law. On page 66 of the session laws of 1883 this villainous section is to be found in the following terms:

The lands of any railroad company shall become subject to taxation in the same manner as other similar property as soon as the same are sold, leased or contracted to be sold or leased; and on or before the 1st day of April of each year each railroad company having land within this Territory shall return to the county auditor of each county, full and complete lists, verified by the affidavits of some officer of the company having knowledge of the facts, of all lands of such company situated in said county, sold or contracted to be sold or leased, during the year ending the last day of December preceding; and the list furnished on or before the 1st day of April, A. D., 1884, in compliance with the terms of this section, shall include a complete list of all lands sold or leased, or contracted to be sold or leased prior to the last day of December, A. D., 1883.

A cursory examination of this section makes it painfully apparent that, so long as any railroad company holds the title to any real property in the Territory derived from any source whatever, such property is wholly exempt from its legitimate and just proportion of the public burdens. If, however, it should chance that some struggling pioneer, a little more favored than his fellows, has been enabled by frugal industry to lay aside a sufficient sum to purchase from such company a home, immediately upon the consummation of such purchase with the transfer of title all the burdens of taxation which properly belong to such property, and from which the company has enjoyed complete immunity, must be borne by such purchaser in order that the vast interests of such company may receive their full measure of protection under the laws. There is no exemption for the farmer. On the contrary, this law makes it necessary that he shall go to his daily labor a little earlier in the morning and work until the gathering shadows envelop the objects of his labor, in order that he may, in addition to his own taxes, pay those of the wealthy corporation as well.

Surely of these corporate spoilers was spoken the word of Agur, the son of Jaketh, even the prophecy:

There is a generation, whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.

When the law has chanced to declare in their favor they have been most punctilious in their insistence that its provisions shall be rigidly and literally complied with. When, as has almost continually been the case, the law has been adverse to their claims and pretensions, they have simply placed upon it the tourniquet of official subserviency, its plainest mandates have been disregarded, and the people left to deprecate the cruel results of corporate dictation in high official places.

During the twenty-one or twenty-two years of Republican supremacy which have elapsed since this grant was made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, every demand for an honest and reasonable exposition of the law has been made in vain. "Corporation logic" has invariably proved too much for the judicial fairness of those intrusted with the interpretation of the law. In all the litigation of the past arising out of this grant, the people, whose rights have constantly been invaded, have been the plaintiffs, because of the unrighteous rulings of Republican officials. With the advent of Democratic officials positions have been reversed, the railroad company is now the plaintiff, and the people have been greatly advantaged by the change.

In advocating the passage of the pending bill I am simply demanding that which the law entitles me to demand. The friends of the road insist, however, that even admitting that a strict construction of the law would authorize a forfeiture in the premises, the extreme honesty of the corporation in all its transactions, and its perfect good faith in constructing the road, should entitle it to a generous measure of forbearance on the part of Congress. It is only necessary to refer to its earlier records to completely overthrow these flimsy pretensions.

In 1881 an effort was made to transfer, without any authority of law whatever, to certain favored individuals, 180,000 shares of stock of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company valued at $18,000,000. Henry Villard objected to this proceeding, and filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the issuance of the stock. In his affidavit he uses this language:

After such preferred stock had been issued to the bondholders, to the creditors, and parties entitled to the same under said agreement, and after shares of common stock had been issued to all the then existing stockholders of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company who came in and surrendered their existing shares and took new common stock in the place of the same, there remained, as appears by the reports of the directors which have been published, an amount of shares of the common stock not required to satisfy the existing stockholders who were entitled to receive such shares in lieu of their former stock. Such surplus of shares amounted to one hundred and eighty thousand shares, or $18,000,000. Such shares have never been brought to the public for subscription.

No money has been received or paid for the same, as I am informed and believe, at any time. It is not pretended that any money or other consideration has been received or paid for the same since the organization of the company. The said shares remain in the control of the company, and scrip or certificates as I am informed and believe, were issued for the same to the treasurer of the company, subscribing himself as a trustee. It has been publicly announced that at a meeting of the executive committee of the board of directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, held on the 18th of March, 1881, it was determined to issue this 180,000 shares of stock and to make and deliver certificates for the same to certain persons who claim to be holders of certain interests which are known and described as "proprietary interests" in the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Such interests have been quoted and sold in the stock market for some time past, selling for about 20 cents on the dollar, while the common stock of the said company has been at the same time selling for between 40 and 50 cents on the dollar.

These proprietary interests, as I am informed and believe, are alleged or pretended to have been created under some agreement made as long ago as the year 1867, between certain persons who assumed to create and issue all the stock, to the amount of $100,000,000, of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and to distribute the same among themselves. I have not been able to obtain a copy of this agreement, nor can I state who now are or claim to be the holders of all shares described as proprietary interests, and claimed to have been created under this agreement; but I am advised and believe that if any such agreement was ever entered into, it was annulled and canceled and rendered impossible of execution by the foreclosure of the mortgage to which I have referred, and the reorganization of the company.

The agreement to which he refers, and I read from the court records of the superior court of New York, so that there can be no question as to its authenticity, is as follows:

Whereas a charter has been granted by the Congress of the United States for a railroad and telegraph line from some point on Lake Superior in Minnesota or Wisconsin to Puget Sound, with the right to construct a branch to Portland, Oreg., under the name of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and granting lands to aid in the construction of said road and telegraph to the amount of ten sections per mile on each side of said road in the States and of twenty sections per mile on each side in the Territories, which said grant of land amounts by estimate to nearly 47,000,000 of acres; and

Whereas the control of said charter and franchise is now in the hands of J. Gregory Smith, of Saint Albans, Vt., and his associates; and

Whereas said Smith and his associates have paid for the procurement of the charter and other expenses the sum of $102,000 in cash—

Paid for the procurement of the charter from Congress—

exclusive of any compensation for himself or his associates—

So determined and grasping were the demands upon that fund here in Washington that he could not save even a portion of it for the purpose of compensating himself and associates—and have issued the certificates of indebtedness of the company bearing interest from March, 1866, for $100,000 additional, and have agreed to recognize the stock of the company issued by Josiah Perhem, late president of the company, to the amount of $600,000; and

Whereas it is proposed for the purpose of providing—

Bear in mind that it was three years after the passage of the original charter that it occurred to these people that it was time to think of an efficient organization for the purpose of accomplishing results—for the purpose of providing for the early commencement and prosecution of the work of construction of said road and telegraph, to effect an efficient organization of said company, and to procure from Congress—

Forty-seven millions of acres of the public domain did not constitute sufficient aid, it seems, but they were to make an effort to—

Procure from Congress additional aid therefor by way of subsidy, and such other legislation as may be necessary in the premises; and

Whereas it is proposed for the purpose of more convenient organization—

More "convenient organization," not for the purpose of a lawful organization, but—

For the purpose of more convenient organization to divide the said enterprise into twelve shares to be valued at the rate of $8,500 per share: Now, therefore, for the purpose above set forth, this agreement made and concluded this 10th day of January, A. D. 1867, between J. Gregory Smith, of Saint Albans, Vt., acting for himself and associates, of the first part, and such persons as may hereafter become subscribers to this agreement, parties of the second part,

Witnesseth—

First. That each subscriber or party of the second part shall pay, on demand of said Smith, the sum of $8,500 for each one-twelfth part or share in said enterprise, and in that proportion for any lesser part so by himself subscribed for; and upon payment of said amount each subscriber aforesaid shall, and he does thereby, become jointly interested with said Smith and his associates, according to the number of shares or parts of shares so subscribed for by him, in the charter and franchise of the Northern Pacific Railroad, with all its rights, powers, privileges, and immunities.

It will be borne in mind, Mr. Speaker, that section 10 of the act of July 2, 1864, provides—

That all the people of the United States shall have the right to subscribe to the stock of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, until the whole capital named in this act of incorporation is taken up, by complying with the terms of the subscription, &c.

The subscriptions were to be opened to the public generally, and not to be confined to a few. But the provisions of this section did not suit the purposes of this small coterie who were endeavoring to swallow up this immense franchise for the trifling sum, in comparison with its value, of $102,000; so they were incontinently ignored.

In his complaint, in the action referred to, Mr. Villard thus characterizes this feature of the agreement:

The plaintiff alleges, on his information and belief, that the parties or persons to whom such stock was issued, or directed to be issued, claimed the same under and by virtue of some agreement made before the foreclosure and reorganization of said railroad, by which agreement certain parties undertook to divide among themselves all the capital stock of the said corporation, without offering the same to public subscription, and without paying any money for the same, as required by the said acts of Congress and the law of the land, and this plaintiff avers the fact to be that said agreement, if any such agreement there were, was fraudulent, illegal, and void; that neither the parties making the same nor the directors of the said company-corporation, nor the defendants hereinbefore named, had any right, power, or authority to make or issue any shares of stock of the said corporation, whether the same be designated as preferred or common stock, except upon an open and public subscription to be offered to all the people of the United States, nor except upon receiving for the same the sum of $100 in cash for each and every share so issued.

This indicates, among other things, that at the very threshold the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was inspired with no purpose or desire to carry on its operations within the clear scope and purview of the law. All of the law made and provided for its government was set at defiance at the very outset.

The agreement continues:

Second. It is mutually agreed by and between the parties that the best efforts of each and all shall be given to obtain from Congress the passage of a bill granting aid to the said company for the construction of said road and telegraph, and for such further legislation as may be needed; and that each party shall contribute according to the interest that he holds, the necessary funds for that purpose; said moneys and expenses to be paid and incurred under the direction of a committee to be appointed for that purpose.

Third. It is further agreed that each share in the enterprise shall be entitled to one director in the company to be elected at the next annual election of the board, and that in the mean time the vacancies that can now be obtained by the resignation of present members may be filled from such parties from among the subscribers hereto as may be by them designated.

Fourth. That as soon as the necessary legislation from Congress can be obtained a meeting of the subscribers shall be held at an early day to make such further organization as may be advisable, with a view to the commencement of the work of construction of said road and securing the land granted by the charter.

Fifth. Each party hereto may subdivide his interest according to his own choice, the subdivision and addition of new parties, however, not to change the mode and manner of representation in the management as set forth above.

I advert to these earlier records to emphasize the assertion that there never has been an honest purpose on the part of this company to proceed in accordance with the law.

For nearly three years after the passage of the act of 1864 practically nothing was accomplished toward the inauguration of work upon this enterprise. On the 10th day of January, 1867, the above agreement was executed, which told the story of the corruption which presided at the birth of this "benevolent monopoly."

From this agreement it will be seen that the first steps taken by this corporation were steeped in fraud and infamy. From the very outset it developed into a combination for the purposes of individual aggrandizement, by most questionable methods, and each succeeding management has religiously adhered to this cardinal principle of the organization.

Until the 20th day of May, 1869, the records show that the holders of these proprietary interests faithfully and zealously waited for something to turn up. On that date an agreement was executed with Jay Cooke & Co. looking to some substantial result.

Five years had elapsed since the granting of the charter by Congress, during which time the projectors of this enterprise had been so busily occupied in an effort to purchase the Congress of the United States that they had no time to even attempt a compliance with the terms of the act of 1864, nor is there any evidence that they ever contemplated doing so until it became certain that such compliance would result in their individual advancement.

An enterprise which is founded as the records show this to have been can at no stage of its existence be said to be characterized by any degree of honesty or good faith.

In addition to the corrupt tendencies of this corporation thus evidenced, there has never been that degree of good faith in the construction of the road which would entitle it to the special consideration of Congress. The work of construction was not even begun until 1870, six years after the granting by Congress of this magnificent charter. Congress originally intended that the road should be constructed as the result of the sale of the stock of the corporation. This intention is made manifest by the provisions of section 10 of the act of 1864, that "no mortgage or construction bonds shall ever be issued by said company on said road, or mortgage or lien made in any way except by the consent of the Congress of the United States."

It is evident, however, that there never existed a purpose on the part of the managers of this "gift enterprise" to construct the road within the scope of this well-defined intention of Congress.

On the 31st day of May, 1870, they procured from Congress permission to mortgage their franchise and other property interests, and then, and then only, was any substantial step taken toward the accomplishment of the result foreshadowed in the act of July 2, 1864. Every mile of this long line of road has been constructed with the proceeds of the sale of the mortgage bonds contemplated in the act of May 31, 1870. The individual capital of not one of the projectors of the enterprise has ever been for an instant jeopardized or endangered.

Whenever they could negotiate their mortgage bonds they resumed work on the road. Whenever the bonds could not be negotiated and the prosecution of the work required any investment whatever of private capital a deadly paralysis settled upon all their operations. The entire history of this corporation conclusively demonstrates that in its incipiency and throughout all its stages it was designed to enhance the personal fortunes of a few; and that the road was constructed only so fast as would contribute to such a result.

In the language of section 20 of the act of July 2, 1864, the object of said act was "to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order." The policy of this company has always been of such a character, however, as to lead to the conclusion that corporation construction has been wholly unable to distinguish between the "public interest and welfare" and the pecuniary advancement of the individual members of the corporation by whatever methods. Manifold illustrations of this policy might be given. In a single illustration, however, to which I shall direct attention, will be found all the indicia of highway robbery and piracy on the high seas, sufficiently marked to emphasize the company's entire policy.

More than twenty years ago, when the suggestion of transcontinental railroad communication was regarded as the offspring of the theorist and the dreamer, a few hardy spirits, who had picketed the outposts of civilization, planted a pioneer town in the Yakima Valley in Central Washington Territory, and called it Yakima city. Year by year they zealously guarded their isolated offspring until they saw it develop into a thriving, beautiful town, the commercial center of an exceedingly rich agricultural region. Under their progressive touch it became the largest town within a radius of 100 miles, and assumed sufficient importance to justify the Territorial Legislature in clothing it with all the functions of a city by an act of incorporation.

From the beginning the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had given the inhabitants of this little city every assurance that the coming of the road meant permanent prosperity for them. The clouds of frontier deprivation were to be rolled back, and the sunshine of an assured and permanent growth was to envelope the results of more than twenty years of frugal industry and toil. Many made modest investments, from scant means, in the town, with the purpose of realizing the legitimate profits certain to attend the arrival of railroad facilities. In this instance, as in every other, however, they who placed any reliance in the promises of this corporation found themselves the victims of Punic faith.

Up to the time of the completion of the road to Yakima city it was supposed that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had sounded all the depths and shoals of corporate infamy and rapacity. It remained for it, however, to emphasize, in its conduct, the most heartless, ruthless, and damnable transaction ever known to the full history of corporate speculation. To deliberately set on foot and push forward a speculation in ruined homes, shattered fortunes, and broken hearts requires such colossal and gigantic scoundrelism that the mind instinctively shrinks from its contemplation. And yet this is just what the Northern Pacific Railroad Company did in dealing with Yakima city.

When the time came for striking the blow, they pushed their road through the corporate limits of the old pioneer town of Yakima city to a point about 4 miles beyond and there located a town upon one of the odd sections embraced within the limits of the grant so long since forfeited by the company, and called it North Yakima. Certainly no one will seriously contend that Congress in its wildest flights of imagination ever contemplated that its bounty should become such an engine of oppression and destruction as it thus developed under the skillful manipulation of this company. The fact that this move carried consternation into many a hard-earned home was not sufficient to turn them from their nefarious purpose.

The fact that in pursuing such a course they advertised themselves as the monumental liars of the century was insufficient to deter them from the infamy. The fact that bankruptcy and ruin hovered over many a household as the result of the success of the assault upon the old town seemed to urge them to renewed effort. It mattered not to them that the old town had been made sacred by the associations of nearly a generation; that within its precincts children had grown to manhood and womanhood; that within its quiet churchyard "the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep;" and in short, that all the tender and beautiful memories of home, both joyous and sad, were rudely trampled upon and uprooted.

Seemingly fearful lest, with any encouragement whatever, the feeling of devotion to the home of nearly a generation might induce a resistance to this scheme of pillage and plunder, the order was issued to afford the old town no railroad facilities whatever. Every passenger residing in Yakima city who was forced to ride over the road was compelled to go to North Yakima to take the train, notwithstanding the fact that every train passed directly through the center of the old town.

People walked about as in the shadow of a great bereavement and cursed the evil hour in which Congress chartered so villainous a combination. A more daring, shameless outrage has no place in the wide range of corporate villainy.

It is marvelous that in the face of such an exhibit as this any one can be found to insist that this corporation is entitled to any consideration save that which belongs to the common marauder upon the property of others. It is entitled to no consideration at the hands of honest people.

Alaric and his Goths would have blushed to have been charged with such wholesale and comprehensive villainy.

Do I misrepresent my constituency in thus boldly denouncing the crushing methods of corporate brigandage? As demonstrating that the people are actively alive to their present wrongs, I read from a petition to Congress recently received, signed by 438 citizens of Klikitat County, in which the characterization of this company's methods is none too pronounced:

"That the policy of the company has been such as to alienate the affections and good-will of the people of the Territory; that they have discriminated in rates; that they have induced settlers to locate on and improve their lands under a circular notice that they would be sold for $2.60 per acre; but that as soon as they obtained title to said lands, the value of which had been enhanced by the labor that had been bestowed upon them by reason of this promise, the company shamefully and unblushingly broke faith with the people and demanded and collected from $2.60 to $18 per acre, the average being about $5 per acre; thereby reaping the benefits of their own fraudulent violation of contracts and compelling the settlers to pay them exorbitant prices for the land, or to see the fruits of the labor of years pass into the hands of strangers, speculators, and swindling adventurers.

That the history of this company is a chapter of broken promises, misrepresentations, and double-dealing; that it has cheated the people, juggled with their most vital interests, and betrayed their confidence until there is a feeling of distrust and fear seizing those who have settled and improved what is known as railroad lands; that the permanent settlement and improvement of the country is retarded; that the hopes and energies of the people are paralyzed, and that every material interest of the country is most seriously impaired.

A close and careful examination of the record of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company will convince the most skeptical that the only evidences of good faith evinced by its management have arisen not through any consideration whatever for the rights of the public, but from a desire to advance their individual interests.

Having established the utter lack of honesty or good faith in connection with the transactions of this company, it becomes important to ascertain just what power resides in Congress or elsewhere to restore to the people the lands withheld from settlement for so many years for the benefit of this company.

Section 3 of the act of 1864 contains the following granting clause:

That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of 20 alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as said company may adopt, through the Territories of the United States, and 10 alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad whenever it passes through any State, and whenever, on the line thereof, the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed and a plat thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

It has been held by the Supreme Court repeatedly that the words "there be, and hereby is, granted" import a present grant when unaccompanied by words which restrain their present operation. These words of restraint in the present grant are to be found in section 8 of said act, which is as follows:

And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876.

This section is mandatory and provides that the acquisition of each and every "grant, right, and privilege" is dependent upon the construction of the road within a specified time. This section was subsequently amended so as to fix the time as the 4th day of July, 1877. The Committee on Public Lands have fixed the 4th day of July, 1879, as the date of the expiration of the grant. In this conclusion I am unable to agree. A careful analysis of the legislation in this connection I think will establish the 4th day of July, 1877, as the date. Did these two sections stand alone, there is no doubt but that, in order to acquire title to any of the lands contemplated by the act, the entire road should have been located and constructed within the time specified.

Section 4, however, contains certain provisions from which the conclusion is possible that Congress intended that as fast as each section of 25 miles was completed the company should receive patents for the lands lying opposite to and conterminous therewith; but in view of the provisions of section 8, it is absolutely essential that each section of 25 miles must have been constructed within the time specified, to entitle the company to the issue of patents for the lands conterminous therewith.

From a careful consideration of all the legislation in the premises, I am justified in the conclusion that this is a grant upon conditions precedent, and that time is one of these precedent conditions.

Throughout the act of 1864 the intention of Congress to throw around its princely generosity the safeguards of a condition precedent is manifest.

In addition to the conditions to be found in section 8, section 19 contains a most pronounced precedent condition in the following language:

And be it further enacted, That unless said Northern Pacific Railroad Company shall obtain bona fide subscriptions to the stock of said company to the amount of $2,000,000, with 10 per cent. paid within two years after the passage and approval of this act, it shall be null and void.

By the terms of this section unless certain results are accomplished within a period of two years after the passage and approval of the act it shall be null and void. This section indicates very clearly the intention of Congress relative to the character of the conditions contained in the grant from the beginning to the end. There is nothing that antagonizes the position that Congress intended that certain well-defined results should be attained by this company before they should become entitled to any portion of the land grant contemplated.

Section 20 of the act of 1864 provides that Congress may add to, alter, amend, or repeal the act, having due regard for the rights of the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company. Every step taken by Congress within the scope of this provision most conclusively fixes the status of the grant as one upon conditions precedent.

In the United States vs. Freeman (3 How., 556), the Supreme Court of the United States thus lay down the rule governing the construction in such cases:

The correct rule of interpretation is, that if divers statutes relate to the same thing they all ought to be taken in consideration in construing any one of them; and it is an established rule of law that all acts in pari materia are to be taken together as if they were one law. If a thing contained in a subsequent statute be within the reason of a former statute, it shall be taken to be within the meaning of that statute; and if it can be gathered from a subsequent statute in pari materia, what meaning the Legislature attached to the words of a former statute, they will amount to a legislative declaration of its meaning, and will govern the construction of the first statute.

In the act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 305), Congress exercised the power conferred upon it in section 20 of the original act, and provided:

That before any land granted to said company by the United States shall be conveyed to any party entitled thereto under any of the acts incorporating or relating to said company, there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same to the said company or party in interest.

In Railroad Company vs. McShane, 22 Wall., 462, the Supreme Court, in determining the character of the condition created by a provision identical with this, reached the following conclusion:

That the payment of costs of surveying of the land is a condition precedent to the right to receive the title from the Government can admit of no doubt. Until this is done the equitable title is incomplete. There remains a payment to be made to perfect it.

In a case involving the settlement of just this question, in which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was a party (Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Rockne), the Supreme Court recently affirmed its decision in the case just cited, and held that the act of July 15, 1870, embodied a condition precedent. Keeping entirely within the rule laid down in the case of United States vs. Freeman, if any legislative declaration was required to fix the status of this grant it is to be found in this act of July 15, 1870, which unequivocally declares the grant to be one upon conditions precedent.

Nor is this all the legislation of Congress bearing upon this point. Prior to this act Congress had put forth the most unequivocal legislative declaration of the meaning of the act of 1864. Recognizing the fact that the time within which this road should be completed was a condition precedent to the acquisition by this company of any right to enjoy any of the privileges enumerated in the act, by joint resolution 1866, 14 Stat., 355, Congress declared:

That the time for commencing and completing the Northern Pacific Railroad and all its several branches is extended for the term of two years.

Again, on July 1, 1868, the last day of the extension, work not having been commenced in accordance with the undoubted requirements of the law, and still regarding time as a condition precedent and as of the essence of the contract, Congress provided, 15 Statutes, 225, that section 8 of the act of 1864 should be amended so as to read:

* * * That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from and after the 2d day of July, 1868, and shall complete not less than 100 miles per year after the second year thereafter, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1877.

From this subsequent legislation the conclusion is irresistible that Congress originally, in 1864, made a grant upon conditions precedent, and that subsequently, in 1866 and 1868, becoming convinced that the grant must lapse for want of a compliance with its conditions within the time specified, new life was imparted to it by legislative action. At the expiration of this extension no further action was taken, and whether the limitation be taken as the 4th day of July, 1877, or the 4th day of July, 1879, no action was had on the part of Congress, and every acre of land opposite to and conterminous with the uncompleted portion of the road at that day was forfeited to the United States for the failure in the performance of a condition precedent, and became subject to entry under the public-land laws of the United States.

Up to and including July 4, 1877, the President of the United States was authorized to issue patents for the lands opposite to and conterminous with each section of 25 miles completed within that time. After the expiration of that period he was wholly without authority to issue any patents whatever in the premises. When Congress limited the time in which this road should be built it also limited the time in which patents might issue. This limitation was as operative in governing executive action as it possibly could be in determining the rights of the company. A temporary statute is in force up to the time for which it is made. (9 Bac. Abr., 223.)

"The time within which the condition precedent is to be performed is as much the essence of the contract as any other part of the requirement of the condition. Conditions precedent must be strictly, literally, and punctually performed; and if not so performed within the time provided, no act or declaration of forfeiture is necessary, and no subsequent performance can avail." (2 Dallas, 317; 6 Otto, 544.)

"Not even equity will relieve against failure to perform within the time allowed a condition precedent." (Willard's Eq. Jurs., 274–5; 16 Wallace, 229–30; Hilliard on Vendors, 184–5; Pomeroy on Contracts, 379.)

"Nor when the time of performing a condition, whether precedent or subsequent, is fixed by statute." (2 Otto, 68; 2 Story's Eq. Jurs., 103, 27.)

"Nor when time is the essence of the condition, whether precedent or subsequent." (Willard's Eq. Jurs., 294.)

The representatives of this railroad company who in 1866 and 1868 were clamorous for legislation preventing the death of their grant, are at this time most diligent in their efforts to make it appear that this grant of lands was irrevocably dedicated for the construction of this railroad, and that it could not possibly be used for any other purpose. As sustaining this theory great reliance is placed upon the decision of Judge Deady, in the United States district court for the district of Oregon, on the 27th of June, 1882, in the case of United States vs. William Childers. In this decision Judge Deady holds "that the grant is not a grant in præsenti, and that it was in effect a grant upon conditions precedent."

In this conclusion I agree. His suggestion, however, that it was the intention of Congress to set apart and devote the lands in question absolutely to the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad is nowhere sustained in all the legislation of Congress upon this subject, as I think I have already demonstrated. Section 9 of the act of 1864 is not at all incompatible with the idea of a grant upon conditions precedent. This section reads as follows:

That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein, and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions thereof and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then, in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States, by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the said road.

It will be observed that in this section, as in every other section in the act containing any essential provision, the consideration of time is an important one. By this section Congress is simply empowered to take such steps in the event of any breach of conditions as may be needful and necessary looking to the speedy completion of the road. Congress is not required to do so, but may do so or not in its discretion.

Section 9 can not be so construed as to justify or warrant the conclusion that Congress was directed by its provisions to build this road in the event of a failure on the part of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to do so. The power of Congress to declare a forfeiture for a breach of the conditions of the grant is nowhere abridged, in section 9 or elsewhere in the act.

Had the Congress of the United States had in its mind in 1864 this irrevocable dedication theory, which is so conveniently invoked at this time, the task of substituting in the phrase "may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to secure a speedy completion of the said road" the word "must" would not have been surrounded by any serious or insurmountable difficulty. The fact is Congress meant exactly what it said, which simply was that it might, in the event of a breach of condition, devote granted lands to the construction of the road, should the public interest demand it, and that it might, on the other hand, restore the land to settlement and occupancy under the public land laws of the United States, should the public interest demand it.

The peculiar theory advanced by the railroad people was born of the necessities of the corporation and was not dreamed of until their grant expired by limitation of time because of the refusal of Congress to further extend its operation. In framing his decision Judge Deady has entirely ignored that condition of the grant which appeared to Congress to be of sufficient importance to justify two separate and distinct pieces of legislation. I refer to the condition of time. As I have already shown, almost every piece of legislation subsequent to the act of 1864 has been declarative of the meaning of said act.

If Congress contemplated by the act of July 2, 1864, a grant in præsenti upon conditions subsequent, the act of July 15, 1870, which the Supreme Court of the United States has decided embodies a condition precedent, must be wholly nugatory, since it assumes to legislate with reference to property to which the United States has no title whatever. In the case of The Northern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Iver L. Rockne, county treasurer of Traill County, October term, 1885, in construing the act of July 15, 1870, the Supreme Court, instead of reaching such a conclusion, reaffirmed the decisions in the cases of Railway Company vs. Prescott, 16 Wallace, 603, and Railway Company vs. McShane, 22 Wallace, 444.

A simple present grant, as every lawyer knows, is a grant where the title, the fee-simple, passes with the act, by the words of the act itself, from the State to the grantee. It is equivalent to a deed in fee-simple to the property in question, and the State thereafter is completely divested of title, and can no more control the property the title to which has thus passed forever out of its hands than it can control property to which it never had the shadow of right, that may, perchance, belong to the same or any other citizen. To assume that Congress may retake to the Government all the pre-emptions and homesteads and grants that have ever been made by the Government is a proposition too monstrous to need discussion.

A present grant with conditions subsequent is a grant where the fee passes from the State to the grantee by the words of the grant itself, the deed, the instrument of transfer, the law itself containing a clause, which is a notice to all the world, that if certain conditions are not performed within a certain time the fee to the granted premises will revert to the grantor. It is like unto deed of gift of property to a daughter conditioned that if she should die without issue the property shall revert to the estate of the grantor.

A grant with conditions precedent is a promise that if the party to whom the promise is made will perform certain conditions on or before a certain specified time the State will thereupon make to the grantee a full and complete title in fee-simple—issue its letters patent to the grantee or his assigns.

Observe that neither a simple present grant, nor a present grant with conditions subsequent, requires patent, for if the fee does not pass by the words of the act itself, if the act does not pass the fee from the State to the grantee, the grant is less than a present grant, either simple or with subsequent conditions. Hence as the law constitutes the transfer, after the passage of the act the Government, no longer possessing the fee in the land, can lend no additional validity to the title by the issuance of a patent.

Where a grant is upon precedent conditions Congress might convert its promise into a grant in præsenti upon conditions subsequent, or might give it full fruition by adding a fee-simple absolute—a simple present grant. Congress could transfer any title or remnant of title the Government might possess; but Congress can not grant that which it does not own.

Now if the fee in this property passed from the United States prior to July 15, 1870, as it must have passed had there been a grant in præsenti, simple or with conditions subsequent, the Government could not then require the performance of a condition precedent to the transfer of the fee, for it had already parted with the fee. The Government can not take the property of a citizen from him and require him to perform a precedent condition before he can again be vested with his property. It must of necessity follow that if on July 15, 1870, the company was vested with a present grant the act of that date was wholly nugatory and of no effect; and if the act of July 15, 1870, was a valid piece of legislation, as held by the Supreme Court of the United States, the previous grant was a grant upon conditions precedent. It could not have been otherwise.

Having clearly demonstrated the power of Congress to declare this grant forfeited for non-compliance with the plain and manifest conditions of the contract, it becomes important to determine from the standpoint of public policy the propriety of exerting that power, which it undeniably possesses. A brief but careful examination of all the facts in the premises will conclusively prove that this grant of lands has been a scourge and curse to the people. At the very threshold of the grant a monstrous iniquity was imposed upon the toil and labor of the pioneer settlers of the remote regions of the Republic.

Congress in 1864, instigated by this corporation, provided that every settler upon the even sections within the railroad limits should pay $1.25 more for his land than he who had planted his home outside the baleful shadow of this grant. Every settler who, because of the crowded condition of the public domain, has been forced, in pursuit of a home, within the limits of this railroad grant, has been forced as a condition precedent to the acquisition of his home to make a donation of $1.25 per acre to reimburse the Government for the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. It is in the nature of a special tax imposed by Congress on all the people for the building up of an enterprise which has for its ultimate object the enrichment of those connected with it.

I submit that it is most difficult to conceive of a more unrighteous piece of legislation. The capitalist who dwells in the cities, in that far away western country, pays no such price for the privileges of railroad communication. In addition to all this, after having laboriously gathered together and paid the increased demands arising out of the presence of this railroad grant, an additional burden is imposed upon them of paying all the additional taxes made necessary in the protection of such large and varied property interests. It is well known that this railroad company pays no taxes, unless forced to do so in the court of last resort. These considerations are most weighty and deserving of the gravest attention. They, however, become practically insignificant when we proceed to the consideration of the infamous contract upon which is based the conveyance of the company's alleged title to these lands.

By its provisions every public burden chargeable upon the land is lifted from the broad and stalwart shoulders of the company and put upon the weak and overburdened shoulders of the settler, carrying out the avowed policy of the company to pay no taxes when able in any manner to avoid so doing. Although exempt from taxation on its lands in the Territory, by Territorial legislation, while the title remains in the company, for fear that in some inconceivable way it might become subject to some measure of the burden, piratical ingenuity inserted the following in this indefensible contract:

The purchaser shall, so long as the contract remains in force, pay all taxes and assessments, ordinary and extraordinary, that may be levied or assessed, or that may become chargeable on the premises or any part thereof; and all buildings and improvements that shall be erected, placed, or made thereon, shall not be removed therefrom, but shall be and remain the property of the company until the contract shall be fully performed by the purchaser; and should default be made in any of the payments of principal or interest, at the time for the payment thereof; or in case the purchaser should fail to pay the taxes or assessments upon the land, the contract, at the option of the company, shall be null and void, and all the payments that shall have been made on the land, and all the building and improvements shall be and forever remain the absolute property of the company, and the purchaser shall have no right or claim thereto, it being expressly understood that time is of the essence of the contract, and that the performance of each and every of the covenants and agreements is as much a part of the consideration of the contract, and a condition-precedent, as the payment of the purchase-money.

How like the exactions of the feudal barons these unconscionable restrictions appear! How entirely devoid of anything like common decency they are! When some one is to be oppressed "time is the essence of the contract." When an assault is in contemplation upon the scanty accumulations of daily toil "the performance of each and every of the covenants and agreements is as much a part of the consideration of the contract, and a condition precedent, as the payment of the purchase-money." When an outraged people demand the literal construction of the conditions precedent in the act of July 2, 1864, a change comes over the spirit of this "benevolent monopoly," and that condition which, in their infamous contract is precedent, becomes subsequent in the act of July 2, 1864.

Having thus mortgaged the bone and sinew of the country, it was necessary to suggest some method of foreclosure, so the following altogether one-sided provision was inserted:

And in case the purchaser should fail to pay, when due, any installment of principal or interest, or to pay any taxes or assessments at the date when the same shall become payable, or shall be in default in respect of any other condition of the agreement, the whole amount of principal unpaid shall at the option of the company become due and payable forthwith, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum until paid.

It would seem from such a showing that the limits of oppression had been reached. The purchaser has an expert to deal with, however, in matters of this kind, so he must submit to the following additional burden:

The company reserves a strip of land extending through the land sold (or so much of such strip of land as may be within the sold premises) of the width of 200 feet on each side of the center line of the Northern Pacific Railroad or Cascade branch, or 50 feet on each side of the center line of any other branch or other railroad operated or to be operated, in whole or in part, by the company, to be used for right of way, or other railroad purposes, in case the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad has been, or of such branch or other railroad as has been or shall be, located on or over or within 200 feet respectively of the premises; and the purchaser shall, on receiving notice so to do from the company, erect a good and substantial fence, sufficient to turn stock and to comply with the requirements of law, on the line or lines between any part of the premises and the lands reserved to the company for right of way on other railroad prior and herein expressed; and thereafter ——— shall maintain such fence or fences in a good, substantial, and sufficient manner. The company reserves the coal and iron in certain of its lands in Montana and Western Washington.

Herein is provided a burden to which there is no end. It is a continuing, never-ending incumbrance. Through all the generations of a family the power of this company to run a branch road over any portion of the purchased premises is assured.

Does any one doubt that such incumbrances upon real titles work a lasting and substantial injury to a country? Does any one imagine that the home-builder can be induced to surround himself with such rank and heartless tyranny? Such contracts have resulted and are resulting in checking the tide of immigration into Washington Territory, and are, of themselves, entirely sufficient to justify the restoration of this unearned grant to the public domain.

In accomplishing this great act of justice the right of every bona fide purchaser should be amply guarded. Relying upon the erroneous representations of Government officials that this company had earned its grant, thousands of settlers have purchased their homes from the company, and a failure to protect such purchasers would result in widespread distress. While I insist that this company shall be made to restore to the public domain every acre of land not earned by a rigid and literal compliance with the terms of the grant, I insist at the same time that every settler who has been drawn into a controversy over the title to his home by reason of this grant shall not have his burdens increased by a failure on the part of Congress to offset by legislation the misleading rulings of Republican officials. I would go even further in the direction indicated than does the bill under consideration.

I would confirm to every purchaser, from the company, who is residing thereon, the title to every acre of his purchase. I would be in favor of this course, and I would supplement it with such legislation as would enable the United States to recover by suit from the company the value of the lands, the title to which is thus confirmed. The Committee on Public Lands have, however, submitted to the House in the pending measure a proposition to confirm bona fide purchasers from the company in their titles to the extent of 320 acres without reference to actual residence thereon. While this does not go so far as I would be willing to go, it will tend largely to avoid the bad effects which will follow a failure to include some such legislation in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the day of unquestioning acquiescence in railroad domination, in this country, has passed away. The day when the American citizen was forced to humbly sue at the feet of the railroad magnate for permission to enjoy the natural rights of man has given place to a kindlier day, and a mighty protest is taking its place in history as the outgrowth of the gross wrongs committed upon the sovereignty of the American people.

"The multitude is patient to a certain point," and the American people, after years of lethargy and indifference have reached that point, and refuse longer to enact the rôle of pack-horses for the corporations of this country.

Mr. HENLEY. I think it would be satisfactory for gentlemen all around if some understanding could be reached as to when the previous question shall be called. Gentlemen on the other side have said, under the intimation that the previous question would be called at a certain hour, that they would not have time to express their views upon this subject; and I want to get from them an expression of opinion as to what may be agreeable in that respect.

Mr. STRAIT. I think that debate had better be allowed to run.

Mr. VAN EATON. I ask the gentleman from California to allow the general debate to run along until 5 o'clock at all events.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And then we will be better able to determine when the previous question may be ordered.

Mr. HENLEY. I will make this proposition to the other side that the previous question will not be called to-day, but that general debate shall be continued up to the ordinary hour of recess, and to-morrow as soon as this comes up I will call the previous question upon it.

Mr. REAGAN. I must object to this debate going over.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest that the debate be continued up to the hour of adjournment, with the understanding that the previous question is to be called at that time.

Mr. HENLEY. I am in favor of that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let it go on and see how it comes out.

Mr. REAGAN. I give notice that if the debate is not closed to-day I will antagonize the bill with the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is a matter which involves a large question and very important interests. We have spent many a day this session in discussing affairs which involved less than $100, and it is now proposed that we shall dispose absolutely at 5 o'clock this afternoon of a question which involves thirty million acres of land and very important and serious principles of law, which need to be discussed. There are several gentlemen who desire to make some observations with regard to this. There is no disposition to prevent action on this bill after due and proper discussion. It seems to me the discussion might as well run on this afternoon, because it is in the power of the gentleman from California representing the Committee on Public Lands to call for the previous question at any time when he gets the floor and sees fit to do so and he will be recognized by the Chair for that purpose. If he chooses to call the previous question at 1 o'clock to-morrow and the House sustains him, that will be an end of the matter. It seems to me that is fair and just and that we should go on now without a request for unanimous consent to close up the debate; because from the very nature of a debate of this kind there may be some questions come up that it will be desirable to discuss, and we may find ourselves confronted with the unanimous decision of the House, so that those questions can not be discussed in the presence of the House.

Mr. HENLEY. I made the proposition I did in order to learn if the disposition on the other side of the House was in good faith to come to a vote on this bill within a reasonable time. The response of the gentleman from Maine is not satisfactory, and the House now understands he is unwilling to enter into an agreement to that effect. I therefore now move that general debate close at 15 minutes to 5 o'clock.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from California has not the floor for the purpose of making that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has the floor.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is to proceed with the debate. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. PAYSON. Without prejudice to my right to the floor, I am willing to yield it to the gentleman from California to make the motion he has indicated.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object to that.

Mr. PAYSON. I am anxious an amicable adjustment should be arrived at.

Mr. HENLEY. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has yielded to me.

Mr. PAYSON. Before doing so I propose to occupy a minute in my own right. As I have said, I am desirous there should be some amicable arrangement with reference to closing the debate. On the other hand I appreciate the desire of several gentlemen opposed to the bill to be heard in reference to it. I shall be content when the proper time comes to occupy the litfle fragments of time allotted to me by gentlemen who have spoken at length. Without interfering with the right of anybody else, I have no objection, if it is the sense of the House, without prejudice to my right to occupy the floor, to yield to my colleague on the committee to make the motion he has stated.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object. If the gentleman yields the floor that ends it.

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman can yield the floor for a specific purpose, and has yielded to me to make the motion.

Mr. PAYSON. Without prejudice to my right I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from California whether he really desires to pass the bill?

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman knows we desire to pass the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I suggest you allow a reasonable amount of debate in order to facilitate that object.

Mr. HENLEY. What is a reasonable amount of debate?

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Illinois has suggested it; and it has been suggested this bill might have been brought in a long time ago. It is brought here in the late hours of the session.

Mr. COBB. It was brought in on an early day of the session.

Mr. REAGAN. It is obviously the object of gentlemen on the other side to delay action on this bill.

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] yields the floor to me that I may make the motion indicated.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object to any such arrangement.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois can yield the floor.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the Speaker advised as to the parliamentary condition of affairs at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] yielded a portion of his time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and also that the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. VOORHEES] yielded some time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. VOORHEES] yielded me fifteen minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has been recognized as entitled to the floor.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes. Now, Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary inquiry is this: Have I a right, without prejudice to my own right to resume the floor, to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] in order that he may make a motion for the purpose of limiting debate?

Mr. REED, of Maine. In the face of an objection.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. In the face of an objection, the Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois could not yield to the gentlemen from California to make a motion so as to cut off other gentlemen who may hereafter obtain a right to the floor. In other words, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] yielded to the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] to move the previous question, and if the previous question were ordered by the House, the effect would be to stop the debate and take the gentleman from Illinois off the floor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] did not move the previous question. He simply moved to limit the debate so as to have it terminate at 15 minutes past 5 o'clock.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That motion can not be made.

The SPEAKER. The motion to limit debate in the House can not be made. This bill is not being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole; it is being considered by the House as an ordinary legislative body, and it has been often decided that the only way to limit debate in the House is by the previous question or by unanimous consent.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYSON. I do not yield the floor. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I represent the same side of this question that has been advocated by the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. VOORHEES], and as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] desires to be heard in opposition to the bill, I will yield to him, reserving my time.

Mr. STRAIT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill so that it may be pending.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following: That in consequence of the failure of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to construct its road from Walla Walla junction to Portland, in the State of Oregon, a distance of 214 miles, over which line the said company have running connections with the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, and have abandoned the building of their own road between said points, the United States resume the title to the lands granted to said company coterminous with such unfinished part of said road, and so much of the act making the grant of lands to said Northern Pacific Railroad Company as applies between Walla Walla and Portland is hereby repealed and the said land is resumed as a part of the public domain.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to offer this as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. STRAIT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] has the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] has the floor unless he yields it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Well, Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. My point is that as the House is now engaged in general debate and has not reached the stage of the proceedings at which amendments can be offered, this amendment is not in order.

The SPEAKER. This is not a case in which the House is engaged in general debate in the ordinary sense of that term. General debate takes place in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. This is simply the consideration of a bill in the House, and any gentleman who obtains the floor in his own right has a right to offer an amendment at this stage of the bill, to be voted upon after the debate closes.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I have implicit confidence in the Chair always.

Mr. STRAIT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague [Mr. GILFILLAN].

Mr. GILFILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands as a substitute for the Senate bill. No one can be more profoundly impressed than myself with the fact that in the brief time which seems to be allotted to any one member here to discuss the important issues involved in this question it is impossible for any gentleman to begin to do anything like justice to those issues or to himself.

With all due deference to the gentlemen who have preceded me on this question, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are to try the issues here not by the use of declamation, which has merely a tendency to irritate passion and prejudice against railway companies and other corporations; but that we are to come down to the record, examine the issues as they are, and try them upon the facts and the law in the case.

It is idle also to try to arraign this or that political party as responsible for the present condition of things, for I would simply remind our friends on the other side of the Chamber that this doctrine of land grants was inaugurated by the great prophet of Democracy in these modern days, Stephen A. Douglas, and almost every statesman of that persuasion down to the late lamented Vice-President, whose memory is still fresh in the minds of us all, was an advocate of grants of this kind as conducive to the public interest and promotive of the public good. And the party on this side of the House can "throw no stones," for they themselves in this respect "live in glass houses." The Republican party, and the better part of it, has been devoted during all these years to the granting of just such aids as that involved in this grant to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and it is through just such a policy as this that our country has made the rapid and unprecedented strides in growth and development which the last quarter of a century has witnessed.

This is no longer a party issue, for both parties have receded from this doctrine upon the ground that public necessity no longer exists for aid of this kind. For more than a decade both parties have abandoned the policy as well as the practice of granting lands to States or railroads to aid enterprises of this character.

Now let us go back to the contract rights of the parties in controversy; for I apprehend that it is simply a question of contract rights and nothing else. There is no question here but that this railway company has discharged and is continuing to discharge its duty. This is not a proceeding to impeach its charter; it is simply a question of forfeiture of lands. Both political parties and all parties are agreed upon forfeiting such lands and such only as we have the right to forfeit—the right in law and in good morals. There is no party in this land to-day that is pledged to any doctrine which involves dishonesty or want of integrity or moral turpitude.

Now I undertake to say right here that when we come to view this issue in the light of the facts and the law there is a great deal of moral turpitude in the form of the proposition which now comes before this House. I undertake to say we have neither the legal right nor the moral right to do what is proposed to be done by the substitute presented here by the Committee on Public Lands.

This whole matter has its origin in the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Statutes at Large, 365). The first section of that act creates this company. The company thus created and existing under this act of Congress has ever since been under the control of Congress. The act is subject to amendment; and for every dereliction of duty, for every violation of any provision of this act, for every neglect of a condition precedent or subsequent, this company has during every moment of its lifetime been amenable to Congress. Congress has had the power at any time to call it to account; and if this company was proving inefficient, or dishonest, or not faithful to the trust which was committed to it, it has been within the legal power of Congress at any time to resume all the rights which were granted by the original act and to control this whole property.

Section 1 of this act enumerates a long list of corporators, comprising some of the best known public men in the country, gleaned from some twenty-seven or twenty-eight States of this Union, thus seeking to make this enterprise a matter of national interest, represented by men from all the different States, selected for their well-known ability, integrity, and trustworthiness. It creates them a body-corporate by the name of the Northern Pacific Railway Company. This section gives them the right not only to be a corporation, but to construct a railway planned and mapped out in this act from the great lakes of the continent to the Pacific Ocean by the nearest and most practicable railroad route.

Section 2 gives the right of way for the requisite width of 200 feet through all the public lands of the United States; and inasmuch as for a long distance the road was to traverse the new country, a wilderness inhabited only by hostile savages, the Government in the closing paragraph of section 2 assumed the following obligation:

The United States shall extinguish as rapidly as may be consistent with public policy and the welfare of the said Indians the Indian titles to all lands falling under the operation of this act, and acquired in the donation to the road named in this bill.

Section 3 is devoted to the granting of the land.

Section 4 provides for the construction of the road in sections of 25 miles each; for its inspection under the control and authority of the executive department of the Government, and for its acceptance when found to have been completed in accordance with the conditions of the act.

Section 5 contains the provisions and specifications by which the company was to be controlled as to the manner of the construction and the kind of road.

Section 3 also specifies the considerations for which the Government enters upon this enterprise, "to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway."

These purposes are further stated in section 11, as follows:

That said Northern Pacific Railroad, or any part thereof, shall be a post-route and a military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and all other Government service, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charges for such Government transportation.

The objects of the act are further recited in the last section, where an unlimited right to repeal, amend, or modify the act is reserved, in order to secure the objects sought to be accomplished by the act.

Sections 8 and 9 prescribe the conditions upon which the grant is made and the conditions upon which the lands and other rights granted shall be held.

The company duly organized and accepted the grant. The time within which this road was to be completed was by the original act limited to July 4, 1876; by subsequent legislation this time was extended to July 4, 1879.

Now, what has been done by the railway company under this act in execution of these provisions on their part? The company not being able to raise the necessary funds to prosecute the work, Congress, in 1870, by a joint resolution, to be found in the sixteenth volume of the Statutes at Large, page 378, authorized the company to issue bonds and to mortgage its property to raise means to prosecute the enterprise. The work was begun and carried forward with such progress that up to and including the year 1874 529 miles of road were constructed and accepted in pursuance of the act. This much, then, was indisputably done within the time of the original limit as extended; and this embraces the only portion of the road in relation to which the Public Lands Committee do not propose a forfeiture of the granted lands. They concede that the company has earned and is entitled to the lands pertaining to this portion of the road.

The financial disaster of 1873 put a stop to the work and the company was unable to resume operations during the continuance of the depression, which prevailed throughout the country for more than five years. In the mean time the bondholders had become the owners of the property and of the enterprise with all the grants, rights, privileges, and franchises of the company, including the right to be a corporation by means of the foreclosure of the mortgage. They reorganized the company, and in the fall of 1878 the work was resumed, and from that time the construction was carried on unremittingly, so that the following miles of road have been completed, examined, and accepted by the President of the United States under the provisions of section 4 in the following years—that is to say: In 1880, 150 miles; in 1881, 325 miles; in 1882, 404 miles; in 1883, 411 miles; in 1884, 112 miles; in 1885, 88 miles; in 1886, 40 miles; or a total of nearly 2,100 miles.

The work has been accomplished by means of money borrowed on the security of the land grant as authorized and sanctioned by the said acts of Congress.

The purpose of the pending bill as reported by the Public Lands Committee is to declare a forfeiture of the land grant pertaining to so much of the road as was not completed strictly within time, or all of such grant pertaining to all that part of the road west of the Missouri River. The sole ground for such action is that the whole road was not completed by July 4, 1879.

The first and important question now is whether Congress can so declare a forfeiture of these lands, and that depends upon the proper construction of the granting act. As preliminary to this main question there naturally arise two other questions.

First. Did Congress reserve to itself the right to declare a forfeiture for breach of condition-subsequent, or does such rights follow as the legal effect of such breach? And second, if yea, has such right been waived or lost by the United States?

The grant embraced in this act is manifestly one of the class which by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court has been held to be a grant in præsenti upon condition-subsequent, and the sections of the act directly bearing upon the grant of lands are sections 3, 5, 8, and 9, which are as follows:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be and is hereby granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores, over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as said company may adopt, through the Territories of the United States and ten alternate sections of land per mile, on each side of said railroad, whenever it passes through any State, and whenever, on the line thereof the United States have full title, not reserved, sold, granted, or otherwise appropriated, and free from pre-emption or other claims or rights at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed and the plat thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and whenever prior to said term, any of said sections or parts of sections, shall have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers or pre-empted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in alternate sections and designated by odd numbers, not more than 10 miles beyond the limits of said alternate sections.

SEC. 5. That the said Northern Pacific Railroad shall be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, with all the necessary draws, culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, turnouts, stations, and watering-places and all other appurtenances, including furniture and rolling stock equal in all respects to railroads of the first class, when prepared for business, with rails of the best quality, manufactured from American iron. And a uniform gauge shall be established throughout the entire length of the road. And there shall be constructed a telegraph line of the most substantial and approved description to be operated along the entire line: Provided, That said company shall not charge the Government higher rates than they do individuals for like transportation and telegraph service. And it shall be the duty of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to permit any other railroad, which shall be authorized to be built by the United States or by the Legislature of any Territory or State in which the same may be situated, to form running connections with it, on fair and equitable terms.

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1868.

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition, that if the company make any breach of the conditions hereof and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things, which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of said road.

It will be observed that there is no provision to be found anywhere in these sections nor in the act expressly providing for a forfeiture of the lands or of anything in case of a breach of any condition. But say the Public Lands Committee in their majority report accompanying H. R. 147, which is the same as the pending substitute, "that section 8 of the act declares a condition-subsequent, namely, that the road shall be completed within a certain time, upon breach of which the grantor may declare a forfeiture."

Now, it is unnecessary here, and we shall not attempt, to controvert the proposition that Congress has the right and power to declare a forfeiture of granted lands for breach of condition-subsequent in a proper case. We might not care to contend against the abstract proposition enunciated by the committee as above stated. But the committee insist that there is nothing elsewhere in the act repugnant to their construction of section 8 or that qualifies it in any way, and so they segregate that section from the remainder of the act and construe it by itself, and as a result arrive at what seems to us a mischievous and misleading misconstruction of the act.

The granting act in this case is in the nature of public law and it must be construed as a whole to ascertain the legislative intent, and force and effect must be given to the whole act; it is also in the nature of a grant and no rule is better settled than that all the stipulations in a deed must be considered in construing it, and that, if possible, full force and effect be given to all its parts; it is also in the nature of a contract between the parties, and the same rules of construction must apply. Those principles are elementary and need not be further argued. It is also a principle of familiar and elementary law that when a statute creating a right provides a specific remedy for non-compliance with its provisions such remedy is exclusive of all other and different remedies, and only the remedy prescribed can be pursued.

It is familiar law also that the court must construe the contract, and determine its legal effect, when the contract is in writing and its terms are unambiguous; but it is to be construed in the light of surrounding circumstances, and the situation of the parties at the time of entering into it, and parol proof even if necessary of these facts is admissible both for the purpose of raising and explaining a latent ambiguity (1 Chitty on Contracts, 11 Am. ed., 149; 20 Minn. at page 297).

Now, one of the facts and circumstances surrounding the inception of this contract, and it is a very significant one and may very properly be here noted, is that up to the date of the passage of this act all grants of public lands to railroad companies or to States to aid in the construction of railroads were by the terms of the act not only made subject to certain conditions, but also made forfeitable to the United States for failure to comply with such conditions. This fact should be distinctly borne in mind as we come to consider the provisions of this act, because we can not assume that so important a provision could be inadvertently omitted from the terms of a grant styled by the committee to have been "in extent the most munificent of all the princely donations in the era of liberality to aid in the construction of railroads," but if omitted it must have been intentionally omitted.

By reference to section 9 of this act we find that the usual forfeiture clause is transformed into another and very different provision, and that instead of providing for a forfeiture of the lands it is provided "that if the company make any breach of the conditions hereof" (that is of the whole act) "and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then in such case at any time hereafter the United States by its Congress may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of said road."

That is to say, all the grants, not only of lands but of the franchise, rights, and privileges, were so made, given, and accepted upon this express condition. We can not and must not assume that so important a feature of this act was incorporated in it thoughtlessly, being such a wide departure from all previous grants, for not only this fact but every word and clause of the section seems to lead to the inevitable conclusion that such phraseology was used with the utmost care, caution, and intendment. And having provided the remedy and an adequate one for the protection of all public rights and interests in case of a breach, the presumption of law is that it is exclusive of all other remedies.

This theory that the remedy prescribed in section 9 was exclusive and to be in lieu of and to take the place of the usual forfeiture clause is not only supported by the natural import of the language used but is in harmony with the leading ideas and scope of the whole granting act.

The leading ideas of the act were to insure the construction of a railway and telegraph line from the great lakes of the continent to the Pacific Ocean by the shortest route. It was to be aided and encouraged as a great national enterprise for national purposes, for national protection and service, including the transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores, and thus to provide for the common defense of the nation, the suppression of Indian wars and disturbances, the development and settlement of that vast portion of the national domain, and the general welfare of the people of the United States.

The prime desire and object was to accomplish this great enterprise and to avoid a possible failure of it. And so the act first creates a company that should in the first instance be clothed with the necessary powers, rights, and duties, and which should undertake the construction of this great national highway. The contingency sought to be guarded against was a possible failure by that company to complete the work, and this was to be met and overcome not by a forfeiture of the lands and an abandonment of the enterprise, but by the interposition by the United States, through its Congress, and a resumption of the situation in case of necessity; not only a resumption of the lands but of the franchise as well and of such portion of the road as may have been constructed, and the doing of any and all acts and things which might be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of said road. Those were the leading ideas of the scheme as declared and provided for by the very terms of the act, and the idea of a forfeiture of the land, leaving the company with the mere skeleton of a franchise, without means or credit, entailing an inevitable abandonment of the enterprise, but merely standing in the way of other agencies, would be wholly repugnant to the declared objects sought to be accomplished.

We therefore insist that it was manifestly the fixed purpose of Congress to adopt a different theory in the enactment of this law from that before acted upon, to ingraft upon it a new feature with respect to the building of this road; instead of a forfeiture to provide other means if this company should fail; to resume the possession and control of all it had granted, and to prosecute the work through new instrumentalities, or a new company, and to push it forward to a speedy conclusion.

Hence we say, with reference to section 9, that it clearly appears from the language there used, and the theory is corroborated by the other provisions of the act, that it was the intention of Congress to provide against the legal effect of section 8, or what its legal effect might have been standing alone, by providing in the very next section another and different result that should follow in case of a breach of the conditions of the act by the company, and the continuance of such breach for one year. This section in effect provides that the other result that is a forfeiture shall not follow. By prescribing this one result that should follow the breach of a condition, Congress excluded the idea of any other result or effect following upon a breach of such condition.

Now, the Public Lands Committee, in their majority report, at page 5, contend that this remedy provided in section 9 has no relation to the conditions in section 8, but relates to some other condition than that mentioned in section 8. They say:

> This section evidently relates to some other condition than that mentioned in section 8.
> These other conditions or requirements are found in section 5, which provides that six separate and distinct things should be done by the company, namely: First, that the road should be constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner, equal in all respects to first-class railroad; second, that it should be made of rails of the best quality, manufactured from American iron; third, that a uniform gauge should be established throughout the entire line; fourth, that the company should construct a telegraph line of the most approved and substantial description; fifth, that it should not charge the Government higher rates than individuals, and, sixth, that it should permit other railroads to make running connections on fair and reasonable terms. These are the other and further conditions mentioned by section 9, in default of any of which, continuing for a year, Congress should have the right to "do any and all acts and things" to secure the "speedy completion of the said road," as contemplated and provided.

Now in answer to this argument we insist that these are not the further conditions referred to in section 9. Section 9 was never intended as the guarantee of compliance with those conditions. Compliance with the first four of these enumerated conditions is infinitely better secured by the provisions of section 4, which requires that all of these conditions must be performed before the road is accepted in sections of 25 miles each, and before the lands accruing thereto, that is to each of such sections of road, can or will be confirmed to the company by the issuance of a patent therefor. And security against a violation of the last two conditions is abundantly provided for in section 20 in the reserved right to alter, amend, or repeal the act. We say again the direct and only object to be accomplished by the conditions of sections 8 and 9 was as stated therein, to secure a speedy completion of the said road.

There are other facts and circumstances surrounding the inception of this grant which may perhaps with propriety be considered, as throwing light upon this question and leading to correct conclusions as to just what Congress did intend and what was its real object and intention in the enactment of this charter and the bestowing of this grant of lands. Without impugning the motives of any one, I will say that it is difficult to read the report of the committee reporting this substitute without feeling that the natural effect of some of the language is rather to prejudice and bias the judgment of the reader rather than to throw light upon the question as to what was intended by the act of Congress. They style this grant:

> An isolated example of unparalleled generosity on the part of the United States in giving away millions of acres of the public domain without any provision for resuming its title even upon absolute failure of the company to fulfill its part of the contract.

Again they say:

> The grant itself was in extent the most munificent of all the princely donations made in the era of liberality to aid in the construction of railroads—

And again, "this munificent grant," "this princely gift," "this munificent donation," all quoted from the report of the committee, are simply catch-words, the effect of which is to excite prejudice against the railroad corporation and to bias the mind in favor of a proposition which it seems to me is wholly indefensible. Instead of looking at the country as it is to-day, with its lands enhanced in value by the construction and operation of this railroad which now spans the continent from the lakes to the western ocean, let us go back a little and look at the state of things in this part of the country now traversed by this road as seen at the time by those who enacted this law. What they said and what may now be gleaned from the debates involving the consideration of the original bill will best disclose what they understood and what they intended and what was the legislative intent in the framing and enactment of this law. By a reference to the Globe of April 18, 1864, volume 51, page 1698, we find that the House of Representatives, on the motion of Mr. Stevens, proceeded to the consideration of the bill granting lands to this road.

Mr. Stevens said:

> I do not know that I desire to say anything upon this bill unless there shall be some objection to it. I hope there will be none.

Mr. Wilson said:

> I do object to the passage of this bill, for it proposes to grant to this company over 46,000,000 acres of the public lands, &c.

Mr. HOLMAN said:

> I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is the largest grant of public lands ever proposed to be made and will absorb a very large proportion of the remainder of the national domain. It will operate to that extent in defeating the operation of the homestead law.

Mr. Stevens said:

> In answer to the gentleman from Indiana I will say that in our grants to the Union Pacific Railroad we gave $16,000 a mile in bonds, $48,000 across the mountains and ten sections of land per mile. And there the United States Government was to pay for all transportation the same as other individuals. The committee has refused in this bill to grant the company any subsidies except in public lands in that unbroken wilderness.
> As to these lands, the committee was willing to give to the company almost any amount that it thought that it could make use of, and because the Government has already devoted the land not for sale, but for homesteads of such individuals as chose to settle on it. The committee supposed that the true way to provide for homesteads there was to have a railway constructed; and hence it proposed to give this increased quantity of the public lands, while it refused to report any subsidies. I submit to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether he believes that the value of the lands here given approaches at all near the amount of subsidies granted to the other company.
> I am not discussing the subject of the Union Pacific Railroad now. I am in favor of it. Indeed I am in favor of all these roads; and I hardly expected that when the company asks a grant of lands that are now worthless there should be any objection at all to it.
> Mr. SLOAN. I am certainly in favor of the purpose of this bill, that is, the construction of a Northern Pacific Railroad. I believe that the shortest route for reaching the Pacific is by the northern route, and if I had any assurance that the grant which is proposed to be made by this bill would result in the construction of the road I would certainly be very earnestly and zealously in favor of the bill.
> But, sir, I see by the bill that the grant of the public lands which it is proposed to make, and which it is estimated will reach not less than 46,000,000 of acres of land, is to be given to a corporation chartered by the State of Maine, a State certainly the farthest removed of any State in the Union from the scene of the operations of the proposed project.
> I know nothing in reference to the company which is named in the bill, nothing in relation to its facilities or ability to accomplish this great work. The special committee having this matter in charge have proposed to commit it to it. If I were satisfied that it is composed of such men as will insure the execution of the work, they would not have a more earnest supporter upon this floor than myself. But it must be recollected that this is an enormous grant of land to be donated to a single company, and that if they should fail to do anything under it they may stand in the way of the organization of another company for the completion of this important national work.

I confess that I have not had an opportunity of examining the details of the bill so as to understand all the guards which the committee have thrown around the grant. But, sir, I desire to say that without understanding what the precedents have been in this respect, it does seem to me that in a work of such national importance as the construction of a railroad between the Atlantic and Pacific States a corporation should be organized under this bill by the Congress of the United States, and this within such limits and under such liabilities as may be deemed proper, instead of leaving it to a company organized in one of the States.

Mr. Sweat: "I hope to live long enough, without looking forward to a very long life, to see mining and agricultural communities growing up in that interior, which shall constitute an element of peace and concord among the States of this Union," were words spoken on this floor in May, 1860, upon the very question now under consideration, by the gentleman whose labors in behalf of the project of developing that vast extent of territory between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean entitle him to the high consideration and gratitude of the American people. He did live long enough to see the initiation of a part of his plan in the charter granted for the Union Pacific or Central road, and had he lived until this time he would have rejoiced still more in this other fact now before us of the unanimous report of your committee in aid of his favorite northern route, and which, I trust, is to receive the friendly support of this Congress. His mind, remarkable for its quickness and vigor of action, comprehended from the first, not only the importance in a commercial view of opening a communication to the Pacific Ocean by railway but upon the broader ground of developing the untold resources and wealth of the vast, unsettled, and almost unknown territory within our borders, and as a means of providing for the military defenses of the great Northwest of this Republic.

Mr. Speaker, the question of railroads to the Pacific is not another chimera. It has been answered. They are not only practicable but they are indispensable as a means of developing and protecting that portion of our country destined at no distant day to equal if not transcend in importance any other equal extent of our domain. Thanks to such men as Lewis and Clark and Whitney in earlier days, and Stevens, Mullan, McClellan, Lander, Fiske, and others, more recently, public interest is now centered upon this grand movement, scarcely second in importance to the establishment of peace within our borders, for without the development of this portion of our country no peace can be permanently assured and maintained.

REFERRING TO LANDS GRANTED.

This land is now virtually useless to the Government, and so far as surveyed is open to occupation and settlement at mere nominal prices. The land which would be left after this appropriation to the road will be increased a hundredfold after the road is built; and to meet any possible suspicion that this is to be used as a mere speculative scheme for the purpose of getting hold of the public lands I beg you to bear in mind that by the language of the bill expressly prepared for the purpose not one single acre of land can ever vest in this corporation except upon the terms of actually constructing and having ready for service the road in sections of at least 25 miles each.

Page 1701:

Is this road important? Is it worth the attention of this Congress? It is not credible that at this late day any argument can be needed to show either the importance or the necessity of this northern connection with the Pacific. What is the extent of territory proposed to be opened by the various routes between the Missouri River and the Pacific? More than 1,000,000 square miles, and extending from the thirty-second to the forty-ninth degrees of latitude, large enough for thirty States like Ohio. In the absence of all knowledge of the resources of this country the simple statement of so vast an area of unimproved land would of itself preclude the idea that it could be too unimportant to attract public attention and interest, unless one adopts the theory that the Almighty created so large a portion of the western world for naught. Happily we are not obliged to rest on the blind faith that nothing is created in vain to be satisfied that this territory was made for the abode of man; and not only so, but that it is full of wealth and capabilities, inviting the enterprise of the world. All those who have surveyed this route concur in saying that the land is cultivable nearly the whole distance.

May 16, 1864, Globe, volume 52, page 2291:

Mr. Sloan: In my judgment no better disposition could be made of the lands along the proposed line than this. A northern Pacific railroad will undoubtedly be built, and I hope if the grant proposed in the bill is made it will accomplish that important object.

If this road is not built within our own territory, it will be built within the British possessions. There are already settlements in the lower and western portion of British Columbia which are rapidly increasing in population and commercial importance, and they are largely interested in opening up a communication with the seaboard. The English never neglect their own interests. If this bill will be the means of constructing a road on our own soil, south of the British possessions, it is certainly a measure which every gentleman in the House ought to vote for.

Mr. Sweat (page 2292), May 16:

I had occasion, Mr. Speaker, to make some remarks upon this subject two or three weeks ago, and I will say in the outset that I will occupy the attention of the House but a few minutes. I wish simply to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Spaulding, who has just taken his seat. He objects to giving away so much of our public domain. I admit that the amount which is taken under this bill is large, some 40,000,000 acres; but let me ask that gentleman and all other gentlemen what that land is worth unless it is improved? And how will you improve it unless you open avenues to it? Why, these public lands of ours, let me say to the gentleman from Ohio, he knows very well are now open to settlement at a mere nominal price, and what are they worth?

Mr. Brown, of Wisconsin (page 2293):

I wish to say, as representing a Western State that is mentioned in this bill, that we care little by what State the charter was given to this company. One thing is very certain, that either a railroad is to be built to the Pacific by a northern route over American soil or over British soil. If it is built over American soil it is necessarily for all hostile purposes an American road and within our control. If built on British soil, then it comes in collision with our interests on the Pacific; and I insist that whenever a practical proposition is submitted to Congress by which it can aid in the construction of a road to the Pacific that is to be over our national territory, within our own power, it ought to do so.

So far as the mere question of donating land is concerned I will say that as a general principle I have been entirely opposed to railroad grants. But there are exceptions to the rule. The rule would have applied to various grants made at this session. The exception is applicable to this very road by which a great national object is to be attained.

Mr. Morrill: I desire to say a few words in regard to the gentleman's position. If this road was built it would be an American road in time of war provided we have a sufficient force to protect it. If it is built over our own soil and the British have sufficient force to seize it, then it will be a British road to all intents and purposes.

Mr. Brown, of Wisconsin: I will inform the gentleman that the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, over whose soil this road is to pass, have furnished very good evidence during this war that they are able to maintain and hold in behalf of the United States any road that may pass through their territory; and I think the fear of the gentleman in that respect is entirely unfounded.

Mr. Donnelly said (May 16, 1864, Globe, volume 52, page 2294):

If this grant is made, a region of country reaching from the Mississippi Valley to the Pacific Ocean, with an average width of a thousand miles, will be opened up to settlement which otherwise would probably remain an unbroken wilderness for very many years to come.

It is not to be expected that any large agricultural population can ever be brought to settle in a country having no ready outlet to the market of the world. This railroad is a necessity to that great region of country.

But it may be said that that outlet will be found in the Central Pacific road. I answer that it is impracticable for this important and immense region of country ever to be drained by a series of transverse railroads reaching to a central line nearly a thousand miles distant. In fact this country never can be opened unless Congress, following the course it has always heretofore pursued, shall make a liberal grant of public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad running from the great valley to the sea, through its midst, and which will develop its immense resources. The land itself, which this bill proposes to give away, is worth nothing to the Government in its present condition, and will remain of no value unless communication is opened between the Mississippi Valley and the Pacific Ocean. * * * You can not deny to this great region of country an outlet; and it is simply a question whether you will make it a complete and perfect outlet as you now can, or trust, with the gradual development of the country, to add link after link to a crude, imperfect, and gradually developed system as State after State is built up in that great interior region.

Another question occurs. It may be said—and there is upon the minds of many such an impression—that this wide interior region of country is a vast wilderness, unfitted for settlement and incapable of supporting any considerable body of population. This is very far, indeed, from being the case. I have never been more surprised by the perusal of any work than I was in reading the report of Capt. John Mullan in reference to the construction of a wagon-road from Fort Benton westward. It appears from that official document that on the line over which this road would pass the road would scarcely ever be beyond the reach of timber, and rarely, if ever, beyond the reach of fertile and cultivable soil.

I state to this House a fact, referred to more than once upon this floor, that there is a wide difference between the country over which the Central Pacific road will pass and the region which this road would develop. It is the popular belief that all that interior region is a sterile, treeless wilderness; and yet there is at one point on the route of this road a solid forest 120 miles in width; there are vast ranges of fine agricultural soil; there is room for the development of immense States, and the day will come when those States will be represented upon this floor, and, gazing back to the event of the present hour, man will wonder that the right of this great region to a railroad outlet ever was denied by intelligent members of this House.

I say to you that if a continuous line of fertile agricultural States ever reaches across this continent it must be through the country over which this road will pass. This region of country and the British possessions north of it are the only unsettled regions in the temperate zone of our continent fitted to sustain large agricultural populations. The flood of emigration must move in that direction or be permanently checked.

* * * * * * *

How wide the difference between this favored region and the country farther south through which the Central Pacific road must pass! A vast, treeless waste of sage bushes, alkaline plains, and sand hills, it will be impossible ever to establish through it any continuous line of settlements. The way-traffic of such a road can be of little or no value; it must create depots of fuel at stated intervals, and must carry forward with it everything it consumes.

Listen to the description which Lieut. G. K. Warren gives in his report (page 8) of an exploration of the country between the Missouri and Platte Rivers and the Rocky Mountains, of the sand-hill country, a description which applies to a very large portion of the route of the Central Pacific Railroad:

"The sand hills present their most characteristic appearance just north of Calamus River, spread out in every direction to the extreme verge of the horizon. The sand is nearly white, a lightish yellow, and is about three-fourths covered with coarse grass and other plants, their roots penetrating so deep that it is almost impossible to pull them out.

"The sand is formed into limited basins, over the rims of which you are constantly passing, up one side and down the other, the feet of the animals frequently sinking so as to make the progress excessively laborious.

"The scenery is exceedingly solitary, silent, and desolate and depressing to one's spirits. Antelope, and at times buffalo, are numerous. The character of the country is well calculated to cover a stealthy march or retreat; and if one keeps as much as possible to the hollows he may even fire his rifle within a quarter of a mile of an enemy's camp without the faintest sound reaching it. Two parties may pass close without being aware of each other's presence, and I consider it hopeless to attempt to capture any who had sought refuge in the sand hills. Farther west, I am told, these hills increase in height and are impassable for horses."

And yet, while to a railroad running over such a country as this not only lands but bonds of the United States are given, the country described by Captain Mullan is denied even the poor boon of a land grant, and all manner of captious objections are raised against the one great measure necessary for its development But there is still another fact, a very significant fact, connected with this measure.

We have upon our continent a chain of mighty lakes which have been not inaptly termed a great river, because from the point where they arise in the plains of Minnesota to the point where the St. Lawrence falls into the Atlantic they are, as it were, but the expansions of one mighty river. The head of Lake Superior, at its western extremity, is almost half way across this continent. What, then, is more natural to connect this mighty system of water communication with a railroad system stretching away from its western extremity by the most direct route to the Pacific Ocean? You can not ignore the great fact that at the head of Lake Superior you are several hundred miles further westward, several hundred miles further into the heart of this continent, several hundred miles nearer the Pacific than you are upon the shores of Lake Michigan. Shall we, then, ignore this mighty fact; shall we, in aiming at the Pacific, seek land travel in a parallel line for several hundred miles side by side with Lake Superior? Shall the movement of commerce over this mighty water system be forever checked and arrested at the mouth of Lake Superior, and be forever interdicted from moving over its broad waters? Certainly not; no local jealousy, no temporary superiority in numbers in this House of rival interests can permanently negative the importance of that great fact. Commerce is not to be tied to the heels of local prejudice, but will seek out its own natural pathways with an instinct that never errs. These lakes, with a railroad prolongation from their western extremity, will yet form the great causeway of commerce across our continent.

Hence, if we have, as I have tried to show, first, a great territory, nearly a thousand miles in width, demanding this outlet; secondly, a territory capable of a very high degree of agricultural development, to which this road is a necessity; and, thirdly, a chain of great lakes, running from east to west, reaching half way across the continent and to the very point where this road proposes to commence, and forming a connecting link is this great system of continental communication—if we have all these things, Mr. Speaker, in our favor, can this House deny us what it has given so liberally to all other projects—a grant of the public lands?

But there is still another argument just been brought to bear against this bill. It is said that we should keep the public lands to pay the public debt. Let us consider this.

I had occasion a few days since, in some remarks I made upon another question, to allude hurriedly to the same objection now raised here; and nothing but the respect which I entertain for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Spalding], who has made the objection at this time, would induce me to recur to it. It is this: The great interior of the country, as it now lies, unsettled, uninhabited, incapable of settlement, because without the great outlets of rivers or rails agriculture can not prosper, for it depends for its growth not upon itself but upon its markets; this great interior region, I say, so situated, is valueless to the people and to the nation. And so long as that region of country remains in the condition in which it now is it can be of no value to the Government or the people, and its land can not be worth any conceivable price. But if, by the granting of these lands, you can build up vast communities; if you can develop a mighty country; if you can create great States that will come on this floor by their Representatives and on the floor of the other House by their Senators; if vast populations can be made to cluster around these fertile regions, then you obtain the means of taxation; you obtain men; you obtain the sinews of strength, of government, of power.

Contrast for an instant the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, as they now stand—mighty Commonwealths, inhabited by vast and patriotic and intelligent populations, full of wealth, and prosperity, and happiness—with the value that the territory upon which they are planted would now possess to the nation if it had never been settled. Who will dare to draw the comparison?

This, then, seems to me to be not only the policy of the Government, but it has been its settled, uniform, unvarying policy for a quarter of a century; and it is too late now to attempt to displace or alter it.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Morrill: Mr. Speaker, of course I despair of retarding the progress of this bill longer than while I am talking or of ultimately preventing its passage. I know that when a proposition of this kind is introduced here giving away forty or fifty millions acres of lands it is certain to pass, especially under the lead of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Stevens]. It is at least singular that we should propose to take up and galvanize an obsolete, dead corporation of the State of Maine, a thousand miles away even from its eastern terminus, for a great national work of this kind. If it is a thing proper to be done by Congress, why not create the machinery ourselves and have the credit for it? I do not like the idea of giving away lands to extend the Grand Trunk railroad of Canada. This appears to me to be the object aimed at. I am reminded in this connection that this bill proposing to aid in the building of a railroad over a tract of country in which there are no inhabitants, to reach a State containing only one hundred thousand inhabitants, is like the proposition of a gentleman who formerly represented Oregon here and who urged upon the Committee of Ways and Means to recommend an appropriation for establishing a fort at Walla Walla and sending a regiment of soldiers there. It was asked if there were any inhabitants there; he said no, but if we would only build a fort there and place a regiment of men in it there would be. [Laughter.]

So it is argued here that if we build this road we will have inhabitants in the region through which it passes, and that we shall thus develop the resources of the country. It strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that the more prudent course for us at this time is to husband our resources, such as we have left, to sustain the credit of the Government, and let this stupendous project wait until the commerce of the country will do something toward sustaining the road after it shall be built. This is a most munificent grant, involving, I believe, not less than 40,000,000 acres of land; at least there is no agreement among the friends of the measure as to how much it will require, whether thirty-six, forty, or fifty million acres. I hope the House will consider long before they pass a bill of this kind. I can see no trade there is now to support a road through this country, except the carrying of a few muskrat skins from the Red River of the North. There is no trade whatever, except the fur trade, beyond the limits of our settlements. If I can have the opportunity I shall move that this bill be postponed till December next.

Mr. Stevens, page 2296:

What then have we given them which gentlemen seem so sensitive about? We gave them that which to this nation to-day is not worth a dollar. We gave them land wholly uninhabited, lying in the bleak regions of the north and which, without some such road as this, never will be inhabited until the great fire shall consume those forests. It is therefore as a means of settling that country, now without one white inhabitant, and it is for the purpose of bringing the alternate sections into value so that homesteads may be worth something there, that we propose to give this company an opportunity to open up that vast wilderness to civilized man.

* * * * * * *

I do not call the grant of these lands giving away anything. The Governt ment does not sell this land now. The Government at present says that any man who chooses to go and take may do so by paying simply $10 for the surveying expenses. The land is no longer held as part of the national revenue My eloquent friend from Ohio [Mr. Spalding] seems not to have remembered a. the moment that the land is no longer for sale by the Government of the United States; the whole of it is devoted to the purposes of population, and it is for that same purpose that I urge the building of this great road. What private owner of such land would not say, "Open out a road through it and you shall have half the land that lies anywhere within a reasonable distance, to the extent even of a kingdom?" Who would not dispose of it in that way if it were his own, and who would not do it acting disinterestedly in trust for the nation? I think, sir, that this is one of the greatest enterprises of the age, the opening of a railroad from the Pacific Ocean to the northern lakes.

I do not suppose that at once it would attract much trade from the East Indies, from Japan and China, but it will not be long before a very important country will be developed which lately belonged to China but now to Russia, which is drained by the waters of the Amoor River. This road would be the nearest outlet for the trade of that great country.

The value of our Northwestern possessions depends upon their being populated, and their population depends wholly on the construction of such a road.

I do not speak of the value of our public lands as a source of revenue. That never was of much importance compared with the value of its products. Now they have ceased to be of any marketable value. How, then, can the road be built?

Important as is the enterprise, the committee were unwilling to give any grant of bonds by the United States as was done to the Union Pacific road, but they felt willing to give them almost any amount of land along the route. By doing so we really gave away nothing, as the whole of it may be now taken by settlers without paying anything to the Government. The committee feel sure that this is the quickest way of settling it.

The Territories through which this road would run contain about 516,726 square miles. When settled at least eleven new States would be added to the Union. From Puget Sound to either China, Japan, or Calcutta is from three to four hundred miles nearer than from San Francisco. This would in some measure compensate for the greater population and better climate of California.

The building of this road and settlement of the country would prevent future Indian wars, and save the repetition of the horrible scenes which were lately enacted in Minnesota.

To aid the company the Government are asked to give twenty sections a mile through the States, being 12,000 acres, which, if it could be sold at the highest Government prices, would be $16,000, and double that in the Territories. To the Union Pacific Railroad she granted that sum in bonds and ten sections of land, and across the mountains three times that amount. But we in truth give nothing. Government no longer sells her lands, as I before said.

The bill being put on final passage there were—ayes 55, nays 66. So the bill was lost.

This was May 16, 1864.

Now, it will be observed that in the debates upon this bill grave doubts were expressed as to the propriety of giving this grant of lands to the People's Company, a company created and organized under the laws of the State of Maine, and it was advocated by some that a corporation should be organized under the bill by the Congress of the United States, and which should be under its control. Consequently just a week after the failure of the bill upon which the foregoing discussion was had the following proceedings were had, to wit:

[May 23, 1864. Globe, volume 52, page 2427.]

Mr. Stevens asked unanimous consent to introduce a bill for the purpose of having it printed and committed (H. R. 433), a bill granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound on the Pacific coast by the northern route.

The rules were suspended, and the bill was committed to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

May 31, 1864 (Globe, volume 52, page 2611), Mr. Stevens called up H. R. 483.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that this is the same bill that has been already before the House; and I raise the point of order that it can not be again considered.

The point of order was overruled as coming too late.

This is substantially the same bill as that defeated in the House on May 16, except as to the company to receive the grant, and except also the provision as to the forfeiture of the lands; and excepting also that the new bill provides that the alternate sections should not be sold under $2.50 per acre.

Mr. Stevens said that he supposed it would be tedious for gentlemen to make their old speeches over again, and therefore he moved the previous question. (Top of page 2612.)

The previous question was ordered and the bill put upon its final passage, and passed—ayes 74, noes 50.

In Senate, June 27, 1864 (Globe, volume 53, page 3290):

The Senate proceeded, on the motion of Mr. Harlan, as Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill H. R. 483.

In the course of remarks Mr. Hendricks said:

"The bill before the Senate proposes to encourage the construction of a very important railroad to connect the waters of Lake Superior with the waters of the Pacific Ocean. Everybody can see at a glance that it is a work of national importance. It proposes to grant lands in a northern latitude where without the construction of a work like that the lands are comparatively without value to the Government. No person acquainted with the condition of that section of the country supposes that there can be very extensive settlements until the Government shall encourage such settlements by the construction of some work like this."

Mr. Harlan (page 3292, column 2):

Perhaps it is my duty to call the attention of the Senate to the difference between this grant and other land grants that have been made heretofore to aid in the construction of railroads. There is no material difference except in this, that this bill grants four times as much land per mile to the road west of the western boundary of Minnesota as Congress hitherto has ever granted to aid any other road. It will amount to about 25,000 acres to the mile. The Committee on Public Lands agreed to report this bill favorably on account of the vast consequence that will attach to the completion of the road. The land is to be conveyed to the company only as the road progresses. The committee were of opinion that if the road should be built the Government could well afford to give one-half of the land for the distance of 40 miles on each side of the road to secure its completion.

The bill was then passed with some amendments, which were afterward concurred in by the House or agreed upon by a committee of conference, and finally passed.

Now, it is a significant circumstance surrounding the inception of this grant that the only substantial points of difference between the provisions of the bill that failed and the one that became the law were three, to wit:

First. In respect to the company provided for to build the road and receive the grant.

Second. The clause with reference to the forfeiture.

Third. The price at which the lands within certain limits which were not granted should be sold.

Section 9 of the bill, which was lost, read as follows (Globe, page 2293):

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditional grants herein, and that the said People's Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the provisions or conditions hereof, and allow the same to continue for upward of six months, then in such case the lands hereby granted shall revert to the United States and the grant hereby made shall be null and void.

Now we submit that if the former bill had become a law, and the new bill had been amendatory of the former one, proposing just this change in section 9, could there be any possible question as to what was intended by such change? The lawyers of the House need hear no argument upon such a proposition. As a matter of legislative intent, from the foregoing facts there is as little doubt. And we have a construction of these sections by at least one court.

In the case of Hughes vs. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company and others, heard and decided by the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon, in October, 1883, a suit in equity brought to restrain this company from proceeding further with the erection of a bridge over the Willamette River, one ground alleged was that the company had lost the right to build the bridge or further construct the road by failure to comply with the condition upon which the grant to it was made.

In the decision the court (Deady, J.) says:

> But the condition imposed upon the defendant by section 8 of the act, is even modified by the provisions of section 9, from which it plainly appears that so far from Congress intending that the powers of the corporation should cease, or become forfeit in any particular, by reason of its failure or inability to keep any of the conditions imposed by said section 8, expressly reserved to itself the right in case of such failure for the period of one year, to "do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road."
> In this way Congress undertook to secure the completion of this great national work in any event, and so plainly declared in advance what might otherwise have been left to inference and argument from analogous cases, that it reserved to itself the right to deal with the defendant for any failure to comply with the conditions of the grant, and to excuse or enforce the same as it might, under all the circumstances, deem just to the defendant and best for the public good. Indeed, in view of the magnitude and hazard of the undertaking, it was expressly provided that even Congress should not take advantage of a failure to perform any of the conditions for any period less than a year. And even the land set apart by Congress to aid in the construction of the road was not left liable to revert to the public domain or be otherwise disposed of by Congress for the failure of the company to construct or complete the work as required by the act, but, as was said in United States vs. Childers, 8 Sawyer 174, it was devoted to the construction of the road in any event, and it is the duty of Congress to see that it is so applied. See, also, on this point Southern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Orton, 6 Saw., 178.
> And this position is fortified by the fact that when Congress intended that the corporate existence of the defendant should be forfeited or affected by its failure to keep a condition imposed upon it, it has expressly said so, as in section 19, where it is provided that unless two millions of the stock is subscribed, and 10 per cent. paid thereon within two years from the passage of the act, "it shall be null and void." (18 Federal Reporter, 106, 108.)

Against this honest and well-considered opinion of a judge of great eminence and ability the committee have furnished no legal authority nor cited any legal principle directly in point. To say the least, it is clear, that, in view of this decision and opinion, it is extremely doubtful whether this land grant can be forfeited as proposed.

The conclusion of this whole matter then is, that what was intended by Congress in the passage of the act granting the franchise and the land to this company was to create a company which, unlike the former one, should be the creature of the act and under the control of Congress so far as might be necessary to carry out the objects of its creation, to create a trust fund in lands to aid in this enterprise, to make such company the trustee of that fund and to irrevocably devote that franchise and the lands to the consummation of this national enterprise.

It was manifestly the intention that if this trustee should prove recreant to its trust or fail to perform the conditions annexed to it Congress might interpose after the equitable forbearance of one year, resume the control of the whole matter, and do any and all acts and things which might be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of said road. This was not intended to be an act depriving the trustee of its rights in the property or ignoring such rights in any way, but it was framed with the purpose of so managing the trust by placing it in the hands of more energetic and active agencies to carry on the grand work which had been commenced. It is idle to say that such a purpose could be accomplished by a forfeiture of the lands and a diversion of them to any other purpose. Such a course would inevitably but cripple the trustee and disable it to execute the trust.

The policy of Congress was rather to aid the trustee, and to aid the enterprise by aiding the trustee, as long as it was acting in good faith; and it was in pursuance of this theory that in 1869 and again in 1870, before the limitation had expired, in view of the necessity of aid to the trustee in its great and embarrassing work, Congress did interpose at the solicitation of the trustee—the company—and did, for the purpose of furthering this work, authorize a mortgage to be given by the trustee upon all the lands covered by its grant, not only those pertaining to the constructed portion of the road but those pertaining to the unconstructed portion, and which are now sought to be reclaimed to the Government by this legislation. It was by this means and this means only that the company was enabled to proceed and build the road with the full sanction and approval of Congress and its co-operation in the inspection, examination, and acceptance of the road by sections as the same was completed, and the confirming of the lands accordingly. I mean its sanction and co-operation implied by its silences, and allowing these things to be done when it had the right and it was its duty to speak. It was only by this friendly co-operation of Congresss that the company was enabled to realize the means whereby to build the road, and it was from the proceeds of the mortgage so authorized and made that the road was finally built.

It is evident, therefore, that the authority given by Congress to the company to make this mortgage and give a valid title which could be enforced by foreclosure is utterly inconsistent with the idea of the existence of a forfeiture; and Congress so understood the matter at the time, and held out such view as an inducement for the company to proceed with its work in execution of the trust. This was evidently the contemporary construction given by both the parties to the contract and upon which they both acted, and this consideration ought to have great weight in a proper rendering of the contract now in the light of what has been done.

Another act of contemporary construction of the act by the parties to it occurred in 1882, for it was in furtherance of this same purpose to insure the speedy completion of this road, that Congress, as late as 1882, long after the expiration of the limitation referred to, again interposed, and by the act of July, 1882, entitled "An act to accept and ratify an agreement with the Crow Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in the Territory of Montana, required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same," lent its friendly aid to this enterprise, fully and distinctly recognized the continuing force and effect of this grant, manifested its satisfaction with the progress that was being made and the manner in which the trustee was acting, and virtually waived any forfeiture which might otherwise have been claimed. This act was a full and complete legislative recognition of the continued and continuing power, right, and authority of the company to proceed with the work of construction and to remain in the possession, use, and enjoyment of every grant, right, and privilege originally granted to it for the purposes specified.

It is true that for a period of years, from 1874 until 1878, the financial stringency of the times, resulting in disasters all over the country, interrupted the progress of this work; but at the date of the last-named act and for some four years prior thereto work had been resumed upon the road and was being carried forward with a rapidity and diligence that was entirely satisfactory to Congress. It was manifest that the company was doing everything that could be done and making progress as rapidly as any agency which could have been invoked by any interposition by Congress. Hence the satisfaction which then existed on the part of Congress and its disposition to again lend its friendly aid to enable the trustee, the company, to carry out the purpose of its creation. The work progressed as rapidly as could reasonably have been expected, and, to borrow an argument from the majority report of the Public Lands Committee, no reasons of public policy demanded the interposition by Congress or a resumption of any of the rights granted to the railroad company, but on the other hand the most enlightened policy dictated the recognition of such rights as still continuing. No one then claimed or urged a right of forfeiture of the lands. We say then in conclusion upon this point that no right of forfeiture such as is here claimed was reserved in this grant, nor does it follow as a consequence of any breach of any condition-subsequent attached to the grant. Such was the natural import of the language used and such was the construction given to the contract while being executed by the parties to it.

But conceding, for the sake of the argument, that this was a forfeitable grant, forfeitable for breach of condition-subsequent, what, then was the condition of these lands after the failure of the railway company to complete the line within the time limited? Happily this question has been settled by the Supreme Court by repeated decisions, and the law applicable to them is tersely stated in the case of the Saint Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Railway Company vs. McGee, 115 United States, at page 473, where the court says:

> It has often been decided that lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads do not revert, after condition broken, until a forfeiture has been asserted by the United States, either through judicial proceedings instituted under authority of law for that purpose or through some legislative action legally equivalent to a judgment of office found at common law.

In other words, both the title and the possession remained in the railway company unimpaired for all the purposes of the grant until Congress should interpose to assert its rights to a forfeiture. Congress has not yet so interposed nor authorized any judicial proceeding to declare a forfeiture. Can it do so now in the light of subsequent events? It has also been decided by the Supreme Court in the case of the Home of the Friendless vs. Rouse, 8 Wall., at page 437, that a legislative grant is a contract to be construed the same as a contract between individuals. This doctrine is also affirmed in a later case, which we will note further on.

Now I claim it to be elementary that one having the right of re-entry for breach of condition-subsequent who stands by looking on and permits one having the right so to do to perform the condition thereby waives and loses his right of re-entry. I will go further and contend that if such one having the right of re-entry suffers his grantee in possession without objection to spend money in part performance of the condition broken, the right of re-entry is thereby lost. The right of re-entry once lost, it is lost forever; the party must resort to equity for relief.

And conceding that the right of forfeiture exists under the grant, I hold that the Government has waived that right, and is equitably estopped from asserting a forfeiture as to the portion of road built.

It is a rule of law in private controversies between man and man that when work has been fully done under a special contract, though not within the time prescribed, that if the work has been accepted and enjoyed, without objection, the party performing is entitled to recover on a quantum meruit. (2 Smith's Leading cases, 48 and 49.)

In this case the President, under the provisions of section 4 of the original act, has from time to time inspected and accepted nearly all the road built, and the Government, as well as all the people of this country, have used and availed themselves of the road.

The principles and doctrines of equitable estoppel apply to States as well as to private persons. So held by a Federal judge in Vermont vs. Society, &c. (2 Paine, U. S. Cir., 545). Touching equitable estoppel the Supreme Court of the United States, in Morgan vs. Railroad Company (96 U. S., 720) say:

> The principle is an important one in the administration of the law. It not unfrequently gives triumph to right and justice where nothing else could save them from defeat. It proceeds upon the ground that he who has been silent as to his alleged rights when he ought in good faith to have spoken shall not be heard to speak when he ought to have been silent.

These are golden words of equal sanctity with a decree from Mount Sinai, and should be taken to heart by all of us. Surely a great government ought not to bid defiance to this principle nor to be beyond and above the rules that govern private individuals.

This principle has been practically applied in a case quite analogous to this. In the case of Ludlow vs. The New York and Harlem Railroad Company, 12 Barbour, 445, Ludlow had conveyed certain lands to the railroad company, with a condition in the deed of conveyance that the same should be void unless the railroad was completed through the premises conveyed on or before the 1st day of January, 1843. The road was not completed through the premises by the 1st day of January, 1843, but was completed on the 25th day of September, 1844; and on the 22d day of October, 1846, the grantor, Ludlow, commenced an action of ejectment for the land, but no attempt was made by the plaintiff to enter for the condition broken, or to assert his right to the possession until the 9th of September, 1846, when he gave the defendant written notice to surrender to him the possession. The court said:

> Did the grantor in the case under consideration manifest an intention not to insist upon a breach of the condition and dispense with the forfeiture? Was his conduct such as to induce the company to expend its money and proceed with the construction of the road after he knew that the condition had been broken? The referee found that he did. The facts, which are the evidence of this design, are not in dispute, and leave no room for doubt as to their real tendency. He made no effort to assert his right to the estate, or to do any act equivalent to an entry at the common law, until two years after the forfeiture had occurred. During this time he saw the company making large expenditures over the premises in question, and extending the road at an enormous expense toward its northern terminus. * * * No stronger evidence could be exhibited short of the execution and delivery of a new deed, of a design to waive the forfeiture and confirm the grant, than the facts to which I have adverted. Motion to set aside the report of the referee is denied. (12 Barbour, 445.)

The United States have been silent nearly seven years, while money has been borrowed to the extent of over $60,000,000, and while 1,400 miles of most difficult road has been constructed and equipped—a continent has been spanned during this interregnum—the Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth Congresses have been in session since the alleged default occurred, and neither took any action. If there is any negligence in this, it is the joint property of both parties, for two Congresses were Democratic and one Republican.

Now, we say that not only has the executive department of the Government participated in the performance or the substantial performance of all the conditions subsequent in this grant, and examined and accepted the road in sections of 25 miles, as provided by section 4 of the act, and in the conveying and confirming of the lands accordingly, but all these steps and the progress made by the railroad company from year to year has been faithfully spread before Congress by the Executive in his messages and in the report of the Secretary of the Interior accompanying the same, so that Congress has been kept fully advised and informed of all these proceedings from time to time. The Secretary of the Interior, in his report of November 15, 1879, gives a full account of the status of affairs at that time, and presents an opinion in a letter to the attorney of the railway company, in which he sets forth the non-forfeitable character of this grant that such was the construction placed upon it by the Interior Department. Again, in his report of November 1, 1880, after a general review of the affairs of the company, the Secretary says:

> Under the present management the general condition of the company has greatly improved and vigorous measures have been adopted to push the work to a successful completion.

This it will be observed was after the time limited had expired for the completion of the road and after more than one year had elapsed after the limited time for the completion of the road, and Congress is here informed that vigorous measures have been adopted by the company to push the work to a successful completion. Surely it was the duty of Congress here to interpose and declare a forfeiture or else forever keep silent. Again in the report of the Secretary of November 1, 1881, the Secretary again reviews the general status of the company, refers to lines of road under construction lands, patented to the company, and other statistics. Again in his report of November 1, 1882, speaking of the affairs of this company, the Secretary says "the rapidity with which construction has been progressing upon both eastern and western divisions of this road is without precedent in the history of that company," and gives statistics.

Again, in report of the Secretary of the Interior of November 1, 1883, the Secretary reports the completion of the main line of this road, and refers to the entire line as having been inspected and found to be very thoroughly constructed. He refers to the settlement and development of the extensive regions tributary to the road and the immense increase in population and the growth of the towns along the line from Minneapolis and Saint Paul and Duluth to Portland and Tacoma. As said before, all these facts are thus brought to the knowledge of Congress, which has stood by looking on and had thus participated in and sanctioned the performance of these conditions-subsequent when it had the right to object. Now, we insist that, having stood silent when it had the right to object, it shall not now be heard to object. By every principle of justice and equity the right of the Government to re-enter or to declare a forfeiture has been waived.

But not only is the Government estopped by its silence—during this to the company pregnant and active period—but by its open and affirmative acts both through the executive department and through the legislative department, it has clearly and unmistakably indicated to the company and to the whole world that this great work should proceed to final completion undisturbed and unconfiscated. There are three of these open and affirmative acts. The first is the joint resolution of Congress, approved May 31, 1870 (16 Statutes at Large, 378), whereby the Government, with a knowledge of the inability of the company to construct the road, and before any of it was constructed, authorized it "to issue its bonds to aid in the construction and equipment of its road and to secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions, real, personal, and mixed, including its franchises as a corporation." And in the proviso it declares:

> That all lands hereby granted to said company which shall not be sold or disposed of or remain subject to the mortgage by this act authorized, at the expiration of five years after the completion of the entire road, shall be subject to settlement and pre-emption like other lands, at a price to be paid to said company not exceeding $2.50 per acre; and if the mortgage hereby authorized shall at any time be enforced by foreclosure or other legal proceeding, or the mortgaged lands hereby granted, or any of them, be sold by the trustees to whom such mortgage may be executed, either at its maturity or for any failure or default of said company under the terms thereof, such lands shall be sold at public sale, at places within the States and Territories in which they shall be situate, after not less than sixty days' previous notice, in single sections or subdivisions thereof, to the highest and best bidder.

Here was an authority to mortgage the lands before any of them were earned, and that, too, at a time when the company was in default. Surely this act ought to estop the Government from confiscating the security and lien of the mortgage creditors.

The Supreme Court, in its opinion in the Sinking-fund cases (99 U. S. Sup. Ct. Rep., 721), opinion by Chief-Justice Waite, says:

> Congress can not undo what has already been done, and it can not unmake contracts that have already been made * * * It might originally have prohibited the borrowing of money on mortgage, or it might have said that no bonded debt should be created without ample provision by sinking fund to meet it at maturity. Not having done so at first, it can not now by direct legislation vacate mortgages already made under the powers originally granted, nor release debts already contracted.

The final and strangest act of estoppel, however, was by the legislative department in 1882, when the company were three years in default.

On the 10th day of July, 1882, Congress passed an act entitled "An act to accept and ratify an agreement with the Crow Indians for the sale of a portion of their reservation in the Territory of Montana, required for the use of the Northern Pacific Railroad, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same." (22 Statutes at Large, 157.)

In the agreement accepted and ratified by the Forty-seventh Congress, it is, among other things, recited that—

> Whereas the said company did, on the 25th day of June, 1881, file in the Department of the Interior a map showing the definite location of its line of railroad from the one hundred and seventh degree of longitude west from Greenwich westwardly through said reservation and adjacent territory to the western boundary of the said reserve, as provided by said act of 1864. And whereas said company desires to construct its line of railroad upon such designated route, and claims the right by virtue of the said act so to do.

Now, this definite location of the line was nearly two years after the expiration of the extended time specified for the completion of the road, namely, July 4, 1879.

By the agreement, as set forth in the act, the Indians, for the consideration therein mentioned, did surrender and relinquish to the United States a strip of land 400 feet in width, that is to say, 200 feet in width on each side of the line laid down on the map of definite location, through the reservation, containing 5,384 acres; also, eleven several tracts of land therein particularly described, and aggregating 266 acres, and by section 3 of this act, approved July 10, 1882, it was enacted:

> That the right of way over the land, relinquished by said agreement for the construction of said Northern Pacific Railroad, and the use of the several parcels of land so relinquished, intended to be used for depots, stations, sidings, and so forth, for said railroad, are hereby granted to said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors, and assigns, for the uses and purposes in said agreement set forth.

Under and pursuant to this legislative act and on the faith of it the company on the 19th day of August, 1882, filed its acceptance in writing of the terms and conditions thereof, and on the 23d day of August, 1882, paid to the Treasurer of the United States the $25,000 required by section 3 of the said act of July 10, 1882.

By these various acts and by this conduct Congress is estopped and can not now declare a forfeiture. Its right so to do has been waived.

But, says the committee, "Estopped can not be pleaded against the Government."

We respectfully dissent from this doctrine. We think that when the Government steps down from its pedestal of sovereignty and engages in contracts with its subjects it is amenable to the laws and it is governed by the laws the same as an individual. Or, in other words, that the courts will treat the estate created by a grant of this kind the same as it would a like estate between individuals. (The case of the United States vs. Arredondo, 6 Peters, 691.)

In this case there was a grant of land containing about 300,000 acres of land from the King of Spain to Arredondo, of lands in Florida while it was still a province of Spain, upon a condition-subsequent that the grantee should establish on the lands two hundred Spanish families. This, it will be observed, is a grant by a king to his subjects, and if estoppel can be pleaded in such a case, why not against the government constituted as ours is, where the fallacy that the king can do no wrong has never found a place in our jurisprudence. In this case the Supreme Court in its decision says:

The condition of settling two hundred families on the land has not been complied with in fact; the question is, has it been complied with in law, or has such matter been presented to the court as dispenses with the performance and divests the grants of that condition?

It is an acknowledged rule of law that if a grant is made on a condition-subsequent, and its performance becomes impossible by the act of the grantor, the grant becomes single. We are not prepared to say that the condition of settling two hundred Spanish families in an American Territory has been or is possible. The condition was not unreasonable or unjust at the time it was imposed. Its performance would probably have been deemed a very fair and adequate consideration for the grant, as Florida remained a Spanish province; but to exact its performance after its cession to the United States would be demanding the summon jus indeed, and enforcing a forfeiture on principles not forbidden by the common law would be utterly inconsistent with its spirit. If the case required it, we might feel ourselves at all events justified, if not compelled, to declare that the performance of this condition had become impossible by the act of the grantor; but transferred the territory, the change of government, manner, habits, customs, laws, religion, and all the social and political relations of society and of life.

The United States have not submitted this case to her highest court of equity on such grounds as these. We are not either authorized or required by the law, which has devolved upon us the final consideration of this case, to be guided by such rules or governed by such principles in the deciding on the validity of the claimant's title. Though we should even doubt, if sitting as a court of common law and bound to adjudicate this claim by its rigid rules, the case has not been so submitted. The proceedings are in equity, according to its established rules, and our decree must be in conformity with the principles of justice, which would in such a case as this not only forbid a decree of forfeiture, but impel us to give a final decree in favor of the title conferred by the grant.

In the case of Fremont vs. United States (17 Howard, 542), which was a grant of a tract of land in California while it was a province of Mexico, upon certain conditions-subsequent requiring certain improvements and settlements to be made, it was held that the fact that Mexico, and California as a part of it, had for some years before been in a disturbed and unsettled state, constantly threatened with revolutionary and insurrectionary movements, and that in this state of things the uncivilized Indians had become more turbulent and were dangerous to the frontier settlements, which were not strong enough to resist them, and that this state of things existed in the Mariposa valley when this grant was made, that it was unsafe to remain there without a military force, and that this continued to be the case until the Mexican Government was overthrown by the American arms was a sufficient excuse for a non-performance of the conditions-subsequent.

In the case of the Northern Pacific Railway, it is an admitted fact that a similar state of affairs, so far as hostile Indians were concerned, existed along a great portion of its line or route during the most of the time allowed for the construction of its railroad. Davis vs. Gray (16 Wallace, 203) presents a case in some of its aspects very applicable to the facts involved here. This was a grant of land by the State of Texas to the Memphis, El Paso and Pacific Railroad Company in 1856 to build a railroad across the State upon certain conditions-subsequent. The company accepted the grant, expended about $100,000 in surveys, and built about 50 miles of railroad before the 1st of March, 1861; and up to this time there was no bridge of any condition, but at this time the State of Texas went into the rebellion and the company went into bankruptcy. Afterward Gray was appointed receiver of the road.

In 1869 Texas, by constitutional amendment, undertook to declare a forfeiture of the lands granted and to devote them to the benefit of the school fund. The receiver (Gray) brought this action against Davis, who was governor of the State, and against the Commissioner of the General Land Office to restrain them from disposing of the lands under this constitutional amendment, and the court granted the relief. In its opinion the court says:

Here the controlling consideration is that the performance of all the conditions not performed was prevented by the State herself. By plunging into the war and prosecuting it she confessedly rendered it impossible for the company to fulfill during its continuance. This is alleged in the bill and admitted by the demurrer.

The rule at law is that if a condition-subsequent be possible at the time of making it, and becomes afterward impossible to be complied with, by the act of God, or the law, or the grantor, the estate having once vested, is not thereby divested, but becomes absolute. The analogy of that rule applied here would blot out these conditions. But this would be harsh and work injustice. Equity will, therefore, not apply the principle to that extent. It will regard the conditions as if no particular time for performance were specified. In such cases the rule is that the performance must be within a reasonable time. We are clear in our conviction that, under the circumstances, a reasonable time for performance had not elapsed when this bill was filed.

The State, by her own acts, has lost the benefit of an earlier completion of the work. The company has lost the income which it might have enjoyed, and has doubtless been thrown into embarrassments it would have escaped. The circumstances do not call for a severe application of the rules of law upon either side.

Breaches of such conditions may be waived by the grantor expressly or in pais. * * * That the act of incorportion and the land grant here in question, were contracts, is too well settled in this court to require discussion. As such, they they were within the protection of that clause of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts is too well settled in this court to require discussion. As such, they were within the protection of that clause of the Constitution of the United States which declares that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of contract. The ordinance of 1869, and the Constitution adopted in that year, in so far as they concern the question under consideration, are nullities, and may be laid out of view. When a State becomes a party to the contract, as in the case before us, the same rules of law are applied to her as to private persons under like circumstances. When she or her representatives are properly brought into the form of litigation, neither she nor they can assert any right of immunity as incident to her political sovereignty.

By these various acts of performance by the company and acceptance by the executive department of the Government brought home to the knowledge of Congress, &c., we insist that the Government has recognized the continuing force of the original grant and the rightful possession and title of the company in all its granted rights and is estopped to now allege to the contrary in condemning its earned lands. The only ground upon which it can be claimed that a forfeiture should be declared is because the road was not completed strictly within the time limited in the act, to wit, by July 4, 1879. Such a claim we say is purely technical and puerile and absolutely without merit. The road has been built and substantially completed faster than was ever anticipated by the most sanguine and as fast as it was possible to do it under all the circumstances surrounding the enterprise. The people and the Government have reaped and are reaping all the beneficial results which could possibly accrue from so great a work. The road has not only been built but has been maintained efficiently and in full compliance with the grant. The Government has for years been enjoying and is now enjoying the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway. It is to-day enjoying and will for all time to come enjoy a large deduction in the expense of the transportation of the mails and other property of the United States through that vast extent of country.

The substitute ought not to prevail.

The time having expired,

Mr. REED, of Maine, said: I ask by unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for fifteen minutes.

Mr. STORM. I object.

Mr. HENLEY. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] has not used all his time.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman from Minnesota has promised to give away all of his time. Let the gentleman [Mr. GILFILLAN] have fifteen minutes more by unanimous consent.

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. GILFILLAN. Before yielding I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. STRAIT. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, although coming in at nearly the close of the debate, I venture the hope that my remarks may not prove devoid of interest to the House.

I shall endeavor, sir, to confine myself to the question of the actual merits of the controversy, and, in the limited time permitted under the rules of the House, endeavor, in a practical way, to give the reasons which impel me to support the committee amendments and oppose the Senate bill.

The important questions involved, partaking largely of a judicial character, suggest to my mind the propriety of discussing them before this body as I would in a court of justice, making no appeals except to the reason of those who do me the honor of giving me their attention, and to the precise questions presented I at once address myself.

Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, this bill involves over 36,000,000 acres of the public lands. This area of lands, as large as the State in which I live, belongs either to the people of this country or to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. One of those two propositions is true. It does not belong to the Government as such; for I take it that it goes without saying that all the property which we control, the lands of the nation, the public buildings, the Navy, the money in the Treasury, all the property under our control and subject to our direction, belongs to the people whom we represent, and we deal with it simply as their agents and in the capacity of trustees. And it does not matter what my individual notions may be in reference to any proposition which appeals to my generosity, in my official position here I am bound to deal with this property acting in a fiduciary capacity.

Nor do I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we have the right, unless under the law we are bound to do it, or there are strong equitable reasons which are practically equivalent to a legal obligation, to dispose of this vast empire of territory to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company unless they occupy one of those two positions. When I say "dispose" of it, I mean pass it from under the assumed control that we have over it. If it belongs to them, nothing that we can do here will divest them of their title to it. No action of ours here can interfere with any legal right that that company has to this area of land.

Believing as I do, Mr. Speaker, that we not only have the legal right but that it is our duty in dealing with the question from equitable considerations to restore this land to the public domain, I am in favor of the adoption of the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The reasons which I have for entertaining these views I am very glad to have the opportunity to give to the House, premising what I say with reference to them with another statement. I do not believe, while not indulging in any criticism on the course of any other gentleman, that it is a proper method of discussing this question to allow political considerations to enter into it. There is no party or partisan question connected with this discussion. I yield to nobody in my fidelity to the views which I believe to be the national political questions which the Republican party of this country have espoused hitherto. And yet I deny the right of any man who belongs to that party or any convention of its membership to bind me in my ideas or actions in dealing with an economic question of this character, involving, as I know it does, legal questions which I am called on to deal with as a lawyer.

Nor do I believe in that policy which has prompted some of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, but on the same side of the question that I occupy, in assuming to the Democratic party as a party the sole credit which may grow out of any attempt on the part of this Congress to restore to the public domain these millions of acres of the public lands to which these corporations are not in my opinion entitled. On this point I may say, Mr. Speaker, that within the last four or five years both political parties have manifested a somewhat tumultuous haste in coming to the front on this question and indorsing public sentiment with reference to it. There is no party politics in it. I have been in it from the first; not as a partisan, but as a citizen. Gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber honestly entertain, I have no doubt, different views with reference not only to the question of law involved here, but also the question of policy as to dealing with the questions betweeen the Government and the railway company.

To correct erroneous impressions and to convince the judgment of those who differ from me is my sole purpose here to-day.

But I notice, sir, in the debate thus far that possibly a sufficient amount of information has not been given to members of the House with reference to the exact position of this case as it presents itself to the House and to the country. And I desire to be permitted to give briefly a résumé as to the history of the corporation.

Mr. Speaker, three classes of people are interested in the provisions of this bill:

First. The holders of its securities, which are first and second mortgage bondholders.

Second. The holders of the preferred stock of the company.

Third. The holders of the common stock of the company.

To understand the exact situation, then (for I may remark here that I hope to demonstrate that we have the legal right to assert this forfeiture, and therefore the question of the policy of so doing will be presented), a history of the company is important.

The grant was made by the act of Congress of July 2, 1864, to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound.

It contemplated the construction of a competing transcontinental line, in round numbers 2,500 miles in length. It was assumed upon the face of the legislation that the railroad would be built by the wealthy and distinguished gentlemen who were named as corporators and their associates with money which they would furnish and the grant which the Government made to them; for the granting act contained a provision prohibiting the railway company from making any mortgage whatever. It had no right under the granting act to issue a bond or a security upon what Congress gave it. It was represented, as has been stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN], that the corporators of the company were men of wealth and influence in the communities where they resided and amply able to build the road with their means and the public grant. The charter was very broad and contemplated a right on the part of citizens of every portion of the Union to subscribe to the capital stock of the corporation, which was fixed at a hundred million dollars, and these gentlemen coming here and asking to be named as corporators, being, as I have said men of wealth and influence, the charter was given to them with all the privileges which are contained in it, upon the assumption that they would furnish the money to build the road with the Government aid, because there was a prohibition in the charter against their issuing securities. This was in 1864.

September 1, 1864, the books of the company were opened for subscription to the capital stock, and on paper appeared the subscription for twenty thousand and seventy-five shares, on which, by the charter, $10 per share in cash should have been paid, so that there should have been in the treasury of the company $200,750.

Nothing in the way of progress was done. In January, 1867, twelve persons met in Boston and made an agreement, in substance, reciting that J. G. Smith, of Saint Albans, Vt., and his associates held this charter; that it could be purchased, and should be, and that the "enterprise" be divided into twelve shares, each $8,500, or $102,000, to be paid Smith and his associates therefor. This was done, and the "enterprise" became the property of these gentlemen.

In July, 1867, a second agreement was made between these parties for paying assessments to the amount of $12,500 each, if needed, for expenses in obtaining legislation.

Bear in mind, sir, that no work was being done; none of these wealthy gentlemen had expended a dollar in the legitimate work of building the railroad; but legislation was necessary, and apparently it was expected to be costly.

The legislation then sought was of two kinds—first, an extension of the time within which the road was to have been completed (which was fixed at July 4, 1876); and, secondly, to obtain from Congress the power to mortgage the road.

They secured both by the joint resolutions of May 7, 1866, and July 1, 1868. The time for the completion of the road was extended first two years and then one, so that July 4, 1879, became the date when the whole road should be completed; and of the second character, the act of March 4, 1879, first gave the power to mortgage the railroad and telegraph line. This not proving satisfactory, they secured the passage of the joint resolution of May 31, 1870, which gave them full power to mortgage "all its property and rights of property, real, personal, and mixed, including its franchise, &c."

But resuming the history:

As I have said, on July 3, 1867, this second agreement was made between the same persons to use further effort to obtain aid from Congress, that assessments, not to exceed $12,500, might be made upon any of the twelve parts or shares as contribution for expenses in obtaining legislation. On May 20, 1869, an agreement was made between J. Gregory Smith, as president, and six of the directors of the company, acting as executive committee, on the one part, and Jay Cooke & Co. on the other part. This agreement recites the division of interest into the twelve parts or shares, and creates six (afterward increased to twelve) more parts, to be held and enjoyed by Jay Cooke & Co., subject to the two agreements of 1867 given above. It then provides that "the capital stock of said company, $100,000,000, shall be appropriated as follows, that is to say, $80,001,000 thereof shall be subscribed for by the representatives of the eighteen (afterward twenty-four) shares above described in equal proportions by each share, and shall be issued in fully paid-up stock to each of said eighteen shares, $2,241,000 of which was to be issued at once, and the remainder from time to time, and the residue of said capital stock, $19,999,000, shall be delivered to Jay Cooke & Co., in fully paid-up stock of equal value with the rest of said stock," in such amounts that Jay Cooke & Co. shall have $200 of stock (afterward increased to $400) for every $1,000 of the bonds of the company sold by them.

This agreement then provided for the issue by the company of one hundred millions of bonds to be negotiated by Jay Cooke & Co. The thirteenth section of this agreement provides for the payment to all the holders of these eighteen (afterward twenty-four) parts or shares for all amounts paid by them or expenses incurred, with interest, and for their personal service, by giving them these bonds of the company at the rate of 88 cents on the dollar. So that now J. Gregory Smith and his associates, and the twelve shareholders who became liable to pay for legislation, &c., got back their money with interest, in marketable bonds at 12 per cent. below par. The $600,000 worth of stock said to have been "issued by Josiah Perham, late president of the company," was also by the agreement to be taken up and retired with these bonds at the rate of 50 cents on the dollar of said stock.

But the most remarkable exposure made by this agreement is its recital of the fact that the twenty thousand shares originally subscribed for, and upon which the company was organized at Boston, had been "forfeited for non-payment of assessment."

It is therefore known now, out of the mouths of the persons at present claiming this $18,000,000 of new stock, that all the originally subscribed stock had been extinguished; that the six thousand shares of Perham stock, however created, were to be extinguished; that J. Gregory Smith "and his associates," and the persons afterward joining him in the enterprise for getting Congressional aid, were to be paid for all advances "and compensation for personal services and expenses" out of company bonds at an extravagant share.

The agreement shows more, by implication, that at this time, excepting the six thousand Perham stock to be immediately extinguished, there was no stock of this company of any kind in existence; none had been ever subscribed for as contemplated by the charter, except the twenty thousand shares already forfeited. But the parties to these agreements, calling themselves the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, without subscription or payment of 10 per cent. as required by the charter, without any consideration to the company from them of any kind, because all their expenses, advances, and personal services were paid for in bonds—these persons, without the payment of a dollar, agreed to issue to themselves and Jay Cooke & Co. $80,001,000 of stock, and besides this, to issue to Jay Cooke & Co. a further $19,999,000, at the rate of $400 for every $1,000 bond the latter should sell.

A large part of the $80,000,000 was to be divided at once among these persons, and the remainder to be issued, but always to them, as the road was built. This is the "old proprietary interests," and these persons and their "assigns" are the "proprietors" who upon this state of facts claimed the ownership of, and have received from themselves, as the company, the $18,000,000 of stock just issued.

But a word need be said as to the effect of the foreclosure by the bondholders in 1875. Under this foreclosure all the property and franchises of the company were sold to the bondholders, represented by a committee, and a "plan" of reorganization was agreed to by which preferred stock was issued in exchange of bonds, and new common stock in substitution of old common stock.

The original twelve "proprietors" were J. Gregory Smith, W. B. Ogden, R. H. Burdell, D. N. Barney, R. H. Barney, B. P. Cheney, W. G. Fargo, G. W. Cass, J. Edgar Thomson, and Edward Reilley. When Jay Cooke became the financial agent of the company the number of "proprietors" was increased to twenty-four.

The agreement of these "proprietors" was, that of the $80,001,000 left after Jay Cooke had been granted $19,999,000 for selling bonds, $2,241,000 was to be issued to them directly, and the remainder, $77,760,000, was to be issued, "$40,500 to each of said twenty-four shares, whenever and so often as 25 miles of said road is completed, so as to be run over by cars."

So it appears, Mr. Speaker, that after this first paper subscription for 20,075 shares these proprietors issued their prospectus, and endeavored to get other subscribers. That effort failed and nothing was done. Nobody would subscribe any money to the enterprise, so they came to Congress again in 1868 and asked a grant of additional privileges. Upon their petition an act of Congress was passed authorizing them to mortgage their road (not a rod of which was yet constructed), to mortgage their franchise and their telegraph line for any amount that the directors might think justifiable. No money was raised under that proposition. Not a spadeful of earth had been turned in the enterprise up to that time. In 1870, six years after the charter was passed, they again came to Congress and asked for additional privileges, namely, the privilege to mortgage their interest in the land grant as well as their franchises. Bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that down to this time not a dollar had been subscribed even upon paper, except at the meeting of these twelve gentlemen in Boston in 1864, and I will say in passing, in order that my argument may be appreciated, for I shall emphasize this point a little later, that even that subscription was only a paper subscription, because not a dollar was paid into the treasury by any of those gentlemen, although the act of Congress provided that no incorporation should be made until at least 10 per cent. of the amount of the stock was paid in cash into the treasury.

This point is of special importance, because the holders of the common stock are one class of persons interested in this bill, and especially as the common stock in the original enterprise is the common stock in the present company, which was organized in 1875, after the failure of Jay Cooke & Co., of which I shall speak later. I may as well notice that interest now and here, as it bears upon the question of equity as to the common-stock holders, which I shall emphasize a little further on. I have heard it said in debate, and have read it in reported discussions of this question in another place, as bearing upon the question of equity here, that gentlemen who have subscribed to the capital stock of this company and have put their money into the building of the road relying on the non-action of Congress ought not to be interfered with; that the bonds which have been issued are a security that ought not to be lessened in value by Congressional interference; that the rights of the common-stock holders of the company, men who put their money into this enterprise upon the faith and credit of the enterprise itself and who have nothing to show for the money which they invested in the common stock and which has gone into the construction of the road for all these years, except the hope of the ultimate profit which would come out of it—I have heard the rights of all these gentlemen adverted to in very feeling terms.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I desire to be understood as saying is—and I have the documents here to prove it and will read them now if disputed—that not a dollar was ever paid into the treasury of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the holder of a share of the common stock of that company—not a dollar. The common stock of that corporation was $49,000,000 under the reorganization of 1875, and every dollar of that stock was parceled out to the promoters of the enterprise and to those who joined them later as a bonus and a speculation; and Mr. Speaker, if any gentleman thinks I am mistaken about this I will now and here yield five minutes of my time to any one who is familiar with the history of these transactions in order that he may have an opportunity to prove the contrary of what I have stated.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand the gentleman's statement to apply to the original stockholders.

Mr. PAYSON. What I say is that the only subscription that was ever made under the old organization was the subscription to these twenty thousand and seventy-five shares by the twelve gentlemen who met in Boston in 1864, and I say that not a dollar was ever paid on that subscription. Then, when the company reorganized in 1875, the common stock of the company was fixed at $49,000,000, the entire stock being one hundred millions. Of that total fifty-one millions was preferred stock and forty-nine millions was common stock. Upon that common stock not a dollar was ever paid, and the subscription for the twenty thousand and seventy-five shares had been canceled because no money had ever been paid upon them.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman's statement, as I understand it, is that the stock was parceled out and nothing was paid for it.

Mr. PAYSON. That is what I say—that is it exactly; and a large part of the preferred stock as well, as I shall show.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am simply asking for information, and I now ask the gentleman whether that stock has been scattered and distributed among innocent holders?

Mr. PAYSON. That I can not say. I do not know whether it has or not. I know where it went originally. I know also, as part of the financial history of the country and from an examination of the reports coming from New York, the great financial center, that very little of it is on that market, and that what little of it there is is quoted at about 21 cents.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the facts he is now adverting to constitute any reason why the securities——

Mr PAYSON. I hope the gentleman will not anticipate me. I say no, it has nothing to do with the securities. I shall come to them in due time.

Mr. GILFILLAN. The gentleman will perhaps hear my question. I desire to ask him whether the facts he has just been stating have anything to do with the franchise or constitute any reason why the securities which men hold who furnished the money to build the road should now be snatched away from them?

Mr. PAYSON. If the result were so I should say not at all; certainly not. But I say to my friend, if he will follow me, that I am dealing now only with the question of the common shareholders, not the holders of the bonded indebtedness. I shall address myself to them later, and I hope to his satisfaction.

I am trying, Mr. Speaker, to make myself definitely understood upon each proposition as I proceed. I was addressing myself to the proposition which I have heard stated on this floor, and have read in the debates which have occurred elsewhere as to the duty which Congress owes to the stock-holders of this company. It has been urged that at this late day, owing to the inaction on the part of Congress heretofore with reference to this matter, we ought to do nothing which may in any degree impair the security which these holders of the common stock have in this line of railroad and the property therewith connected. I am now talking about them and them alone. As I have said as to the class of gentlemen referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. GILFILLAN], I shall have something to say later on.

Now, Mr. Speaker, precisely how is this question presented? What are the facts about it? After Congress had given to this railway company in 1870 the power to mortgage the road, the gentlemen who were at the head of the enterprise made a contract with Jay Cooke & Co., whose names are somewhat familiar with the affairs of this company the country over. That arrangement was, in substance, that under the act of Congress of 1870 a mortgage should be issued upon the property of the company, whatever it was, to the amount of $30,000,000. Mortgage bonds to this amount were to be floated by Jay Cooke & Co., under a contract made between that firm and the railroad company at that time. This was in the fall of 1870. A large share of this common stock was parceled out as a bonus to Jay Cooke & Co., as I have said, as part of the consideration for their services in floating the $30,000,000 of bonds which were issued. These bonds were put upon the market and were sold. There was realized from the sale of these securities a trifle over $20,000,000, which was expended in good faith by the promoters of the enterprise in constructing the line of railroad from Lake Superior westwardly to where Bismarck now is on the Missouri River, a distance of 529 miles and a fraction.

In detail, there was built before October, 1872, the line from Thompson to Red River in Minnesota, 228 miles, and thereon to Bismarck, 196 miles, in 1873; that same year from Kalama to Tenino in Washington, 65 miles; and in the fall of 1873, Tenino to Tacoma, 40 miles; in all, 530 miles before March 1, 1874, and this is all that was built before the expiration of the grant.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, that these facts, as part of the history of this transaction, be kept in mind; that when it became apparent to the promoters of the enterprise during the years intervening between 1864 and 1870, and later on, after Jay Cooke's failure, that the road could not be constructed within the time required, application was made to Congress to extend the time. The original act provided that the road should be completed and accepted by the 4th day of July, 1876.

Many of us remember the statements which were made in connection with the passage of the bill, that the centennial anniversary of the foundation of the Government would be celebrated by the opening of this transcontinental line; and it was confidently predicted by the eminent gentlemen named as corporators that with the money they had and were willing to advance the road could be completed by that time. But, failing to secure subscriptions outside, and failing or refusing to invest their own money in the enterprise, of course the road could not be built; so they came to Congress and asked for an extension of time, and the time was extended. By an act of Congress passed in 1866, an extension was granted for two years, running to 1868. Later, in 1868, another act of Congress was passed, at the instance of the same gentlemen, extending the time for another year and giving them, as they claim, an additional grant of land for the branch line across the Cascade Mountain.

And, sir, no work was done after 1874 until 1880, when the bonds issued to build the Missouri division were sold on the market. And in 1881, the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, bills were introduced declaring a forfeiture of lands not earned "in time," and have been pending since, constantly, and though vigorously pressed, the condition of the public business has been such that no vote could be had until now.

The time has been twice extended by Congress, and though afterward applications were made for further extensions of time, those applications were invariably refused. So that, pending the construction of the road west of the Missouri River, those engaged in the enterprise as well as the public at large were notified that Congress had given all the extensions that the railway company would ever get.

But 530 miles of road were built within the time required for the completion of the whole line. There remain unconstructed to-day, according to reports from the Interior Department, 340 miles; and there have been built out of time 1,492 miles, making, with the 530 miles constructed in time, a total of 2,362 miles, the mileage of the road. The number of acres to which the railroad company is entitled for the road built "in time," is 10,039,450. The acreage lying opposite that portion of the road which was built "out of time" is 30,737,101. The number of acres lying opposite the unconstructed portion of the road is 6,170,640, the total amount of the grant being in round numbers 46,947,200 acres. The Senate bill proposes to allow the railway company all lands lying opposite the road which is now constructed. The House substitute for the Senate bill proposes to restore to the public domain every acre of land lying opposite the road which was not constructed in time, aggregating, as I have stated, 36,907,741 acres.

I resume now the history of this transaction from its financial standpoint. After this contract with Jay Cooke in 1870, by virtue of which $30,000,000 of bonds were to be floated, and on which a trifle over $20,000,000 was realized, the building of the road was proceeded with, and all the road which was constructed in time was constructed prior to the spring of 1874. During the year 1873 the bubble burst; Jay Cooke & Co. failed, and in their downfall were involved the affairs of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, that firm having been the financial agents of the corporation. Construction ceased. Nobody who was interested in the railroad company sought to pick up the wreck and go on with the work by furnishing the money; but the same policy was expected to be pursued that had been adopted in the past—to build the road only when the people of the country would advance their money upon the faith of the securities of the road and without its promoters putting a dollar into the enterprise. So, the five valuable years between 1875 and 1879, which could have been utilized in the construction of this road by the promoters of the enterprise, if they had furnished the money, were allowed to elapse and the enterprise to lie dormant. So the time expired.

In 1875, after the failure of Jay Cooke & Co., those who had money in the enterprise in the form of these bonds met together to see what could be done with reference to it. A plan of reorganization was entered upon in the summer of 1875, growing out of litigation which arose in this state of the case.

On the 10th day of April, 1875, a bill was filed in the United States courts in the city of New York for the foreclosure of these $30,000,000 of bonds. The decree in that case was entered on the 25th of August, 1875. On the 20th of May of that year in anticipation of this decree, or rather pending the litigation between the filing of the bill and decree, a large number of bondholders got together and adopted a plan of reorganization of the affairs of the road, which plan I hold in my hand and shall ask leave to insert it in the RECORD. It is too lengthy to read to the House at this time; but the substance of which, so far as it bears on what we are considering, is this:

The plan contemplated taking up the $30,000,000 of bonds outstanding, adding two years of interest in arrears, and three of interest yet to come, making an aggregate of $42,000,000, and for this amount $42,000,000 of preferred stock in the new company should be issued for the bonds and interest. The capital stock of the company under this reorganization was fixed at $100,000,000, $51,000,000 of preferred stock, being a majority and giving the control of the affairs of the company, $51,000,000 of preferred stock, and $49,000,000 of common stock. Forty-two million dollars represented the $30,000,000 of bonds and the two years' interest in arrears, and the three years' interest to come, or five years in all. The other $9,000,000 was left in the Treasury as the plan of the organization suggests to be used as might be deemed expedient and proper by the directors of the company.

I may say in passing here, so the history may be connected, that this $9,000,000 of preferred stock has been held in the Treasury of the company and parceled out as a bonus to those who subscribed to the mortgage bonds of the company in the directory so that the subscribers should get on the ground floor. This bonus was always given when mortgage bonds were taken, and this $9,000,000 of stock was parceled out in this way.

The other $49,000,000 of common stock was used, as I stated ten minutes ago, that is divided up as a bonus and a gift to the original directors of the enterprise as their interest might appear; not a dollar being subscribed on it, not a dollar given for it or charged by way of interest on it. It was used to fatten up those already plethoric with wealth in this transaction.

Another provision was inserted in this plan of reorganization; that is this: any holder of any preferred stock in the company might at his option exchange it for lands of the company which lay east of the Missouri River. Who hears me that does not remember they embrace the great wheat-raising belt in the Northwest. It was determined by experiment and observation that land was rich and fertile and these gentlemen of the company being interested, holding all these securities and all this preferred stock of the company, incorporated in the plan of reorganization this proposition. The bonds then selling in the market, as I happen to know from experience of some of my townsmen, at 9, 10, and 11 cents, were gathered together in this plan of reorganization and put into the lands of the company, at $1.50 and $2.50 per acre, which was the highest, in the great wheat-growing country in the Northwest. Every thinking gentleman will remember, when they hear accounts of the great farms of the West devoted to wheat raising, the Dalrymple farm with 56,000 acres, the Cheney farm with 42,000 acres, the Cass farm, the Dwight farm consisting of two townships, and other farms belonging to men, some of whom are in public life to-day, every one of them coming from the surrender of these bonds at from 10 to 15 cents for lands of this company, east of the Missouri River. That is one part of the plan of the reorganization of this company.

So much of this plan of reorganization as I deem material I here read:

The capital stock of the company shall be as fixed in the act of incorporation, and shall be divided into preferred and common.

On the sale of the railroad and the other property, and the acquisition of title thereto by the committee above named, the present stockholders shall surrender their certificates of stock into the hands of the said committee, to be held by them either as confirmatory evidences or muniments of title, to be used accordingly by them.

PREFERRED STOCK.

Preferred stock shall be created and issued to the amount of $51,000,000 (being a majority of the share capital) for the following purposes: to retire the principal of the outstanding 7.30 bonds, and the interest thereon due and to become due up to and including July 1, 1878, at the rate of 8 per cent. currency per annum; and also to retire the principal and interest, to and including January 1, 1875, of the land-warrant bonds; to pay the floating debt not protected under the existing orders of the court; and, generally, for the purpose of carrying into effect this plan.

The preferred stock shall have all the rights and privileges of the common stock, with the right to vote, and the holders thereof shall be entitled to dividends, not exceeding 8 per cent. per annum, as the "net earnings" hereinafter defined, in each calendar year, may suffice to pay, and before any dividends shall be paid on the common stock.

After and during the time the income of the road shall be sufficient to pay 8 per cent. dividends on both the preferred and the common stock, the surplus shall be divided on both alike per share, according to the number of shares issued of each.

The preferred stock shall be convertible at the par value into any lands belonging to the company, or hereafter to belong to it, east of the Missouri River in the State of Minnesota and in the Territory of Dakota, until default shall occur in some of the provisions of the new first-mortgage bonds, hereinafter provided for, and such conversion shall be an extinguishment of such stock. The proceeds of all sales of such lands, until such default, shall be used likewise in extinguishment of such stock.

The words "net earnings," as used above, shall be construed to mean such surplus earnings of the said railroad as shall remain, after paying all expenses of operating the said railroad and carrying on its business, including all taxes and assessments and payments on incumbrances, and including the interest and sinking fund on the first-mortgage bonds, the expenses of repairing or replacing the said railroad, its appurtenances, equipments or other property, so that the same shall be in high condition, and of providing such additional equipment as the said company shall deem necessary for the business of said railroad.

COMMON STOCK.

Common stock shall be issued to the amount authorized by the charter, less the amount of $51,000,000 of preferred stock. The holders of the common stock shall not have the right to vote on it, until on or after July 1, 1878. The holders of this stock shall only be entitled to dividends in each year at the discretion of the board of directors, when the net earnings, as heretofore defined, exceed an amount sufficient to pay interest and sinking fund on the mortgage debts and 8 per cent. on the preferred stock. Certificates of this stock shall be issued to holders of, or to those now entitled to, certificates, share for share; and the residue ratably to those originally entitled thereto, or their assigns.

FIRST-MORTGAGE BONDS.

To provide the means to complete and equip the road, there shall be issued first-mortgage bonds not to exceed an average of $25,000 per mile of road actually completed and accepted by the President of the United States, to be secured by a mortgage or mortgages which shall be a first and paramount lien on the whole line of road, constructed and to be constructed, and on the equipment, property, lands and franchises, acquired and to be acquired, including the franchise to be a corporation, subject only to the right of the holders of the preferred stock to convert their stock into the lands of the company, now owned or hereafter to be acquired east of the Missouri River, in the State of Minnesota, and Territory of Dakota, and also to the right to the proceeds of the sales of said lands, to be used in the extinguishment of said stock, until any default is made in the provisions of this mortgage. The principal of these bonds shall be payable forty years after date, and the interest and sinking fund may be made payable in gold.

There shall be provided a sinking fund for the redemption of the principal of these first-mortgage bonds, at or before their maturity, which shall be accumulative and shall commence five years after the date of the issue of each series. The first-mortgage bonds shall be countersigned by one or more trust companies, and said trust company or companies shall deliver to the railroad company bonds to the amount of $25,000 per mile of each mile of road already completed, and shall continue to deliver bonds to the company, not to exceed $25,000 per mile of road constructed, or for which the materials may have been furnished.

Provision shall be made in the first mortgage or mortgages to secure effectually the holders of the bonds issued under them in the event of any and every default. No other bonds shall be issued, except on a vote of at least three-fourths of the preferred stock, at a meeting specially held in reference thereto, on a notice of at least thirty days by advertisement in two newspapers published respectively in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, and Boston.

[Here the House adjourned, Mr. PAYSON holding the floor.]

Mr. HENLEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me for a moment I will ask consent to make an order with reference to the debate.

Mr. PAYSON. If the House desires the debate should be closed I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the time for adjournment be extended to let the gentleman conclude his remarks.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not ask that. I prefer to continue in the morning. I think sitting here until 5 o'clock is late enough.

Reserving my right to the floor, I will yield for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be entitled to the floor.

INFORMATION FROM TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

McMILLIN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested, if not inconsistent with the public welfare, to transmit to the House, in compliance with its request embraced in House resolution of January 28, 1886, such information as has been compiled as therein directed.

DETENTION OF A. K. CUTTING IN MEXICO.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the House of Representatives such information as may be in his possession concerning the alleged illegal detention of A. K. Cutting, an American citizen, by the Mexican authorities at El Paso Del Norte, and also whether any additional troops have been recently ordered to Fort Bliss.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The hour of 5 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ATKINSON: Petition of Robert S. Lacy, of Alexandria County, Virginia, relative to claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE: A bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. CARLETON: Protest of Miles Post, No. 113, Grand Army of the Republic, against the passage of a law making a special tax for the purpose of paying pensions—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolutions of Fairbanks Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, of Detroit, Mich., for the passage of the bill granting a pension to Cornelia R. Schenck over the veto of the President—to the same committee.

By Mr. GEDDES: Petition of members of Ogden Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ashland County, Ohio, for pension legislation, without first providing means of payment—to the same committee.

By Mr. HIESTAND: Petition and papers of John R. Reynolds, of Dayton, Ohio, for payment of his claim for property taken and property purchased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KING: Concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Louisiana, relative to the national defenses—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition for the relief of Isaac N. Hollingsworth—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of John Stewart and others, for the passage of Senate bill 2056—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. W. STEWART: Memorial of property-holders in squares 729, 730, and 731 in the city of Washington, asking for relief—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WAKEFIELD: Petition of R. H. Wade and 30 others, citizens of Jackson County; of George R. Browning and 20 others, citizens of Martin County; and of 58 citizens of Watonwan County, of Minnesota, for Congressional action in the matter of alleged illegal certification of lands to the Saint Paul and Sioux City and Southern Minnesota Railroad Companies—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. CANNON: Petition of W. B. Kerr and 173 others, of Carl C. Winston and 250 others, and of David H. Murchey and 316 others, citizens of the fifteenth district of Illinois.

By Mr. CRAIN: Petition of J. T. Cornelius and 60 others, of Samuel Muller and 60 others, and of James E. Moore and 138 others, citizens of the seventh district of Texas.

By Mr. EUSTACE GIBSON: Petition of Lewis Foaly and others, and of W. R. Neale and 46 others, citizens of the fourth district of West Virginia.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of John Wolf and 79 others, citizens of Seneca County, Ohio.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 27, 1886.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, and after reading for ten minutes,

Mr. HALE. It is a long Journal, and I ask that its further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection——

Mr. INGALLS. I doubt whether the time of those who are present can be better employed than in listening to the reading of the Journal.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator wants to hear it, of course he has the right.

Mr. INGALLS. There is not a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the Journal will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Journal will stand approved as read.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SAWYER presented the petition of Lorenzo Forbes, late a private in Company H, Twentieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE presented three petitions of citizens of Maine, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Manito, Ill., praying for the passage of the bill pensioning ex-prisoners of war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER. I present a resolution of Fairbanks Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of the State of Michigan, concerning the veto by the President of the bill for the relief of Cornelia R. Schenck. I ask that it be read, so that it may placed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be read.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Michigan state again what the paper is which he proposes to put in the RECORD.

Mr. PALMER. A resolution in regard to the veto message of the President in the matter of the pension of Cornelia R. Schenck.

Mr. HARRIS. A resolution of what body?

Mr. PALMER. A resolution of a post of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. HARRIS. I hardly see the propriety of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to reading the paper? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The paper was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS FAIRBANKS POST, No. 17,
DEPARTMENT OF MICHIGAN, G. A. R.,
Detroit, July 22, 1886.

DEAR SIR: At a largely attended meeting of Fairbanks Post, No. 17, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, Wednesday evening, July 21, the veto by the President of the special pension bill of Mrs. Cornelia R. Schenck was discussed, and as the beneficiary is well known to our comrades and the belief in the justness of her claim being strong, the following resolution was passed by a unanimous vote of the post:

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Michigan be instructed to cast their votes in favor of the passage of the pension bill of Cornelia R. Schenck over the President's veto."

And I was directed to communicate the same to our representatives.

With great respect, respectfully, yours, &c.,

JAS. C. WHEELER, Adjutant.

Hon. T. W. PALMER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. EVARTS. I present a petition signed by the president of the Eight-hour League of Brooklyn, N. Y., the secretary and representative of the same league of Philadelphia, and the officers of the same in the city of Washington. The petitioners in very respectful statements ask that they may be allowed to go to the Court of Claims for a determination of their rights. As the petition is brief I will read it. It is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

Your petitioners respectfully represent that they are a committee appointed by and acting for a large number of laborers, workmen, and mechanics who are now or have been employed by the Government of the United States since the enactment of what is commonly known as the eight-hour law.

That a large number of the above-named classes of employés have been compelled to work ten hours per day since the passage of said act to earn their daily wages, and as your petitioners honestly believe in violation of said law, and for which your petitioners feel that they have a just and equitable claim against the Government of the United States.

Your petitioners further respectfully represent that for several years they have petitioned the Congress of the United States to grant them the relief to which they consider themselves justly entitled. That bills have been introduced and favorably reported looking to the adjustment of their claims, but that said bills have heretofore been allowed to die upon the Calendar of the Senate and the House. That there is now pending in your honorable body, favorably reported, Senate bill 1884, which if passed would allow your petitioners to bring suits in the Court of Claims and there have their rights under said law determined, and that is all that your petitioners now ask; but from all the information your petitioners are able to obtain we very much fear that this bill will be allowed to die upon the Calendar unless your honorable body will have sufficient compassion upon your humble petitioners to take immediate action upon the same.

Your petitioners further respectfully state that for the last ten years committees have been sent to Congress by the claimants from the various parts of the country, at great expense to said claimants, imploring Congress to take such action as would meet the justice and equity of the case, but so far to no purpose except as above stated.

Finally, your petitioners respectfully submit that they have a just and equitable claim against their Government for services honestly and fairly rendered, and which up to the present time has been denied them although committee after committee have admitted that their claims were just and ought to be paid, and have so reported to their respective bodies. And now your petitioners humbly implore you to send them to a tribunal of your own creation where their claims may be adjudicated upon the basis named in the bill above referred to.

We are all poor men; most of us have families to support; and while the amount is small in each individual case, it is money that is due us for hard work in the service of our Government, and we feel that we ought to have it.

We do not ask for bounty or gratuity; we ask for simple justice, nothing more; and we humbly beg and pray that before the present session closes your honorable body will find it consistent with your public duties to mete out to us that simple justice for which we humbly implore and pray.

IRA LILLIE,
President Eight-hour League of Brooklyn, N. Y.
JACOB M. DAVIS,
Secretary and representative of Government employés, 1031 Frankford road, Philadelphia, Pa.
RICH'D EMMONS,
Washington, D. C.
A. M. WARFIELD,
Washington, D. C.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EUSTIS presented five petitions of citizens of Louisiana, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the distribution of a part of the Treasury surplus; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWELL. I report back from the Committee on Pensions the bill (S. 1850) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie C. Owen, with the accompanying veto message of the President, and submit a report thereon. The committee recommend the passage of the bill, the President's objections to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed, with the accompanying message, on the Calendar.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5599) granting a pension to Joshua L. Morris, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1920) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Minneapolis, Minn., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6314) to increase the pension of James Carlin;
A bill (H. R. 8474) granting a pension to James McGlen;
A bill (H. R. 8310) granting a pension to Cyra L. Weston;
A bill (H. R. 8150) granting a pension to Jesse Campbell;
A bill (H. R. 8830) granting a pension to Aaron Garis;
A bill (H. R. 6825) granting a pension to James R. Baylor;
A bill (H. R. 6132) granting a pension to William Lynch;
A bill (H. R. 6443) granting a pension to Alexander Falconer;
A bill (H. R. 8836) granting a pension to John Miller;
A bill (H. R. 429) granting a pension to Harry McElhinny;
A bill (H. R. 7796) granting a pension to James Long; and
A bill (S. 2293) granting a pension to Hannah C. De Witt.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the messages of the President returning to the Senate the following bills with his objections thereto, submitted reports theron, recommending the passage of the bills, the objections of the President thereto to the contrary notwithstanding:

A bill (S. 342) granting a pension to Marrilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich.; and

A bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7616) for the relief of W. D. Havely, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8335) to restore William S. Ray to the pension-roll, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

TREASURY SURPLUS.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 126) directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt, to report it with an amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the joint resolution by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That no call shall be made under the provisions of this resolution until a sum equal to the call is in the Treasury over and above the reserve herein mentioned: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may have in the Treasury over and above the foregoing sums a working balance not exceeding $20,000,000. And in the case of any extraordinary emergency, and when, because thereof, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, the public interests shall require it, he may, by written order, suspend the further call for the payment of such indebtedness for such period of time as shall be necessary to maintain the public credit unimpaired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that that is the report of a majority of the committee. The minority adhere to the joint resolution as passed by the other House.

WILLIAM P. SQUIRES.

Mr. VAN WYCK. From the Committee on Pensions I report back the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1227) granting an increase of pension to William P. Squires. As the bill was passed by the Senate it proposed to increase the pension to $50 per month. The other House amended the bill by making it $45 a month. The amendment came back to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and the committee report recommending concurrence in the amendment of the House. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That seems to be the same bill we acted upon a day or two ago.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is not the same bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is exactly the same amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the House recommend an increase or a diminution of the amount?

Mr. VAN WYCK. A diminution. The Senate passed the bill giving $50 a month and the House recommend $45.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It seems to me there was a bill exactly like that acted upon two or three days ago. I do not know that it was the same name, but it was the same amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the Senator from Nebraska has not reported back the bill which was referred to the committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have here the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely suggested that I thought we had acted upon, I was afraid, that very bill, or a precisely similar amendment, a day or two back. It may have been another soldier, but it was a similar amendment, where $50 fixed by the Senate was put down to $45. I did not know but that this might be the same one.

Mr. VAN WYCK. What was done with that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is a Senate bill with a House amendment reducing the pension from $50 to $45.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is there any report with the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is not the bill which was referred to the committee with the amendment of the House. This is the printed and not the engrossed copy of the bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I shall get the proper bill and call it up presently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Meanwhile the bill will lie over.

Mr. VAN WYCK subsequently said: I now present from the Committee on Pensions the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1227) granting an increase of pension to William P. Squires, and I ask that it may be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representative to the bill, which was in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William P. Squires, late of Company C, Seventy-fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $45 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was concurred in.

DEATH OF VICE-PRESIDENT HENDRICKS.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report with an amendment the resolution providing for printing the proceedings of the Supreme Court of the United States on the occasion of the death of Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice-President, with the memorial addresses authorized by Congress. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the Supreme Court of the United States, as they appear on page 707 of volume 117 of the Supreme Court Reports, on the occasion of the death of Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice-President of the United States, be published with the memorial addresses already authorized by Congress.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, after the word "Resolved," to insert "by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ACTS RELATING TO LOANS AND CURRENCY.

Mr. MANDERSON. There came to the Senate yesterday a report from the Secretary of the Treasury, being a compilation of all the laws of the United States relating to loans and the currency, coinage, and banking. It was referred to the Committee on Printing, that they might investigate the advisability of printing it as a document. The committee direct me to report favorably, and ask the adoption of a concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the compilation of the laws of the United States relating to loans and the currency, coinage, and banking (including any subsequent legislation which may be enacted on those subjects at the present session of Congress) now being prepared at the Treasury Department, be printed; and that 6,000 additional copies be printed; of which 2,000 copies shall be for the Senate and 4,000 copies for the House of Representatives.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments to the joint resolution (H. Res. 201) for printing the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2877) to promote the efficiency of the General Land Office; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MRS. ANNA ETHERIDGE HOOKS.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask that the bill (S. 2774) to provide a pension for Mrs. Anna Etheridge Hooks be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. There is an error in the report, and it is my fault, I have no doubt. I failed to get the evidence in the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to recommit the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no concurrent or other resolutions the Calendar is now in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say, with the permission of the Senator from Indiana, that it is, I believe, the intention to move to proceed to the consideration of the vetoed pension bills at the conclusion of morning business day after to-morrow. I shall at that time move to take them up in their order.

Mr. PUGH. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to allow me to make a motion that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. 428) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama.

Mr. HARRISON. I can not give way to any other business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the offer to enter a motion to reconsider is in the nature of morning business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But is it within the time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Probably it is not within the time. If the Senator from Indiana insists upon it, his motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business is now in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I insist on my motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide for terms of court in Colorado.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1983) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Reading, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time of payment to purchasers of lands of the Otoe and Missouria and of the Omaha Indians;

A bill (H. R. 7881) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas R. Ware, of Virginia;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 22) authorizing the preparation of a compilation of the reports of committees of the Senate and House of Representatives; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 142) authorizing and directing the Commissioner of Labor to make an investigation as to convict labor, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOVERING, Mr. TAULBEE, and Mr. MORRILL managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 160) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 15,000 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. REID of North Carolina, Mr. DUNN, and Mr. FARQUHAR managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for printing 1,000 copies of Senate Executive Document No. 85, Forty-ninth Congress.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for printing 5,000 copies of the Special Intelligence Report by Lieutenant Kimball and Naval Cadet Capp, United States Navy, upon the progress of the Panama Canal during the year 1885.

The message further announced that the House still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIS, Mr. BLANCHARD, and Mr. T. J. HENDERSON managers at the further conference on the part of the House; and that it had further—

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed that it is the sense of the House that the item in the Senate amendment to said bill, making an appropriation for the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-canal, be stricken from said Senate amendment.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist on striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill the item making an appropriation for the Lake Michigan and Hennepin Canal.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist upon striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill the item making an appropriation for Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist upon striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill the item commencing with line 1446, down to and including line 1525, providing for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist upon striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill so much thereof as appropriates $375,000 for continuing the improvement of the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on July 26, 1886, approved and signed:

An act (S. 1839) for the relief of Richard C. Ridgway and others; and

An act (S. 2759) to remove the political disabilities of William H. F. Lee.

REPORT ON EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That 10,000 copies of Senate Executive Document No. 85, Forty-ninth Congress, be printed; one-half for the use of the Senate and the other half for the use of the House.

PROGRESS OF PANAMA CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Printing be directed to cause to be printed, for distribution by the Senate and members of the House in the usual proportion, 5,000 copies of the Special Intelligence Report, by Lieutenant Kimball and Naval Cadet Capp, United States Navy, upon the Progress of the Panama Canal during the year 1885, which report was transmitted to the House by the honorable Secretary of the Navy on May 20, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 28, 1886, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 27th day of July, 1886.

INDIAN AGENTS.

Robert Black, of New York, to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of New York.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 860) of Robert Black, of New York, to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of New York, in place of Rodney C. Ward, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Mr. Black is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Mr. Ward, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 17, 1886.

SIR: Your communication on behalf of the Finance Committee of the Senate, dated March 16, 1886, asking whether or not "there are any charges on file against the official or moral character of Rodney C. Ward, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of New York, suspended," is received.

In reply thereto I have the honor to state that, so far as this inquiry relates to a suspension from office, I feel bound by the rules laid down in the President's recent message to the Senate upon the general subject of such suspensions.

But in order that I may surely act within the requirements of the statute relating to the furnishing by this Department of information to the Senate, I beg leave to remind the committee that the office referred to has no fixed term attached to it, and to further state that the President is satisfied that a change in the incumbency of said office will result in an improvement of the public service, and that the policy of the present administration will be better carried out by such change.

Except as the same may be involved in these considerations, no papers containing charges reflecting upon the official or moral character of the suspended officer mentioned in your communication are in the custody of this Department.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance.

A resolution, as follows, was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Finance, April 6, 1886, in relation to this and all similar letters to the foregoing:

"Resolved, That the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Finance, dated March 16, 1886, or subsequently, in relation to the suspension of collectors of internal revenue, should be received and held as honest declarations made in good faith that there are no charges or papers on file in the Department reflecting in any manner against their moral or official conduct or character."

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Black.

John A. Sullivan, of New York, to be collector of internal revenue for the second district of New York.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 862) of John A. Sullivan, of New York, to be collector of internal revenue for the second district of New York, in place of Marshall B. Blake, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Mr. Sullivan is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Mr. Blake, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

John D. Thompson, to be postmaster at Mount Vernon, Stark County, Ohio.

Samuel S. Clayton, to be postmaster at Ada, Hardin County, Ohio.

John Finn, to be postmaster at Decorah, in the county of Winneshiek and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of John Finn to be postmaster at Decorah, Iowa, submits the following report:

The President suspended from the position of postmaster at Decorah, Iowa, A. K. Bailey, on June 15, 1885, and designated John Finn, the present nominee, to discharge the duties of said office. The suspension of Mr. Bailey was solely for and on account of political reasons, and there is nothing in the case in any degree reflecting injuriously on his integrity as a man or his efficiency as an officer. He is a man having the confidence and respect of the community in which said office is located. His term of office expired December 16, 1885, and John Finn was nominated to the full term. The committee recommend that the nomination be confirmed.

William G. Buckner, to be postmaster at Brownsville, Saline County, Missouri.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom the nomination of William G. Buckner to be postmaster at Brownsville, Mo., vice Milo L. Laughlin, whose removal for cause is proposed, reports:

That the papers in this case show that in May, 1885, petitions numerously signed by citizens of Brownsville and vicinity were presented to the President praying for the appointment of William G. Buckner as postmaster at Brownsville. These petitions contained no charges of any character against Mr. Laughlin. No action was taken in the case by the President or Postmaster-General until about the month of December following, when an inspection of the office and its administration was ordered by the Post-Office Department, based on complaints made by several citizens relative to the management of the office. The substance of the complaints was communicated to Mr. Laughlin by the committee, and he made a very satisfactory response in writing thereto. And the inspector who made the examination and reported the results to the Department said in his report that—

"Mr. M. L. Laughlin, the postmaster at Brownsville, seemed to be a very nice gentleman, and as such the patrons of the office entertained a very high opinion of him."

But the inspector reported several objections to the management of the office, which, in the opinion of the committee, might be alleged against many officers of the same class throughout the country, as they do not involve the element of moral turpitude. The inspector, however, concluded that, taking the case altogether, it would be proper to make a change in the office. Hence the nomination of a successor to Mr. Laughlin. And the committee can safely say that, taking the case altogether, no good reason appears why the community should change the high opinion which it holds of Mr. Laughlin, as testified to by the inspector in his report.

Mr. Laughlin says, in a letter to a member of the committee:

"I am a Republican, and if removed because I am one, I have no objection."

The committee think that, in view of all the information it has of the case, the real cause of the removal lies in the fact that Mr. Laughlin is a Republican, and as he has no objection to removal on that ground, the case is reported with a recommendation that the nomination of William G. Buckner be confirmed.

Homer Luce, to be postmaster at Higginsville, in the county of La Fayette and State of Missouri.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of Homer Luce to be postmaster at Higginsville, Mo., vice John W. Endly, suspended, submits the following report:

The papers in the case were communicated to the committee on its request by the Postmaster-General. From these it appears that the petition to the President praying for the appointment of Homer Luce was signed by a large number of citizens, and contained no charges of any character whatever against Mr. Endly, the postmaster, nor does it appear that at any time or in any other way charges were preferred against him except of a political character; and it appears from papers submitted to the committee in the nature of protests against the suspension of Mr. Endly and the appointment of Mr. Luce that the community in which the post-office is situate holds the suspended officer in high esteem and indorses him as an estimable citizen and competent and faithful public officer. These protests are about as numerously signed as are the petitions asking for the appointment of Mr. Luce.

This being the case, the committee can but regard the suspension of Mr. Endly as being based on political considerations exclusively. His place was wanted for a member of the Democratic party; hence he was suspended and Mr. Luce nominated to succeed him. This being the case, and it appearing that the nominee is a competent person to discharge the duties of the office, the committee report the nomination of Homer Luce to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

William Hyde, to be postmaster at Saint Louis, in the county of Saint Louis and State of Missouri.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of William Hyde to be postmaster at Saint Louis, Mo., in place of Rodney D. Wells, suspended, submits the following report:

The records and files supplied to the committee in this case by the Postmaster-General disclose a very resolute purpose on the part of the partisan adherents of the present administration of the executive department of the Government to effect a change in the office of postmaster at Saint Louis.

Applications and importunities in this regard were so frequent and persistent that a commission of three post-office inspectors was organized and instructed to inspect the affairs and condition of the office. The commission entered upon its work early in July, 1885, and forwarded its report to the Department on the 22d of that month. The committee has examined the report so made, and is impressed thereby most favorably in respect of the efficiency of the service in the Saint Louis post-office, and it may well be doubted whether any first-class office in the country could be subjected to the ordeal applied to that office and withstand it with as little resulting damage as it did. The service of the office during Mr. Wells's administration has been efficient; his accounts are correct. The only faults found with him by the commission are such as the members thereof admit and state in their report to be, "those which appeal to the noblest sentiments of manhood." No one can read the report of the commission without coming to the conclusion that Mr. Wells is a man of high character, of resolute purpose to do right, and to so conduct the affairs of his office as to secure a satisfactory service to the public and to maintain absolute integrity in his accounts as a public officer.

Taking the case in its entirety it does not admit of a doubt that the suspension of Mr. Wells was the result of partisan pressure. He is a Republican. His office is wanted by a Democrat. He is suspended, and a Democrat designated to his place. If Mr. Hyde, the nominee, shall succeed in giving to the public as efficient service, and to the Government as correct and faithful accounting of the revenues of the office as Mr. Wells did, he may indeed congratulate himself.

The evidence of the files in the case indicates that the nominee is a fit and competent man to discharge the duties of the office, and the committee therefore report his nomination to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate July 27, 1886.

MINT ASSAYER.

George C. Munson, of Colorado, to be assayer of the mint of the United States at Denver, Colo.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 27, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FEDERAL BUILDING, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Mr. DIBBLE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, filed, in accordance with a previous order, views of the minority on House bill 4620, for the purchase of land for the Federal building, Brooklyn, N. Y.

PAY OF FOLDING-ROOM EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. TAULBEE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives pay to Hon. Samuel Donelson, Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $288, being the amount paid by him to A. B. Raber, Benjamin Doane, and Frank Bissicks, jr., for work done in the House folding-room during the present session of the House.

MAPS OF UNITED STATES AND TERRITORIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 160) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 15,000 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed, with Senate amendments.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, in regard to that I ask, in view of the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, and as I had the honor to introduce the resolution, unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be non-concurred in, and the conference asked for agreed to. It is a matter of printing some maps which is of general interest to both Houses.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REFERENCE OF SENATE RESOLUTIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolutions; which were read, and referred to the Committee on Printing, namely:

Concurrent resolution providing for printing 2,500 additional copies of the report of the electrical conference at Philadelphia in 1884, for the use of the Department of State.

Concurrent resolution providing for printing 6,000 additional copies of the Digest of the Official Opinions of Attorneys-General from 1789 to 1881.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a concurrent resolution of the House providing for printing the annual report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States, with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, July 26, 1886.

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide for holding terms of court in Colorado.

The SPEAKER. Without objection this request will be complied with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOUK, an extension of leave until Saturday next.

To Mr. GALLINGER, from further attendance during the present session.

To Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, indefinitely, on account of important business, from Friday morning, July 30.

To Mr. CANDLER, for the balance of the session, on account of sickness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 2868) granting a pension to Mary Ann Dougherty.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYSON. I demand the regular order.

I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House made on yesterday morning, by unanimous consent a bill called up by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COLLINS] comes over until this morning, subject, however, to objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will go over under the same conditions until to-morrow morning.

Mr. COLLINS. I must be content if that is the desire of the gentleman.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is the bill to which the gentleman refers?

The SPEAKER. It is a bill providing for an additional circuit judge in the second judicial circuit.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is the wish of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. COLLINS. As there is objection to its present consideration, I am content that it shall go over until to-morrow morning under the same conditions.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been printed in the RECORD, and by consent it goes over until to-morrow, subject to the same objection that might be made against it to-day.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILLIS. I have a privileged report which I wish to make.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Chair supposes, presents a privileged report?

Mr. RANDALL. It is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, together with the Senate amendments thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 144, 147, 156, 157, 158, 170, 171, 204, 218, 223, 224, 225, 231, 240, 241, and 242.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 75, 76, 77, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 145, 146, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 219, 220, 221, 222, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, and 243.

That the House concur in the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following: And denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, or in exchange therefor, upon presentation by the holders, and to that extent said certificates of larger denomination shall be canceled and destroyed.

That the House concur in the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, with an amendment as follows: After the word "Virginia," in said amendment, insert "Tennessee River."

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the previous question on the report of the committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think some explanation ought to be offered.

Mr. RANDALL addressed the Chair.

Mr. BURROWS. No intelligent idea can be obtained from the reading of the report. We ought to have some knowledge of what is recommended. I make the point that the report must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. It will take all day. I ask the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to dispense with the morning hour.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I present a report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

ALBERT S. WILLIS,
NEWTON C. BLANCHARD,
THOMAS J. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

S. J. R. McMILLAN,
O. D. CONGER,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask the previous question on it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I make the point of order that this, being an appropriation bill, must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. But this is a conference report.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does that make any difference?

The SPEAKER. All amendments have been considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and even if that were not the case the point of order made by the gentleman does not apply to a conference report.

The Clerk read the resolution offered by Mr. WILLIS, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the item in the river and harbor appropriation bill making an appropriation for the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-canal be stricken from the amendment of the Senate, and that the conferees of the House, when next appointed, be, and are hereby, so instructed.

Mr. WILLIS. Upon that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules, thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the proposition and fifteen against it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MOFFATT. I would like to be heard on that proposition. What is the pending question?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered and the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MOFFATT. I desire to be heard on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MOFFATT. In the very few moments which under the rules are allotted to me to explain the proposition contained in the Senate amendment I can expect of course to do so only very briefly. But I shall say to the House that this amendment proposed by the Senate is one of the most meritorious propositions that have been suggested in the river and harbor bill.

This amendment is in the interest of the commerce of the great Northwest. It is in the interest of a commerce which last year aggregated $53,000,000 and will this year reach $60,000,000, and has the right to demand consideration from the Congress of the United States. The Keweenaw Peninsula of Michigan extends for about 100 miles into Lake Superior across what would be the direct line of the commerce of the great lakes. Near the southern extremity of this peninsula is the Portage Lake and River, extending within 1½ miles of the whole distance. Between Portage Lake and Lake Superior a canal has been cut connecting these two waters. Portage River, the outlet of the lake, has been deepened and improved. So by these two improvements a channel or water way has been made across this peninsula.

These improvements are owned by private corporations, authorized to charge and collect toll from all vessels using these canals and their freight. By means of these canals the great commerce of Lake Superior is enabled to save a distance of 125 to 150 miles, or from fifteen to twenty hours of time. It needs, I apprehend, no argument to demonstrate to this House the benefit to the great commerce of the Northwest of a saving of 150 miles' distance, or twenty hours' time each way each trip of the vessel. This alone should be sufficient reason why this amendment should be adopted, to the end that these canals should be made free to this commerce.

Time is money, and a saving of twenty hours in the single passage of a steamer or sail vessel the length of Lake Superior means a large amount of money in the season of navigation. It means at least seventy-five or one hundred dollars per trip. Why, sir, in the matter of time alone the money saved by making these water ways free to the commerce of the lakes would equal, yes, exceed, in one season all you are called upon to pay for them, and, sir, if this was the only reason for concurring in the amendment of the Senate I should feel perfectly justified in urging this action.

But, sir, there are still further and more important and weightier reasons. From the Apostle Islands to Marquette, a distance of 270 miles or thereabout, along the southern shore of Lake Superior, the bleakest and most dangerous coast on the great lakes, there is not a harbor where a vessel engaged in this great and rapidly growing commerce can seek a shelter and protection from the storms which sweep over Superior. Vessels engaged in this great commerce, $53,000,000 of freight, and hundreds of lives are thus put in jeopardy.

I know of no place in the nation where commerce is left thus exposed and unprotected. I know of no coast where for this distance an enormous commerce is left without a harbor in which it can seek a shelter.

Why, sir, the whole coast of Keweenaw is strewn with the wrecks of steamers and vessels and its beach covered with their valuable cargoes. There is not a year but what the loss by shipwrecks on Superior far exceeds the amount necessary to purchase the canals and provide a harbor of refuge.

Again, sir, on the Keweenaw Peninsula, on Portage Lake and tributaries thereto, there is one of the greatest industries in this nation, to wit, copper mines which produce one-half of the copper product of the world, and every pound has to be tolled as it passes through these canals to the markets of the world, and everything which enters into the production of this copper—the machinery, the coal, all material, all that the large population of this country eat or wear, everything exported and imported into the countries where are situated these great industries—is tolled. It amounted last year to a tax of $1.25 upon ever man, woman, and child in the copper district.

A toll on a great commerce is odious, a great burden, a grievous wrong which should not be tolerated. Here then are three reasons, any one of which is good and sufficient of itself, why these canals should be owned and controlled by the General Government.

This is not a proposition in which my State or the constituency I represent in this House are alone interested. The commerce of Superior is wholly interstate. It is the wheat of Dakota, the grain and flour and iron of Minnesota, the iron of Wisconsin, and the copper and iron of Michigan, and the return cargoes from Chicago, Milwaukee, Buffalo, Toledo, Erie, and Cleveland. Not 20 per cent. is to or from Michigan ports. It is the great commerce to and from the Northwest growing and developing with marvelous rapidity every day that asks care and protection at your hands.

You have on the files of this House resolutions from the Legislatures of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Michigan, asking that the General Government acquire title to these canals; petitions from the boards of trade in cities of Illinois, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Michigan, asking that these canals be made free to the commerce of the lakes; you have petitions from more than one thousand ship-owners and navigators, asking that their property and lives may be protected by the acquisition of the titles to the canals, that they be a free harbor of refuge. You have been petitioned by citizens of New York, Massachusetts, and Connecticut, interested in the commerce of the lakes, asking this action. Your files are burdened with these petitions and memorials from all parts of the country, asking at your hands what this amendment will accomplish. No proposition ever came before any Congress better indorsed or more strongly urged.

It has also been indorsed by the Engineer Department of the Government. On the 22d day of April, 1884, the Senate passed a resolution calling on the War Department for a report as to the advisability of this purchase, in response to which the Department transmitted the report of General Poe, of the Engineer Corps (see Senate Executive Document No. 15, Forty-eighth Congress, second session). I quote from said report:

> Lieutenant-Colonel Poe reports that the price asked for the two canals is $350,000, and if the ownership of this important water way can be vested in the Government free from all incumbrance, thus rendering their navigation free to commerce, there can be no question but that the price is reasonable and the purchase advisable.
> The opening of these canals would shorten the route for all vessels from Sault Saint Mary to Duluth and avoid the dangerous passage around Keweenaw Point, which is extremely hazardous, especially during the stormy months of spring and fall.
> The already great and rapidly increasing commerce of Lake Superior would seem to commend this purchase to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Now, sir, if this amendment simply provided that, in answer to the demands of Legislatures, boards of trades, ship-owners, navigators, and citizens all over the country, a harbor of refuge should be constructed for the commerce of the lakes, or to shorten the sailing distance of the vessels engaged in that commerce and to relieve one of the great industries of the nation from an excessive burden in the shape of tolls, I doubt if a man in this House would object.

Then what is the cause of the opposition in this case? It was voiced the other day by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and I am surprised that a man of his accuracy and with his great knowledge of matters of legislation should have made the statement he did. He said these canals were built with a land grant and that they had served their purpose, and it was now proposed to unload them on the General Government. As to the last statement, I will say, the canals to-day are of infinitely more importance than they were at that time. They were then of a mere local importance, and now they are in the pathway of the commerce of the whole Northwest, amounting to $60,000,000.

And I submit that the objection as to the land grant is not valid. Here it is claimed that because a grant of land worth $500,000 was made to aid in the construction of one of these canals twenty years ago when the commerce of Lake Superior was in its infancy, therefore we will refuse to care for and protect the commerce of to-day, worth fifty or sixty millions. Because somebody some time may have made some money out of a land grant the great commerce of the lake shall be exposed to shipwreck and destruction for want of a harbor of refuge, valuable time shall be lost each year worth more than you are asked to appropriate, and great communities and industries taxed and tolled. It is proposed that the interests of the States and cities and commercial bodies who have memorialized and petitioned you shall have no relief because forsooth somebody received $500,000 worth of land to aid in constructing a canal that cost millions twenty years ago.

For this reason all these great interests, rivaling any on this continent, must be turned away from these Halls and their prayer for relief refused. But, sir, I want to say to gentlemen that it is not proposed to pay a cent for the canal constructed by the aid of this land grant—not a cent. You will have to invent some other objection.

This is the situation: There is a canal, so called, at each end of Portage Lake. The upper one was built by aid of the land grant. The lower one was constructed without the aid of a dollar of money or an acre of land from the General Government. Both canals are now owned by the same company, or rather the individuals composing the two companies are the same. The upper canal, to the construction of which the Government lent its aid, is of no value to its owners. It nets less than $1,000 per year, as you will see testified to before a committee of this House in the last Congress, and I have a certified statement of receipts and expenditures showing the same. This, of course, is no object to the company. They would be glad to give it away to get rid of it. But the lower canal is a valuable property. The tolls collected amount to from fifty to sixty thousand dollars per year, and the net profit is a large interest on the amount asked for both canals. So we are only to pay what the lower canal is actually worth as an investment, and the one into which the land grant went is "thrown in" because it is of no value to the company. This is the condition of affairs, and the land grant is foreign to the question.

This is a safe amendment. It has been indorsed by the Engineer Department, as I have before stated; and it is now further provided that the purchase shall not be consummated until two other officers of the Engineer Corps shall certify that it is desirable and necessary, and the price to be paid is reasonable.

This is not an effort of a corporation to unload a poor property on to the United States. It is the effort of a people interested in a great commerce; a people interested in great industries, striving for protection for that commerce and relief for these industries.

I but give voice to the request and prayer of the people of Minnesota, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan, as expressed by their Legislatures, of the boards of trades of all the cities of the great lakes; of the cities of almost every commercial center of New England; and of the ship-owners and sailors of the lakes, when I ask this House to hearken to their requests and give to the commerce of Lake Superior the consideration its importance demands, by providing in this bill, carrying from fifteen to eighteen millions of dollars, the comparatively small sum necessary to provide for it that protection accorded to the commerce of all other sections of the country, and to relieve its industries by removing the burden of tolls. And I wish to say to the members of this House who favor the river and harbor bill that you can not afford to pass this resolution and thus tie up the hands of your conferees so that they can not agree to these amendments, if they deem it best, in order to secure the passage of the bill.

[During the delivery of the above remarks the fifteen minutes allowed in opposition to the resolution expired.

Mr. MOFFATT. May I have a moment more?

Mr. WILLIS. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MOFFATT. About three minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. MOFFATT resumed and completed his remarks as above printed.]

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I desire to know whether as this resolution relates to three distinct matters debate should not be permitted upon each distinct proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the resolution embraces only one proposition. It relates only to what is known as the Portage Lake Canal.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Then I misunderstood it.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire briefly to call the attention of the House to the condition of this bill. I have great sympathy with every effort to make free every water way of this country; but I have still greater sympathy at the present moment with the pressing necessity of providing for the wants of the great harbors and rivers of this country; and I fear that if this and other schemes—I use the word scheme in no improper sense—be placed upon this bill they will sacrifice all the great interests that I have alluded to without accomplishing anything for their own benefit.

If I desired to go into the merits of this proposition, I would state to the House that there are two canals, as the gentleman from Michigan has stated, but that they are owned by the same parties. I would state that the Congress of the United States appropriated over $500,000, over half a million dollars, to complete one of these canals, giving 400,000 acres of the richest mineral and agricultural lands of this country for that purpose, upon the express stipulation that it should be made free to the commerce of the country. But the gentleman from Michigan states that there is a burden now of $64,000 per annum by way of tolls. I stated, as the gentleman knows, that of that $64,000 $60,000 are paid by these great copper mines, whose owners in large part are the owners of these canals.

Mr. MOFFATT. May I interrupt the gentleman? He is quite mistaken. The owners of the canals are not the owners of the mines.

Mr. WILLIS. In part, I stated.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think not.

Mr. WILLIS. Now I say to my friend, let this wait a little. This House has been exceedingly liberal to Michigan, and to that part of the country, and I am glad of it; but let them not jeopardize other interests, and their own interests also, by pressing this matter on this bill to the destruction, as I believe, of the whole bill. Let them wait a few months or a year. It has been only a few years since the toll has been imposed, and I ask the friends of this bill, and I ask my friend from Michigan [Mr. MOFFATT] not to press this measure here, but to give us a vote on the bill, eliminating for the present, without regard to its merits if you please, this item. Let us leave this out and act upon the other subjects that we can agree upon, and go on and dispose of the bill. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words to the House in favor of the adoption of this resolution. The time has come in the history of this bill when something will have to be yielded or the life of the bill will be imperiled. I do not assail this Portage Lake Canal appropriation as one which, under other circumstances, might not be properly made; but with the light which I was able to get during the examination of the question in the committee, I was unable to bring my mind to agree that the time had been reached when Congress could act intelligently and wisely in making an appropriation for this purpose. The fact of the title of the property being in a corporation which has to be extinguished, raises a number of questions which, putting it upon the very best ground, leaves the case a doubtful one. I do not share the idea that piling up in one State a large amount of the appropriations made by this bill is necessarily an objectionable thing; but we can not shut our eyes to the fact that an unreasonable proportion of the appropriations carried in a bill like this lavished upon a single State must affect the passage of the bill in the House and in the Senate.

So it occurred to me as a member of the committee, and I am still of the opinion, as to these great improvements along the line of the great lakes—and I agree that there are none more important in this country—that, inasmuch as a very large sum of money was appropriated in the bill for improvements in that region, inasmuch as there was no emergency pressing upon us in regard to this item, and inasmuch as the sum which it requires runs away above a quarter of a million dollars, it ought in my judgment to be postponed until another Congress, or another session of this Congress, shall have further light upon the various questions involved. I subtract nothing from the argument of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MOFFATT] in regard to the ultimate importance of this improvement, but——

Mr. COBB. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that Congress gave to the original corporation for the construction of this canal a grant of 400,000 acres of the very best lands in the northern peninsula in Michigan?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am aware of that. My colleague on the committee [Mr. WILLIS] has just stated that fact. Congress did give a large body of very valuable land to aid in the original construction of this work, and I will never consent to the purchase of the canal without an accounting being made to the Government for a fair proportion of the value which Congress has given to the work by that donation. In other words, I am not willing to consent that after Congress has conferred a great subsidy upon a corporation to enable it to construct its works, Congress should then buy the works without any allowance being made to the Government for the value created by that original grant. So, Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, I think that the friends of this project, without compromising its ultimate adoption, without compromising the question of the great value of this canal as a public work—I think that under the circumstances they can very well afford to withdraw this provision, and let us try to pass the bill leaving it out.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY].

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I know something about the canal that is sought by this amendment to be settled upon the Government. It was a subject of investigation by the Committee on Public Lands in the Forty-eighth Congress. A resolution was introduced to refer the subject to that committee for the purpose of investigating the questions connected with the construction of that canal and the grant of land that accompanied the act providing for it. The grant, as I remember, was of 400,000 acres of land of enormous value, containing some of the most valuable mineral deposits and some of the best timber on the continent. The Committee on Public Lands would have reported in favor of the forfeiture of the grant had it not been for the fact that the act devolved upon the governor of Michigan the duty of certifying as to the completion of the canal in accordance with the terms of the law. The governor had so certified, and the committee thought that it would be perhaps dangerous for Congress to undertake to interfere with the validity of that certification. But the inquiry that was instituted under the resolution developed the fact that the canal had been constructed in an exceedingly imperfect and incomplete manner, so as to be quite insufficient to meet the requirements of commerce, and had it not been for the provision of the law which authorized the governor of Michigan to certify the completion of the canal, the committee would have recommended the forfeiture of the grant upon the ground that the grantees had not complied with the terms of the law.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will permit me, I will ask him if it was not also a part of the defense made by Mr. Davis, the president of the company, that the lands had been sold and had passed into the hands of aliens, English capitalists, who knew nothing of any possible defect in the title.

Mr. HENLEY. Yes, sir; that is true. One of the grounds against forfeiture urged by the president of the canal company was that the lands embraced within the grant itself had actually passed into the hands of foreign capitalists, and were therefore beyond the reach of Congress. We did not pay special attention to that position; for if that was the only difficulty with which the committee was confronted we should certainly have urged a forfeiture. It was claimed, however, that they were innocent purchasers.

Mr. MOFFATT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HENLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MOFFATT. Are you aware of the fact that we are not paying a single dollar for that canal?

Mr. HENLEY. Why you got $5,000,000 more than enough to build the canal, according to the requirements of the act of Congress.

Mr. MOFFATT. This bill does not provide a dollar for that canal.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution which has been read.

Mr. NEECE. I ask that it be reported again.

The resolution was again read.

The resolution was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 109, noes 63.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the last vote taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I now offer the other resolution, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the conferees of the House on the river and harbor bill, when next appointed, be instructed to insist on striking out the amendment of the Senate making an appropriation for the Lake Michigan and Hennepin Canal.

Mr. WILLIS. On that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen on each side. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] to control the time in opposition.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I yield one minute to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. NEECE].

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Speaker, there is no measure pending before Congress, nor is it likely that there will be one, which tends so largely to regulate the charges of railroads for the transportation of freight as the completion of this Hennepin Canal. It is a question which has been before Congress for many years; it is before this one and will be here before the next one, urged by the friends of cheap transportation in this country, unless it is adopted; and you people who have so much trouble about the Constitution in connection with this canal will find that the Constitution will take care of itself and that the people will force this canal to be built in the interest of cheap transportation in this country. It will have the effect to put it beyond the power of railroad corporations to extort just what they please from the people of the Northwest, and to that extent it will help the entire country. I hope the resolution will not be agreed to.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. Speaker, by the action of the Senate the House is now brought to face the question of accepting from the State of Illinois 96 miles of canal with an appropriation to begin the work of extending said canal to the Mississippi River.

It seems to me, sir, that not in this Congress nor in many preceding sessions of this body has any question which affects so largely and directly the prosperity of the whole country been presented for our consideration.

The resolution now offered by the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee [Mr. WILLIS], by which it is proposed to instruct the committee of conference to strike out the Senate amendment which provides for the acceptance and construction I have referred to, ought not to pass.

Mr. Speaker, in the discussion of this question a few days ago this enterprise was characterized on this floor as a scheme. It was denied emphatically that it was a "steal," but it was insisted that it was a "scheme." Mr. Speaker, it is a scheme, and one of the grandest schemes that has ever been presented to the American Congress in the interests of all our people. It is a scheme, sir, to connect the East with the West. It is a scheme to connect the Mississsppi Valley, which contains one-half of the population of these States, with the industries of the East. It is a scheme to connect the waters of the Mississippi Valley with the waters of the East. It is a scheme to benefit all the farming interests that lie west of Chicago in six States of this Union and one Territory particularly. It is to benefit the manufacturing interests of the East. It is a scheme to develop every coal field in these portions of the United States. It is a scheme that will aid and benefit one-half of the people of this country, and which does no injury to the remainder.

It is a scheme to present to the Government of the United States a canal that has cost $6,000,000 for the sole purpose of inaugurating the scheme I have suggested.

Mr. Speaker, the Illinois and Michigan Canal extends from Chicago and the waters of Lake Michigan southwesterly to the city of La Salle, a distance of 96 miles, and there connects with the Illinois River improvement. This canal was built by the State of Illinois, aided by grant of lands from the United States, and has been in successful operation since its completion in 1847. It is 60 feet wide at water-line, with a water depth of 6 feet. The total cost of the work was $6,557,681.50. It has been the practice of the State to operate the canal on the policy of low tolls, and yet its net receipts over operating expenses amount to $2,993,691.74.

By an act of the Legislature of Illinois approved April 28, 1882, "the Illinois and Michigan Canal, its right of way, and all its appurtenances, and all rights, titles, and interest which the State has in any real estate ceded to the State by the United States for canal purposes," was ceded to the United States upon the express condition that the grant should be accepted within five years, and that thereafter the said canal should be maintained as a national water way for commercial purposes, to be used by all persons without discrimination, under such rules and regulations as Congress may prescribe. This act was ratified by a large majority of the voters of the State at the election of November 7, 1882.

The proposed canal from Hennepin, on the Illinois River, to the Mississippi, is designated as the Illinois and Mississippi River Canal, and is known as the "Hennepin Canal." It has been surveyed by authority of the Forty-seventh Congress, under the direction of the Secretary of War, and the United States engineers report "a perfectly feasible route" for a canal 80 feet wide at the water-line, with 7 feet of water. When completed direct water communication will be secured between the great lakes and the water ways of the East to the Mississippi River on the west and the Gulf of Mexico on the south. The length of the line from Hennepin to the Mississippi at the mouth of Rock River is 74.5 miles. A feeder 37.1 miles in length is to be built extending to Dixon, on Rock River, and called the Rock Island route. Major Benyaurd, in his report, says of the dimensions of canal and locks:

It is proposed to make the canal and feeder 80 feet wide on the water surface, and 7 feet deep, with slopes of 1 on 1½. The locks for the main canal are 170 feet long and 30 feet wide. These latter dimensions were adopted after considering the question of low-water navigation on the Upper Mississippi, as affecting barge transportation. The hull measurement of the larger size barges adapted to the passage of the locks, is, according to the custom-house authorities, about 300 tons, though with deeper water afforded by higher stages of the river, and also by the proposed dimensions of the canal, such barges can, with the box-top, carry over 600 tons; but we had to be governed by the minimum draught of the boats at the most unfavorable stage of of the main river.

The same lock dimensions for the Hennepin Canal were also adopted by Colonel Macomb in the report of 1874, in connection with the subject of transportation routes to the seaboard.

The estimated cost of constructing this canal and feeder, including right of way, is $6,672,890.67; the estimated cost of enlarging the Illinois and Michigan Canal, $2,298,919.15; total, $8,971,809.82. This estimate is for the construction of what is known as the Rock Island route, which is recommended by the committee.

The proposition in the bill is to accept of the proffered grant of the Illinois and Michigan Canal made by the State of Illinois on the terms proposed, and to construct, under the direction of the Secretary of War, the Illinois and Mississippi River Canal (called the Hennepin), thus connecting the great water systems of the East and West.

The western system, consisting of the Mississippi and its tributaries, drains an area of 1,244,000 square miles—considerably larger than all central Europe, a region which for richness of soil is without a parallel, and contains a population of over 25,000,000.

Turn now to the East; look at the great lakes, the River Saint Lawrence, the Erie Canal, and the Hudson River, which touches New England and reaches New York Harbor, and you have another grand system which in its importance as a developed inland water way stands unequaled in this country. These two are waiting to be united in one grand water way, calling, if you please, on this Congress to supply the needed link that shall furnish to the nation advantages for internal commerce unequaled on the globe.

Why is this work demanded now? Mr. Speaker, the answer is to cheapen and regulate rates of transportation.

As has well been said, the four great departments of industry which give employment to our people are, agriculture, mining, manufacture, and commerce. Next to personal liberty and the equal rights of all, if there be any duty which in time of peace a government owes to the people of greater sacredness than is involved in promoting these, I know not what it is. Cheap transportation is essential to the prosperity, ay, and almost to the very existence, of every one of these departments of industry. To the agriculturist it is the same as cheaper production; to the miner it is better wages for his work; to the manufacturer it is a saving in the cost of his wares; to commerce it lessens outlay and enlarges the volume of business, and to the consumer of both agricultural products and of manufactured goods it lessens the cost of living. In short, cheap transit is a blessing to all and an injury to none.

In discussing transportation, two methods now in use must be considered—one by water, the other by rail.

The railway age in which we live has made us almost forget the river and the canal, and the impression seems to have been made on the public mind that the canal method has passed away, or, at least, has been so completely superseded by the railroad as to be unworthy of attention. Mr. Speaker, no greater mistake can be made.

Sir Vernon Harcourt, in his late work on rivers and canals, says there are in use in Great Britain 3,138½ miles of canal; in France, 2,954 miles; while Holland and Italy are famed for their extensive systems of canals. In India, canals are utilized for both irrigation and transportation; one of the most important being the Lower Ganges Canal, 582 miles in length, just completed. In concluding a chapter on canals this distinguished authority says:

It is evident that rivers and canals when properly maintained and developed still form important routes of inland communication. Their commercial value has in most cases been considerably impaired by railways; but they are gradually recovering from the depression into which they were thrown by the keen competition of the railway systems. Though canals can not hope to compete with railways in the conveyance of passengers and of light, perishable articles, it is certain they possess advantages for the transport of heavy and bulky goods.

He concludes by saying:

Canals, if maintained, extended, and, when necessary, enlarged, as is being done now in France, and if not suffered to fall into the hands of the proprietors of railways traversing the same districts, both foster a healthy competition with railways and tend consequently to reduce the cost of transport to the advantage of the public.

Mr. Speaker, it is by no means strange that the advent of railways and the wonderfully rapid development of the system should, for a time at least, have caused the river and canal to be pushed out of favorable consideration. Why, sir, as young as I am, the first laid railway track on which passengers were carried in the United States is within my recollection. Since then, what a miracle has been wrought by steel and steam. From that small beginning railways having covered as with a net-work every State east of the Alleghanies, have found their way over these mountain barriers into the valley of the Mississippi, entering every State and Territory, and almost every county therein. They have sped across the plains from the Missouri to the base of the Rockies, and, nothing daunted by their steep ascents, have found for themselves passes or pierced their way through tunnels, and with five magnificent trunk lines are now carrying passengers and freight from the shores of the Atlantic to the Pacific, while with the numberless branches, the rich valleys and mining region of the Rocky and Sierra mountain ranges are everywhere being reached by the railway train.

Since the world began, in no other half century has so much been done by any one agency to push forward the interests of the four great departments of industry already referred to, or to advance civilization, as by the railways of the United States. They represent an invested capital of $8,000,000,000; they are conducted by the best business talent the country affords; they have had, moreover, conferred upon them corporate powers under which they claim the right to act in any way that in the judgment of their managers is calculated to promote their own interests. The railway shareholder delegates the management of his capital to a board of directors and to managers, and thereafter has no care respecting it other than a good dividend. Selfishness, strengthened by corporate powers, must necessarily control every railway corporation in the land. The competition to which a confiding public once looked for protection has faded from sight, and combination has taken its place. The powers conferred by State government upon the corporations which control the 125,000 miles of existing railways in this country have been so exercised that nowhere is there a section wherein commerce is not at the mercy of the railways, save where there is water transportation.

In all this I bring no railing accusation, but merely state facts as they do and must exist with such a railway system as we now have. The men who control these railways will compare favorably with any other class in all that goes to make up business character and respectability, and it is by no means probable that those by whom railroad managers are assailed would have shown themselves less subject to criticism than the latter had the same business devolved upon them. I put this case as it is, simply to show the criminal folly of a government that proposes irrevocably to commit its internal commerce to the unrestrained and uncontrolled guardianship of such a system. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to enter now into the discussion of the railway problem and its bearing on the vital interests of the country. The highest interests of our require that transportation should be regular, the tariff on heavy articles should be placed at the lowest remunerative rates that actual competition can secure. To accomplish this a free water way open to all is the only certain method; and this proposition I shall endeavor to prove before I conclude.

Fortunately for this discussion, Mr. Speaker, we are not left to any speculation or guess-work for facts on which to base our arguments; we have instead, years of legitimate competition between railways and water ways, conducted on a grand scale, each system doing its very best to secure the enormous traffic which has been carried on; and I have here the results to which I invite the candid attention of the House.

The following statements are copied from a public document entitled "Commerce and Navigation, 1884:"

Now, sir, here is demonstration that water rates from Chicago to New York are 6.40 cents per bushel less than all-rail rates between the same points. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the closest scrutiny as to the correctness of these statements, and I here ask any who can to controvert them. I repeat the statement—water beats rail between Chicago and New York over 6 cents per bushel. This is the result of a contest in which railways having superior facilities and managed by the ablest have done their best to absorb and control the traffic, and I may add that one of the leading authorities on railway traffic concedes that water lines must control rates for all heavy traffic.

Now, suppose we apply these ascertained facts in relation to the effect of all-water transportation eastward from Chicago to the traffic west of Chicago and what do we find? Why, sir, we find, first, that railway rates west of Chicago are 70 per cent. higher than rail rates east, and why? Simply because of the absence of an all-water competition to the West. Nor is this all that would inevitably follow if the great lakes and the Mississippi were connected by the proposed Hennepin Canal.

The same reduction already secured on freights east of Chicago applied to freight west, upon the basis of the facts as shown in the tables furnished, would amount to a saving of 8 cents per bushel on grain from Mississippi points to Chicago.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having shown by reliable data the saving on each bushel of grain transported over the contemplated route, it is next in order to ascertain the quantity of cereals produced in the region of country that will be reached and influenced by the proposed canal, and in this way we can satisfy ourselves as to whether or not we can afford to build it.

The following tables are compiled from the report of the Statistician, Department of Agriculture, No. 25, made to Hon. Norman J. Coleman, Commissioner, for the year 1885:

Grand total	57,733,283	1,555,633,000

These tables must be received as the most reliable data within our reach, and they show the annual production of cereals in the States most directly affected by the construction of the proposed canal, in 1885, to be the enormous total of 1,555,633,000 bushels. No one will pretend but that the value of every bushel of this grain is determined by the price of what is shipped away; so that whatever of saving can be made in the cost of transportation should be calculated on the entire crop whether it is shipped or not; but to meet every possible criticism, let us calculate the saving on one-half the crop of 1885, or 777,000,000 bushels, to be not 8 cents, as the facts before quoted demonstrate, but only 4 cents per bushel, and the result is a saving of over $30,000,000 per annum to the producer of those cereals alone. But, Mr. Speaker, this saving, vast as it is, becomes insignificant when compared with the future possibilities of the region we are considering, and these we should take into account if we desire to act wisely in reference to the question before us.

It is estimated that the proportion of acres cultivated to the cultivable land in the States named is as follows: Wisconsin, 1 in 6½; Minnesota, 1 in 13; Nebraska, 1 in 29; Kansas, 1 in 34; Dakota, 1 in 30; Missouri, 1 in 11; Illinois, 1 in 5.

Nowhere else in our own country is there such an agricultural region; none where the proportion of cultivable lands is so large; none capable of making so many homes of plenty for prosperous, intelligent cultivators of the soil—a class of citizens indispensable to the stability of our institutions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, suppose we build the canal and so cheapen transit on the productions of these States as to give to the agriculturist a fair return, and to the farm laborer fair wages, who can doubt but in a few years the sparsely settled portions of that entire region will be covered with homes of comfort. Hither the surplus laborers in the crowded cities and towns of the East will find their way, and a happy deliverance from deprivation and want will await their coming.

But to come back to our present condition—I propose to show what effect the proposed canal will have on other portions of our country, but more especially on the East, with which naturally our traffic relations are most extensive and direct. Now, it must be conceded that any saving in freights on the cereals and other products of the West consumed in the East must be shared by both producer and consumer, and this will be especially the case in the "good time coming," when we shall more nearly consume what we produce, and produce what we consume at home. The amount of grain distributed from the trade centers of the East for consumption (see Nimmo's Report on Internal Commerce of the United States, 1880, page 57) shows the cereal receipts in bushels and exports from the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia as follows:

	Receipts.	Exports.
Boston	37,091,004	18,197,240
New York	164,942,425	132,656,499
Philadelphia	49,102,688	31,509,465

Subtracting the exports from the receipts of each of these cities, the balance will show what was retained in each for home consumption, as follows, namely: Omitting small fractions, Boston retained 19,000,000 bushels, New York retained 32,000,000 bushels, and Philadelphia retained 17,500,000 bushels, all for consumption. Besides this, as every business man knows, shipments of grain from the West to Pittsfield, Springfield, Worcester, Lowell, Lawrence, and numerous other cities and towns in Massachusetts do not go to Boston at all, but directly to those cities and towns.

Neither does the grain from the West shipped to the many cities and towns west of New York city go the city of New York, but directly to those cities and towns. There is no extravagance, therefore, in the supposition that the amount of grain from the West consumed in Massachusetts west of Boston, and in New York west of the city of New York, equals the quantity retained for home consumption in those cities and their immediate neighborhoods respectively.

This granted, and we have a grand total of grain consumed in the cities of Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, and in the New England States, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, amounting to 137,000,000 of bushels annually. How much of the freight saving accrues to the consumer I will not undertake to determine, but conceding that it is 1 cent per bushel, it is more than sufficient to pay annual interest at 10 per cent. on the entire cost of the improvement provided for in this bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are other reasons why the manufacturing and commercial East should take a deep interest in this great enterprise. The people of the West are the customers of the East. They buy their manufactured articles, and whatever adds to the prosperity of the people of the West increases their ability to purchase from the East; and whatever reduces the cost of shipment, not only enlarges the market, but adds to the profit of the manufacturer.

In view of these facts so well known to business men is it surprising that the National Board of Trade, the New York Produce Exchange, the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, the Buffalo Board of Trade, and numerous other boards of trade and conventions in various parts of the country, and that the Legislatures of New York, Illinois, and Iowa should have so unanimously passed resolutions calling upon Congress to make the necessary appropriations for the construction of this much needed improvement?

Before entering upon another branch of this discussion allusion should be made to the fact that with this improvement barges towed by steam will transport such heavy articles from New Orleans and the entire South to Chicago as may seek market there, and in turn take back the products of the North—a traffic that will assume an importance undreamed of now as soon as with enlightened statemanship we reach out and secure a proper commercial alliance with our South American republican neighbors.

Mr. Speaker, I come now to the effect of cheap transit on our FOREIGN COMMERCE.

This brings us to the contemplation of a commercial fact that never before existed, namely: Wheat produced by American farmers competing for a market with wheat raised in India.

Wheat sown and harvested in fields 12,000 miles from each other are to-day being sold side by side in the markets of Central Europe, and mostly Great Britain. The significance of the stupendous fact more fully appears when we examine the agencies that have produced it, and the lesson that it teaches.

The Mississippi Valley we know; the depth and richness of its soil, its climate, its beautiful prairies where our hardy pioneers have made themselves homes, erected churches and school-houses—with cities and towns already built up and building—a population called "rowdyish" sometimes, but as intelligent, industrious, enterprising, and brave as ever gave character to any country on which the sun of heaven shines.

Labor-saving implements have enabled them to conquer in part the drudgery of farming. The gang-plow, the seeder, the harvester, and the thrashing-machine move through their fields in obedience to the intelligence that guides them. Mr. Speaker, not elsewhere on earth is there to be seen the equal of the farm laborers of the great Northwest.

But, sir, they are raising wheat for the European market, and who are their competitors? They are the lowest caste or outcasts of India; men whose religion dooms them to remain the hopeless victims of a degraded caste. For clothing a strip of cotton about their loins and another about their brows is the one unchanging costume. The outfit of one of these competing wheat producers consists of—

One pair of bullocks, cost	$12 00
One plow	40
One yoke	15
One leveler	30
One weeder	06
One sickle	06
One winnowing scoop	03
One water lifter	50
Total cost of outfit	13 50

Thus equipped he pays a rental of $3.60 per acre for the land to till. He manures his field, and with his rude plow scratches a shallow furrow, a process which he repeats not less than twenty times before the wheat is sown. The village priest is consulted as to the time the sowing is to begin. Seeding is done by hand-dropping in the furrows. The sprouting crop is often weeded by hand and is watered again and again in the same way. When the harvest is ripe, the reaper with his 6-cent sickle, sitting upon his haunches, cuts a gathered handful at each stroke and lays it in a gavel by his side, and in this way the patient harvester finishes one-twelfth of an acre each working day. The thrashing-floor is a spot of hard ground with a center stake, to which a group of bullocks in line are attached by ropes, and around this stake they tramp until the straw is flattened and the thrashing is done. Then comes the winnower with his scoop, that costs 7 cents, and finishes the work.

Mr. Speaker, is it possible that while we have a soil so rich that if transported to these fields in India it would bring a high price as manure, and with every agricultural implement brought to the highest perfection of labor-saving, it is yet a question whether we can maintain our hold on the wheat markets of Great Britain?

It is even so, and the reasons for it should now command our serious attention.

The British Government, guided by a statesmanship that does it honor—a statesmanship worthy of a nation that aspires to lead the world in commercial greatness—has had the courage to act upon the conviction that the operators in her mines and factories must be fed at the lowest possible cost.

British statesmanship has secured the control of the Suez Canal; it has improved the rivers and harbors of India, and with a lavish hand dug canals which are used both for irrigation and transportation; and has by subsidizing railways and controlling rates and by government building of railways brought the distant wheat-fields of India within profitable reach of Calcutta, Bombay, and Kurrachee.

The following statement of the amount expended by the British Government in aid of inland transportation in India is taken from the administration report on the railways in India for 1884–85, made to the British Parliament.

SUMMARY.

The total extent of railways open for traffic in India on the 31st of March, 1885, is 12,004 miles, of which 6,906 miles are in the hands of companies, 4,434 miles are state lines, either imperial or provincial, and 664 miles belong to native states.

The total capital outlay on the railways and connected steamer services amounted on the 31st of December, 1884, to £155,450,365, of which £105,319,144 have been expended by guaranteed companies inclusive of the cost of the East India Railway.

Total expenditure on canals used for irrigation and navigation, from 1873 to 1883, a period of ten years, amounted to £11,333,964.

Thus we find that the total amount expended by the British Government in India for canals for irrigation and transportation, for railways and connected steamer service, either directly in building, or by guarantees to companies, up to 1884, is over $800,000,000.

The total expenditure of the United States, from the beginning of the Government, for river and harbor improvements, to June 30, 1882, was less than $125,000,000. What a contrast! Great Britain providing for an expenditure of $800,000,000 in India alone to develop the resources of one of her dependencies, while we in a century have only expended one hundred and twenty-five millions on our rivers, harbors, and canals.

Sir Lord Salisbury, in speaking of the United States and Great Britain, declared:

We are rivals—rivals politically, rivals commercially. We aspire to the same position; we both aspire to the government of the seas. We are both manufacturing people, and in every port, as well as in every court, we are rivals to each other.

Mr. Speaker, shall we hesitate to accept of the position thus authoritatively assigned us? Shall we not rather with eagerness enter into a contest with the only country on the globe that can cope with the great Republic in a rivalry which embraces every object so aptly stated by the noble lord? Sir, there are some who propose that we shall ignobly refuse to assert our right to lead the nations of the earth in the grand march toward that true greatness which protects and defends without hesitation the weak and the strong alike, and which, so far as a government can, will secure life, liberty, and happiness to all. There are some who insist that in respect to supremacy in manufactures and commerce we must not strive to win, and that the best that can be done for our agriculturists is to suffer them to become the unaided competitors of the wheat-growers of India for the markets of Europe.

Our great rival expends immense sums to secure cheap transit for cereals produced by her subjects, and we refuse to aid our own Western farmers—not subjects, but fellow-sovereigns. Look now at the result of our folly. Why, sir, that we are steadily losing our market for cereals can not be denied. In 1880, our exports of wheat and corn amounted to $288,000,000, and decreased from year to year until in 1885 the shipments had fallen to $162,000,000, a loss of $126,000,000 in five years. During the same period the increase of exports of wheat from India have been most remarkable.

In 1872 the first experimental cargo came to Liverpool from India. In 1875 she sent only 1,500,000 bushels; in 1882, 37,000,000, and last year India shipped to England over 60,000,000 bushels.

It is profitable, Mr. Speaker, to note here the effect of this British policy in India on our monetary system and our financial condition. Sir, recent discussions in this House have made so prominent the danger to which a loss of gold would expose every interest in the land that a reference to it is sufficient here in this connection, and I desire to call attention to the fact that in 1880, the year that India wheat began to compete with American in Europe, our exports of cereals amounted to $288,000,000 in value, which was 35 per cent. of our entire exports for that year. Now observe our loss year by year until in 1885, when the value of cereals exported by our people was reduced to $126,000,000, or 17 per cent. of the entire export trade of 1884 (exclusive of coin and bullion).

In this connection I call attention to the exports of coin and bullion:

1880	$9,347,893
1881	14,226,944
1882	43,480,271
1883	21,623,181
1884	50,925,635

coin and bullion exported in the same years that our exports of cereals fell off one hundred and twenty-six millions.

Mr. Speaker, the proposition is a plain one. We still buy largely from abroad; how shall we pay? If we send our great staples to market we keep our gold; if we can not do this, the gold must go. The financial doctors disagree as to whether silver will drive gold from us, but practical men will let doctrinaires dispute about that, for they know from long experience that neither silver nor gold will leave the country to any harmful extent if we send to foreign markets more in value of the great staples we produce than we buy from abroad.

What, then, is duty? Sir, it is as plain as the proposition. We should henceforward devote the energies of the nation to the regulation of internal commerce by cheapening transportation, so that the producers of our staples can obtain living prices for their products and yet successfully compete with the cheaper labor of other countries. Let no man tell us that this can not be done. It must be done; and that, too, without laying burdens on the back of labor. It is the mission of our civilization to do this very work, and do it well. It was for this that the great Republic came to be. For this, through costly, bloody war we have wiped out chattel slavery, and established forever the integrity of the Union. Impelled by a force as silent as it is resistless we are even now brought face to face with the question.

Next to the freedom of the negro as a person bound to labor, is the emancipation of labor itself. It is ours to meet this question and to invite to its solution the laborer himself; to reverse the history of the past, which through weary centuries has made money king, and labor its tool.

With a country as rich in material resources and as vast in extent as ours, with a population as energetic and enterprising, we think, as any other, our expenditures for internal improvements have fallen far below the demands of a wise economy. True, there has been a remarkable interruption of our energies and of our attention to these improvements. An immense debt had to be incurred to preserve the integrity of the nation, and now, after a quarter of a century has been employed to repair as far as possible the terrible waste which has come to all sections, we find ourselves confronted with questions pertaining to progress and peace. Mr. Speaker, I am rejoiced to witness on all sides and from all sections a disposition to take up the questions pertaining to internal commerce, and especially the establishment and maintenance of our water ways.

Investigation will show, I am sure, that we are not only able to carry forward these enterprises on a scale commensurate with our present and future needs, but that we can not afford to delay. We should begin now the interrupted work. There is much to do, but this great nation can do it all. Year by year these improvements can be carried forward and the burden will scarce be felt. Why, Mr. Speaker, we know not the possibilities of sixty million of people in time of peace. Let all who want to labor have an opportunity to do so at fair wages, so that all this vast army of workingmen may have the means to supply the wants of themselves and of their dependent families, and you will at once set in motion the wheels of industry throughout the land.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this question is one of most serious import. It will be a shame and a disgrace to a government like ours, in a country like this, to permit the existing state of things to continue.

I hold in my hand a petition from an honorable body of laboring men in my district, an organization as intelligent and law-abiding as can be found elsewhere, men who are as true patriots as ever loved a country, many of whom have shown their devotion by the personal sacrifices they have made as soldiers in the ranks. These men ask in language so respectful and with statements so forcible for relief, that I will incorporate their own language into my remarks:

Resolved, That in time of depression the General Government should make liberal appropriations of the surplus revenue for the construction of works of internal improvement and of national importance, and redistribute among the people, in the form of wages, funds hoarded in the vaults of the Treasury that have been taken from the people by taxation on what they eat and on what they wear.

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the plan for the construction of the Hennepin Canal by the General Government as an undertaking of national importance and necessity, an improvement that will not only benefit thousands of needy men pending the construction, but one that will furnish employment for all time to come to thousands engaged in a vast system of internal water traffic between New Orleans, Saint Paul, and New York; that will present an insurmountable check to the greed of monopolies; that will give cheaper bread to the East and cheaper goods to the West; that will stimulate commerce, industry, and agriculture everywhere in this great Republic.

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress are hereby urged to consider this and like projects, questions of paramount and immediate importance, and to act in accordance with the spirit of these resolutions.

This plea comes from the real wealth producers. They do not ask that a dollar shall be ruthlessly taken away from any man; they only ask for the privilege to produce more wealth in a form that, like the proposed Hennepin Canal, shall be a national blessing for all time. Their demands are just, and their ideas of true political economy are sound. Sir, on every grave question of public concern the instincts of the American people are always right.

Let us pass this bill and the great work will thereby be made sure. By it we shall connect the two grandest inland water ways of the world into one system. We shall thereby add untold millions to the value of the agricultural lands of the Mississippi Valley and to the coal lands of Pennsylvania. We shall foster and strengthen the manufacturing towns of New England and New Jersey, and by increasing our foreign shipments benefit our Atlantic seaports and add to the financial strength of the country by aiding to maintain our foreign commerce; and more than that, when the time comes, if it shall, when we produce no surplus cereals for foreign markets, this water line will continue then as before to cheapen breadstuffs and provisions to the consumers of our manufacturing towns of the East.

Build this canal and provide for the enlargement of the Erie Canal, and you will have done something, at least, to restrain the influence of railway monopoly and combination. Build it, and you will supply the missing link in the great line of navigable waters from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico. Build this canal, and you will not violate the letter of the Constitution, but, on the contrary, will fulfill the spirit of the preamble to that instrument which interprets one of its great objects to promote the general welfare of the people.

Mr. Speaker, there be some I know who still hold to the old idea that each State should build all public improvements intended for water ways within its own borders—a proposition which must carry with it an imputation that the State of Illinois, in which the Hennepin Canal is located, is not willing to do her duty as one of the States of the Union. Why, sir, Illinois never yet has asked to be excused from doing all that she should do to promote the interests of her own people or of the people of the United States. In this very bill she asks the Government to accept as a free gift 96 miles of canal, costing over six and one-half millions of dollars, in order to assist in securing cheap transportation for the people of the States east, west, and south of her own borders—a canal that has already earned above operating expenses nearly three millions of dollars.

I have already pointed out that the region most directly interested in this canal is the six States and one Territory lying west of Chicago, comprising the Upper Mississippi section.

Now that we may correctly decide whether or not the section described is fairly entitled to take from the public Treasury the amount required to build the Hennepin Canal, let us see how much these same States have put into this same Treasury for a period of ten years.

The following apportionment of the public revenues of the United States to the States and Territories named below, according to the population, from 1871 to 1880, is from a speech delivered by Hon. Thomas Turner, of Kentucky, to the Forty-sixth Congress:

Public revenues collected on importations of dutiable articles consumed in the following States for a period of ten years.

Illinois	$205,812,817 45
Iowa	96,754,019 03
Kansas	29,528,032 78
Minnesota	35,630,305 72
Missouri	139,480,241 12
Nebraska	9,966,364 84
Wisconsin	85,462,192 48
Dakota	782,616 69
Total	603,416,590 11

In regard to the foregoing table Mr. Turner says:

In ascertaining the amount of money paid into the Treasury by each State I do not proceed on the erroneous idea that Kentucky paid into the Treasury the tobacco and whisky tax, or that New York city paid into it the customs collected at that port, but that each State consumed tariff and internal-revenue articles in proportion to its population. I am aware that this assumption may not be exactly accurate, but it is the best possible approximate basis.

Sixty millions a year, then, is the amount which, according to population, the States named are entitled to have credit for as their contribution to the national Treasury. I do not admit, Mr. Speaker, that the dutiable goods consumed by the people of these States have cost the consumer more by the amount named than the same goods would have cost had there been no protection, for, as I understand it, the foreign manufacturer has contributed the largest share; but be that as it may, the credit fairly belongs to those States, and on every principle of justice and equity the national Legislature should appropriate the amount required by the provisions of the bill for the construction of a public work national in its character, of great importance to one-half of the States of this Union, and an injury to none.

In conclusion: The substance of the facts set forth in the report on the Hennepin Canal, and of the arguments which follow with irresistible logic therefrom, may be briefly summed up as follows:

1. Our aggregate cereal exports in 1880 amounted to $288,000,000.
2. Since 1880 we have lost more than 40 per cent. of our cereal exports by reason of competition in the great foreign markets.
3. Foreign markets are indispensable for our surplus products.
4. Nothing but the cheapest transport possible can enable us to compete with Russia, Australia, and India in those markets.
5. The value of every acre of wheat and corn producing land in the Mississippi Valley depends upon the cheapest possible transport to the seaboard.

6. The cheapest transport possible is admitted to be by water.

7. The Hennepin Canal is the missing link to furnish complete water navigation from Saint Paul to New York, a distance of 2,000 miles, utilizing about 600 miles of the Mississippi River in its course.

8. By building this canal we can regain and retain the great foreign markets for our cereals, and increase the magnitude of our exports.

9. By this extension of our water ways to the West the products of that region will reach the consumers of the East at reduced cost to the latter and increased profits to the former.

10. No public improvement proposed in this country has been so generally and so strongly commended and urged by Legislatures, internal-improvement conventions, boards of trade, and other commercial bodies, and eminent public men.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I yield now two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression that when this subject was before the House for consideration in Committee of the Whole a few days ago the question as to whether this proposition should remain in the bill or be stricken out was definitely settled. The friends of the river and harbor bill desired at that time to take the sense of the House as to whether this proposition should be retained in the bill or not. That question was submitted, a fair vote was taken, and when those who are opposing the policy of getting control of this canal discovered that there was a majority of this House in favor of this proposition they immediately changed their tactics and insisted that the subject should go into conference.

It was then agreed by the friends of the measure, recognizing as they did the importance of the subject and its value to the people of this country, that it might go into conference, and we then believed, and hope now, that the House would regard that action as an instruction to the committee which will be again ratified by this body.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the friends of this bill that if they expect to pass it through this House they must allow these lines to stand. If they strike that out, although the thermometer is bordering on the nineties, there will be frost in Washington before this bill passes. [Applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have not often in the twelve years, or nearly so, in which I have occupied a seat on this floor, troubled the House with many or with long speeches; and, of course, it is utterly impossible now for me, in the very few minutes I have in which to address the House, to enter into any extended argument on this proposition. But I beg the attention of the House to what I may have to say.

The Senate amendment, which it is proposed by this resolution to insist upon striking out of the river and harbor bill, embraces one of the most important improvements to the people of the Northwest contained in this bill. I assert here as a proposition which can not be successfully contradicted, that the lakes, connected as they are by the Erie Canal with the Atlantic seaboard, have for very many years controlled the freight rates on the commerce of the country, transported east and west, in at least the northern part of the United States, and that they have saved to the United States untold millions of dollars in the way of reducing freights and saving the cost of transportation to the people, both producers and consumers. I assert here that from 1868 down to 1884 the saving on freight charges on the Erie Canal for the transportation of wheat and other cereals, the products of the Northwest, has not been less than 6 cents on every bushel of grain transported in each and every year; and there have been saved annually to the people of this country by the cheap transportation, secured by lake and canal, many millions of dollars. So much for that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is this proposition? It is to extend the benefits of that cheap line of transportation from Chicago to Saint Paul at the head of navigation on the Mississippi River. It is to extend this advantage five or six hundred miles farther west into the heart of the great grain-growing region of this country. And I say here now that it is astonishing to me that people will support improvements in this bill which are of minor interest, when here is an improvement of great national importance, one of deep interest to millions of people in the Northwest, and gentlemen say it must be stricken out of this bill or they will not vote for it. But the people of that section have been demanding and will continue to demand this improvement, and I give notice here and now to the members of this House that like Banquo's ghost it will not down. [Applause.] It is in the interest of the people. It is for the benefit of the people. You spend millions to erect magnificent buildings for the public service. You spend millions to erect monuments to the fathers and distinguished men of our country and to our great benefactors. But this is a government of the people and we should legislate in the interest of the people, and to benefit them. When gentlemen say here on the floor of this House, not publicly, but quietly to those who are the friends of this canal, that "if you vote for this proposition you strike down the river and harbor bill," that is a game that can be played by more than one; and I want those who are the friends of cheap transportation for the people, who believe in legislating in the interest of the people, to stand together and make judicious appropriations for important public works, such as will prove a public benefit and promote the public welfare.

Here are 500 miles of the Mississippi River from Keokuk to Saint Paul that would be put in direct connection with the lakes at Chicago, a city now of seven hundred and fifty thousand people. And it is in the interest of New York; it is in the interest of New England; it is in the interest of Pennsylvania; it is in the interest of all the Northwest to make this connection. You do our manufacturing for us. You send us your iron, your coal, and the products of your manufactories; and we send you the products of our farms. We have a common interest.

This canal would make an east and west line of transportation. It would convert the Upper Mississippi River into an east and west line of commerce as well as a north and south line. I say to the friends of the Lower Mississippi River it does not divert, in my opinion, one ton of freight from that river. But I have here a statement, which I shall incorporate in my remarks, showing that while in 1875 and 1878 less than 200,000 tons of merchandise in each year reached Saint Louis from the North, in the same years the tonnage which moved east by rail across the Mississippi River above Saint Louis was, in 1875, 2,344,354 tons, and in 1878, 3,554,838 tons, to say nothing of the tonnage which goes west. This immense tonnage goes to Chicago, and why? To find cheap transportation which the lakes and the canal secure. Is it not in the interest of the people to make a cheap line of water transportation from Saint Paul to New York? As the Erie Canal has been so productive of good would it not be productive of more good to extend this line of cheap transportation a few hundred miles further west and on toward Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Minnesota, Dakota, and all the great grain fields of the West and Northwest and which States I have the statistics here to show produce a large percentage of all the wheat, corn, and rye that are produced in this country?

I say to the people of the city of New York you are deeply interested in cheap transportation and you must encourage it, if that city maintains its commercial importance. The commerce of the West has helped to enrich New York and to make it the great commercial city of the continent; and unless that city encourages these lines of cheap transportation her commercial growth and prosperity can not be maintained.

I repeat there is no question of greater importance to our prosperity than this question of transportation. We improve and sometimes properly improve rivers by simply removing overhanging trees, and snags, and digging out shoals, and so benefit a small amount of commerce. But can we refuse to do a great national work like this, that will benefit millions of people and millions of commerce? If so, we fall short of our duty, and exhibit narrow statesmanship. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. It is utterly impossible, Mr. Speaker, in five minutes to review this canal scheme, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] himself characterizes it, or to present anything like an elaborate argument against it. It has been so often discussed, however, in this House that that is unnecessary at this late day. I have sought this opportunity to intensify the expression of my opposition to this scheme, and also for the purpose of expressing my admiration of the earnestness and zeal with which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] and my friend from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] have supported and urged this scheme. In season and out of season these gentlemen have pressed this Hennepin Canal project upon the attention of Congress at every session since the beginning of the Forty-sixth Congress. And if you will take out the personal influence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] there are not to-day 25 votes upon this floor in favor of the scheme upon its merits. Every vote that it gets here to-day beyond 25 will be due to the personal exertions and personal influence of those two gentlemen.

The gentleman from Illinois says that this scheme will not down. Yes, it will down, if members of this House do their duty, and this will be the last time that it will come here from the Senate after the House has condemned it time and again as a rider upon the river and harbor bill. It has no place upon this bill under our rules; it is here now as an intruder. It comes as an amendment from the Senate in violation of the rules of the House, and its supporters hope to get it through in that way in the conference report. It will down to-day unless members of this House are willing to embark upon a series of appropriations not only for this but for every canal scheme that has been introduced into Congress in the past twenty-five years. And does it not come with a bad grace from the State of Illinois to ask that the Federal Government shall build this canal through half a dozen counties in that State when the people of Illinois have put the mark of their disapprobation upon it in the very constitution of the State, so that while that constitution exists not one dollar of the money of Illinois can ever be appropriated by the State Legislature to aid this Hennepin Canal scheme? Nevertheless, they seek to "unload" it upon the Government of the United States, and to make the tax-payers of the country pay for it. It is said that this is in the interest of the farmers. The farmers will pay this tax and the monopolists of Chicago will get whatever benefit there may be in the scheme. But, sir, I do not believe there is any benefit in it. I do not believe it has a single merit to recommend it to-day. If it had, the wide-awake monopolists and business men of Chicago would build it inside of six months. It is nothing in the world but an attempt to "unload" a local State scheme upon the Federal Government.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HATCH. With pleasure.

Mr. PLUMB. Is the gentleman aware that the canal, instead of having been a burden to the State of Illinois, has been a source of profit to the State thus far?

Mr. HATCH. Then why in the name of common sense and good business do you not go and build it yourselves? Take that provision out of your State constitution, and go on and build the canal.

Mr. NEECE. If the gentleman will permit me to answer that question, it is because your State, and the State of Iowa, and the State of Michigan, and all the Northwest, have as much interest in it as Illinois.

Mr. HATCH. Oh, we have no interest in it, and we do not ask for any.

Mr. NEECE. We improve the Mississippi River for you; we build you Government buildings in your towns, and yet you stand up here and oppose this work which is for the benefit of the commerce of the West.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; and you stood here and obstructed the appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi River in behalf of this scheme. Missouri and Iowa and all the Northwest that understand the merits of this proposition are opposed to it, of course.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. The Secretary of War has recommended the appropriation of about $42,000,000 to carry on river and harbor improvements this year. There has never been a Congress assembled bold enough to appropriate twenty millions in one year for those purposes. Only a small proportion of the amount that is actually required for river and harbor improvements can be appropriated in any one year, and therefore it seems to me that the inauguration of new canal schemes to draw off a portion of the money that can be allowed for the improvement of rivers and harbors is the beginning of the death-knell of that kind of work.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If the gentleman will permit me, the estimates in the book I hold in my hand are forty-two millions, but the summary in the Book of Estimates reduces the amount to ten and a half millions.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I was going by the Book of Estimates; but whether the estimates be one thing or another the measures which have already been undertaken by Congress in the way of river and harbor improvements can not be carried out for $250,000,000. The result is that you have to appropriate dribbling amounts for improvements, instead of appropriating sufficient sums to prevent that waste and destruction which with partial appropriations inevitably result from delay. Shall we aggravate that state of affairs, or shall we struggle to mend it? That is the question for us to determine here to-day; and the man who votes for the inauguration of new canal schemes is only putting a stumbling-block in the way of legitimate river and harbor improvements. This proposition for the Hennepin Canal does not belong on this bill. It is a different kind of work. It has always been so held. The rules provide a different committee for the consideration of such questions. This proposition has been saddled upon the bill by the Senate; and the question is whether we shall let the Senate ride this bill to death.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who are denominated by some as "old fogies," who believe that Congress has no power to act in any case unless that power is derived from constitutional grant. Not only is there no power in the terms of the Constitution for this sort of legislation and appropriation, but in the history of the convention which framed that instrument there is an express negative, showing clearly that this power was purposely withheld by the convention. Dr. Franklin, as appears in Mr. Madison's record of the debates, moved to add, after the words "post-roads," in Article I, section 8, the power to provide for cutting canals where deemed necessary:

Mr. Wilson seconded the motion.

Mr. Sherman objected. The expense in such cases will fall on the United States, and the benefit accrue to the places where the canals may be cut.

Mr. WILSON. Instead of being an expense to the United States they may be made a source of revenue.

Mr. Madison suggested an enlargement of the motion into a power to grant charters of incorporation where the interests of the United States might require and the legislative provisions of individual States may be incompetent. His primary object was, however, to secure an easy communication between the States, which the free intercourse now to be opened seemed to call for. The political obstacles being removed, a removal of the natural difficulties as far as possible ought to follow.

Mr. Randolph seconded the proposition.

The motion being modified so as to admit a distinct question specifying and limiting the case of canals, the vote was taken and resulted—

Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Georgia, 3—yea; Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, no—8.

Thus it is shown conclusively that the convention refused to incorporate into the Constitution any such power on the part of Congress as is now proposed we shall exercise. Some of those in this House—Democrats among them, I am sorry to say—who find with remarkable facility some clause in the Constitution under which to claim power to do anything which cupidity or demagogy deems expedient, may try to derive this power from that clause of the Constitution which gives to Congress the right to regulate commerce between the States. If such power resides therein, Congress can cut canals, construct artificial harbors, build railroads, and create as well as regulate commerce. In short, can do anything, and there is no limit to its power.

Sir, in receiving my political education, such as it is, I learned that the doctrine of the Democratic party was that this is a government of enumerated and limited powers, and that all powers which were not by the Constitution granted to this Federal Government were reserved to the States or the people; and an attempt to exercise any powers not granted but reserved was usurpation and diametrically opposed to the principles of American democracy.

Mr. Speaker, there is an old Roman adage that times change and we change with them, but principles never change but live on forever. No power is enumerated in the Constitution to cut canals. Is it possible that the patriots who framed that instrument could have been such a lot of dolts, such dunderheaded asses as to have left or intended to have left in the Constitution an implied power to cut canals when they utterly refused to place within it the express power to do so?

Why, sir, it is much more respectable and manly and far more creditable to the intelligence of those who advocate this and similar measures to boldly stand on the damnable heresy of the decision of the Supreme Court in the lost Legal-tender case, namely, that Congress has power to do whatsoever it is not prohibited by the Constitution from doing. They can not well refer it to the general-welfare clause, because the canal is not beneficial to the entire people but only to those in close proximity to the proposed work. The framers of the Constitution wisely withheld from Congress this power. One State has as much right as another to have a canal, which is but an artificial river cut through it at the expense of the Federal Treasury.

The people of each State have contributed the money to be appropriated. That one has or may have a greater amount of commerce to float than the other has no effect upon their respective rights to the benefaction. They are the same in principle, and one State is as much entitled to the benefit as the other. The difference is only in degree. If Congress is going to embark in this business of cutting canals why not now provide for one across the Florida Isthmus? It would be more important and useful to commerce than the Hennepin.

If Congress is to embark in the business, why not now and at once make an appropriation for a canal to connect the waters of the Tennessee River with the Gulf of Mexico by the way of Mobile, passing through the vast and as yet undeveloped wealth of coal and iron for hundreds of miles in Alabama, which when utilized will produce hundreds of millions of dollars—many, many times more than the canal would cost; more than double all the wealth which the proposed Hennepin Canal could produce even on the most extravagant estimates of the wildest and most zealous promoters of that scheme?

I could mention many others equally feasible and gigantic. I warn gentlemen here and now to think twice before they vote once to embark the Government in this unconstitutional business. Southern men, with few exceptions, have ever been the supporters and defenders of the Constitution; but whenever your clamors and combinations overcome their opposition to this kind of appropriation, as I hope they never may, and they enter into the grab-game, remember that the solid South will have but few trades and but limited combinations to make in order to vote more money out of the Treasury for internal improvements in the Southern States than twice your present high rates of taxation will put into it. I trust that there never may be occasion for such a state of affairs.

To construe the Constitution by precedents proves nothing beyond the number of times it has been violated. They are the sappers and miners in the work of its destruction. Nowhere on earth is precedent, right or wrong, but mostly wrong, so potential as in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we are told by the advocates of the Hennepin Canal scheme that if the United States would but accept of the Illinois Canal upon the condition of its enlargement and cutting the Hennepin to connect it with the Mississippi River, as proposed by the State of Illinois, there would, in the language of Col. Mulberry Sellers, be "millions in it." I have no doubt of it. There would at least be the ten millions in it which the work would cost the Government. But the millions to come out of it would be no nearer realization than those of that hopeful individual for the vast fortune he expected to obtain by the sale of his eye-water.

The total number of canals which have been constructed within the United States is one hundred and four, with an aggregate length of 4,468½ miles at a total cost of construction of $214,041,802. Of these fifty-two have been abandoned. The gross income of all the canals operated in the year 1880 was $4,538,620. The gross expenditures for the same period were $2,954,156. The net income for the same time was $1,584,464. The fifty-two abandoned canals aggregate a total length of 1,953½ miles, and cost $44,013,166 to construct them.

The net income of the operating canals is shown to have been for the year 1880 less than three-quarters of 1 per cent., only about seventy one-hundredths of 1 per cent. upon the money invested. I publish below some statistical statements which illustrate what I say in this connection. Now, if this Hennepin Canal scheme is a good one and would prove a paying investment, why does not the great and prosperous State of Illinois take hold of it and build it?

Why does not the great and growing city of Chicago, which is situated immediately on the proposed line, raise the money and cut the canal? It is entirely within that State. If the Illinois Canal is a paying institution, as is asserted here, why did the voters of the State poll such a tremendous majority—nearly all the votes being one way—to give it to the United States? Whence comes such liberality? It seems to me like the story of the dog-skin, which the owner could not sell nor give away, and finally determined to lose it. I hope the United States will never be committed to such a scheme as cutting canals or buying those already constructed.

OPERATING CANALS.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIS resumed the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has four minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. I accept the judgment of the friends of the Hennepin Canal in this Congress, and it has no abler or better friends anywhere; and that judgment is and was that the Hennepin Canal should stand in a separate bill, be voted on as a separate proposition, and not incorporated in a river and harbor bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. WILLIS. I have not time.

Mr. Speaker, there are knocking at the door of this House——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I desire to correct the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIS. Twenty other propositions——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman should not misstate the position of the friends of the Hennepin Canal, and then deny an opportunity for correction. The gentleman does not correctly state the views of the friends of the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. WILLIS. If my friend will restrain his impetuosity I will go on. I can not be drawn off by these interruptions.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then state the facts.

Mr. WILLIS. I state, Mr. Speaker, that the Hennepin Canal proposition was introduced into this House, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported by that committee, and is to-day on your Calendar. There are other canal schemes—and I use the word in no offensive sense. There is the project for a great canal across the Florida isthmus, which will cost $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. There is the Chesapeake and Ohio, and there are others. These in the aggregate would amount to about $150,000,000. Can you construct them upon a river and harbor bill? Can you construct the Hennepin Canal upon a river and harbor bill? The amount proposed to be appropriated for that project in this bill is $300,000. It would require a quarter of a century, by the showing of the friends of the enterprise, putting the lowest estimate upon the cost of this improvement, to complete it by appropriations on a river and harbor bill. Do you want to wait a quarter of a century for the completion of this work? Bring in your separate bill and test the sense of the majority of this House. If it passes, then you have a practicable scheme. But the work can not be completed by appropriations on a river and harbor bill. By the estimates of the engineers $42,000,000 could be profitably expended during the present year on legitimate and important works of river and harbor improvement. We have not been able to appropriate more than one-third of that amount. Now, if you put these canals on this bill we shall not be able to appropriate one-tenth of what the engineers estimate from year to year can be profitably expended on the great rivers and harbors of the country.

I appeal to the friends of the Hennepin Canal, I appeal beyond them to the friends of rivers and harbors, not to ingraft upon this bill this proposition, which may be—and I say it after a calm review of the situation—destructive to the whole bill. I appeal to them to stay their hands for the present, and let us bring fairly before the House this bill upon which there is no objectionable item. Let the friends of the Hennepin Canal take from the Calendar their proposition, for which they have an order; let them in proper time call up their bill. I will vote to give it consideration at any time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, rose.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the House will allow the gentleman to be heard.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. The gentleman from Kentucky certainly does not fairly state the position of the friends of the Hennepin Canal. We have tried twice to get the Hennepin Canal.

Mr. WILLIS. I said in this Congress.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. We did not at this time, because we knew the point of order would be made. It is now in a position where the point of order can not be made. The Senate have twice incorporated it in the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. NEECE. And I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that while I represent a district running for 150 miles along the Mississippi River, and while I am in favor of the Mississippi River [cries of "Order!" "Vote!"] my constituents have more interest in the construction of the Hennepin Canal than they have in the improvement of the Mississippi River. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIS. I have no doubt of it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 111, noes 98.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 139, nays 112, not voting 71; as follows:

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague [Mr. THROCKMORTON], who is absent from the House on account of sickness, is paired with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WADSWORTH]. He is also absent by leave of the House. If present, he would vote in the affirmative on the adoption of this resolution.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. RANNEY.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.

Mr. BARKSDALE with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. CASWELL.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. O'DONNELL.

Mr. RIGGS with Mr. HAYNES.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. LOUTTIT.

Mr. WELLBORN with Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. GLASS with Mr. SWINBURNE.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. GALLINGER.

For this day:

Mr. KING with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. MORROW.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. GOFF.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Is it too late to move to reconsider the vote just taken?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not vote with the majority side, and under the rules of the House can not make the motion to reconsider.

Mr. OWEN. My attention is called to the fact that I am announced as paired with Mr. SPRIGGS. That is a mistake. Who is the pair signed by?

The SPEAKER. It is signed by Mr. PRICE.

Mr. OWEN. I have voted and will allow my vote to stand.

STURGEON BAY AND LAKE MICHIGAN SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. WILLIS. I submit the following resolution, on which I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the conferees of the House on the river and harbor bill, when next appointed, be instructed to insist on striking out the amendment of the Senate making appropriations for the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes for and fifteen minutes against the adoption of the resolution. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIS. I have no desire myself to take up the time of the House in any discussion, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] desires to be heard, and I will yield the floor to him.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope this amendment will be allowed to remain in the bill. It is a disgrace the navigation of the great lakes is not free, especially when it can be procured for the paltry sum of $112,000, or even much less. I wish gentleman of the House to understand that while it has been charged there is a job in this amendment, there is no foundation for any such allegation. There is no job in this amendment, but, on the contrary, the purchase of this Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal is demanded by the commerce of the lakes. The canal company has not asked for it. The canal company will not receive a cent more than the canal cost it. I know from actual knowledge this canal was built as cheaply as it was possible to be built, and that it was built far more cheaply than the Government could build it.

This canal is 114 miles in length, and vessels drawing 14 feet of water can pass through it with ease. Lines of barges laden with lumber, half a mile in length, can pass from the lakes into the canal and through the canal without uncoupling—barges containing over 3,000,000 feet of lumber. If this canal is purchased and the navigation made free 500,000,000 feet of lumber annually will pass through it.

A line of steamers runs upon it to-day. The entire commerce from Chicago to Green Bay and from Green Bay to Chicago and other lake ports has to pass through this canal in order to avoid a dangerous passage. This canal saves to the navigation of the lakes 160 miles, which are so dangerous that the point of this peninsula around which it has to pass is called by navigators Death's Door. For a paltry sum you can make this navigation free. You will allow everybody, every vessel from Chicago or from Green Bay to pass through the canal and thus save 160 miles. I sincerely trust this Senate amendment will be allowed to remain in the bill. My colleague [Mr. HUDD] is perhaps better posted in regard to its bearing on navigation, and I will yield my time to him.

Mr. HUDD. Mr. Speaker, every case that comes for consideration before a legislative body, as well as before a court of justice, should be governed by the circumstances surrounding that particular case. Here we have not a canal really, not an internal work of improvement that somebody's constitutional scruples may be opposed to acquiring on the part of the Government, but here is something in the direct interest of commerce and for the protection of the great harbors of our inland lakes.

This Sturgeon Bay Canal, so called, is what? It is only an opening or an arm of Sturgeon Bay, which is an indenture on the great Lake Michigan, which arm in the process of time has been filled up by sand, but which now by the operations of this canal company has been cleared out and a continuous harbor made into Lake Michigan.

As my colleague has already told you, there is a channel provided through which millions upon millions of feet of lumber are shipped every year; all of the great commerce between Chicago and Green Bay, both ways, goes through this canal, as well as all the commerce in connection with the many miles of water and scores of lumber mills of the Menomonee, Peshtigo, Oconto, and Pensaukee Rivers in Wisconsin and Michigan, which finds an entrance into the lake at that point.

My colleague is mistaken in one thing when he says, "I think that it might cost the Government to make this a free canal $112,000." That is a mistake, and I will explain the conditions as to that part of the question.

This canal, or this scooping out and reopening of this old channel, was made by a corporation, which received a grant through the State of Wisconsin of 200,000 acres of the United States public lands for that purpose. They have used that grant in constructing this canal. They claim that in addition to the grant they have expended some thousands of dollars in excess of the amount derived from it. What amount this is we do not know positively. I am passably well informed, however, from my acquaintance with the matter, that the excess which the corporation paid over and above the grant will not exceed $35,000 or $40,000, and we have provided that the Secretary of War shall investigate the matter, and if there is an honest investigation—and we all believe and must believe that the War Department will have an honest investigation—we shall obtain the needed channel for our commerce—for the free commerce of the Northwest—at a cost of probably not exceeding thirty-five or forty thousand dollars.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I have had the honor in the State Legislature of Wisconsin for three sessions in the last six years to introduce and send to this body a memorial from the great State of Wisconsin asking the passage of this act. It is not the request of the canal company; it is not somebody who is presenting a scheme here that has a job back of it; but the people of Wisconsin, interested in the great commerce of the lakes, who petition to have this made a free canal.

I do not care to detain the House longer in this matter. I think I have stated the question, and it seems to me that the acquisition of this property by the Government will benefit the people of that State (Wisconsin) and of all the lake regions in its commerce.

Mr. PAYSON. What was the cost of this improvement?

Mr. HUDD. It is variously stated to be somewhere about a half a million of dollars. All of this has been paid for by the land grant except perhaps from $35,000 to $40,000, and the company are willing to surrender it back to the General Government if that amount which they have paid in excess of the value of the grant be refunded.

Let me state also that this Congress has appropriated considerable sums of money already for the purpose of constructing a harbor of refuge immediately adjacent to this canal and a part of it. Now, will we, by the action of this House, fritter away that appropriation for making provision for something which is absolutely necessary and destroy a harbor of refuge for the mariner in case of storms? Will you oblige them to be forced to take a course across this point, which is not improperly called Death's Door, on account of the dangerous character of the navigation there? I repeat, therefore, that it is in the interest of commerce as well as of humanity to let this remain and be a harbor for those people.

I will yield back the remainder of the time to my colleague.

Mr. GUENTHER. In order that the House may fully know what they are voting on, I ask that the Senate amendment be read.

The SPEAKER. It can be read in the time of the gentleman.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

For making free of toll to commerce the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal, connecting the waters of Green Bay with Lake Michigan, in the State of Wisconsin, $112,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the Secretary of War shall have caused an examination to be made by a board of three United States engineers into the importance and value to commerce and navigation of the free use of said ship-canal, and unless the report of said board shall be in favor of making said canal free to commerce: And provided further, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the Secretary of War shall be satisfied, upon investigation, as to the actual cost of said canal to said company; and then only so much of said sum shall be expended as the said Secretary of War shall be satisfied is necessary to reimburse the said company for advances and expenses actually made and incurred in constructing said canal, and in maintaining the same, over and above the net proceeds of the lands granted by Congress to aid in constructing said canal, and over and above the tolls received therefrom, with interest, as provided by the act of Congress making said grant, approved April 10, 1866; and none of said moneys shall be expended upon a full and absolute conveyance to the United States of said ship-canal, harbor, easements, rights of way, piers, docks, and appurtenances of every name and nature pertaining to said work, free and clear of all liens and incumbrances.

Mr. GUENTHER. I want to emphasize again that this is not a company which asks this appropriation, but the commerce of the great lake demands it. The canal is completed, and nothing is to be done by the Government in that respect. It is moreover a harbor of refuge. There is a life-saving station and light-house there, and there is not another within 75 miles of the canal. I sincerely trust the amendment, in the interest of the great commerce of the lakes, will remain as passed by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire in three minutes to endeavor to state the reasons why this appropriation should not be increased upon a river and harbor bill. Years ago certain parties applied to the United States Government to secure a grant of 200,000 acres of land—rich, fine land—the object of which grant was to construct this identical canal.

A company was soon found who undertook to use this great land grant—a company composed, as I am informed, in large part of the owners of these immense pine forests and of the copper mines in that vicinity.

Mr. GUENTHER. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? That has nothing to do with the case.

Mr. WILLIS. I think I can show it has to do with the case.

Mr. GUENTHER. The Secretary of War is going to ascertain what the cost was and therefrom deduct the value of the lands and everything.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say in 1882 that company completed the canal. The charter required it should make a report to the State of Wisconsin. Up to the present time, I am informed, no such report has been made.

Mr. GUENTHER. It has been made. The State authorities inspected the canal.

Mr. WILLIS. When was the report made?

Mr. GUENTHER. About six years ago. I was one of the State officers who examined and inspected the canal in compliance with the law.

Mr. WILLIS. I repeat what I stated. In 1882, immediately after the completion of this work, they came to Congress with a resolution looking to the purchase of this canal. It had not been completed more than six months when Congress, the same Congress that had given this land grant, was applied to by a resolution, whether in behalf of the canal company I care not, to find out how much it would cost to get back from the company this work which had been improved by its own grant. At that time, I state again, and up to the time this investigation was made, no report to the State had ever been made.

Mr. GUENTHER. There has been a report.

Mr. WILLIS. Since then. Now I state upon the report of the officers themselves it appeared that this canal had not only been constructed, but there were very reasonable fees in the shape of presidents' salaries and directors' fees and negotiation fees; and when all these were put together and added to the cost of the construction of the canal it did not reach the value of this 200,000 acres by $25,000.

Now, we are called upon without investigation of these facts, without time to look into them, to throw this into a conference report on a river and harbor bill in the hurly-burly of the closing hours of the session. I do not say the proposition is wanting in merit, but it is one which ought to be diligently and properly inquired into before action is taken.

Mr. GUENTHER. That will be done.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, let it wait till that is done. The gentleman says a commission has been appointed. Why this haste? I respectfully ask a vote upon the resolution striking this out of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 95, noes 41.

Mr. HUDD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 18 members voting therefor.

Mr. GUENTHER. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Before the count was completed,

Mr. GUENTHER (one of the tellers) said: I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to offer a resolution of instruction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the situation. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments and requests a further conference. The Chair ruled the other morning that that motion had priority over the resolution to instruct; and the Chair also ruled at the same time that a resolution to instruct the conferees was not in order after the Chair had actually appointed the managers, as was the case when the gentleman from Kentucky moved an instruction at that time. But the Chair thinks even if the present motion of the gentleman from Kentucky prevails, at any time before the Chair actually appoints the conferees, which takes the matter away from the House, resolutions of instruction are in order, and the Chair will entertain them after this motion is disposed of.

There has been one instance in the House where a resolution of instruction was offered and entertained while the motion to insist and for the appointment of conferees was pending; but the question of order was not then made. At any rate, there is an interim after the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has been disposed of when instructions are in order under the practice of the House. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now I offer the instruction which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the conferees of the House, when appointed, be instructed to insist upon striking out the amendment of the Senate commencing with line 1401 and ending with line 1465 providing for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River.

Mr. DUNN. I move to lay that on the table; and on that motion I call the previous question, if it is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not call for the previous question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I now demand the previous question upon the resolution.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will ask the gentleman from New York whether the lines he proposes to strike out include the appropriation for the Mississippi River?

Mr. HISCOCK. If this portion is stricken out the House provision will still remain.

Mr. WILLIS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask that the lines proposed to be stricken out be read.

The SPEAKER. They can not be read now without indulging in debate, which would prevent any debate after the previous question is ordered. The first question is upon ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules thirty minutes are allowed for debate—fifteen minutes in support of the resolution and fifteen minutes in opposition to it—and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], when he has the floor, can call for the reading of the lines proposed to be stricken out if he desires.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have no desire for debate. [Cries of "Vote!" Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will there be any discussion upon the other side?

Mr. WILLIS. I want only about two minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, use up the time on the other side first.

Mr. WILLIS. I have nothing to say if you have nothing to say.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the provision in the House bill was adopted after a full and exhaustive debate. The subject then received full consideration, and I do not propose now to discuss the proposition upon its merits. The effect of the Senate provision is of course to reestablish the Mississippi River Commission. More than that, it is extremely vicious in its provisions for the construction of levees, and there is omitted from it the provision for the expenditure of the money upon certain reaches of the river with a view of demonstrating by that expenditure whether or not any good results will come from the proposed methods. It goes much further than the original House bill, and is more vicious than that.

Mr. REED, of Maine That is saying a great deal.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, the result of our vote I suppose will be this: The House will insist upon striking out the Senate amendment, and that will leave the House provision of the bill in conference; it will leave the appropriation and all of the provisions of the bill as adopted by the House in conference, and the conferees will be authorized to agree to those provisions as we adopted them here. In my judgment, the Senate provision is far more vicious than the Hennepin Canal project; I am inclined to think it is more vicious than the provision urged by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MOFFATT]; and I know of no reason why we should send back our conferees without instruction upon this point which was so elaborately discussed here, or why we should hesitate to instruct them in regard to this, as we have already done in regard to other provisions of the bill. It seems to me that in this case where there is so wide a difference between the two Houses the conferees should go back into conference fully advised of the intention and the judgment of the House on the subject. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, not only has the Senate restored to this bill a provision which the House deliberately struck out, but it has gone further. The bill not only requires that the Secretary of War shall construct levees above the reaches now being improved, the Lake Providence and Plum Point reaches, but it also authorizes the construction of levees below those reaches. The House was advised before that under the peculiar phraseology of this bill not only were the engineers permitted but they were required to construct levees there, because they were required to construct them wherever in the judgment of the commission it was necessary to give ease and safety to navigation, and the commission had distinctly said that it was necessary all along the river. Although the statements were scattered through different portions of the report the commission had distinctly taken that ground. Not only does this provision require the Secretary of War to construct levees which are in fact for the benefit of the riparian owners and not for the benefit of navigation according to the testimony of experts, but it goes further and says that below the reaches now being improved the Secretary of War may construct levees whenever a crevasse is threatened, or wherever it may be necessary to prevent a crevasse; which simply means that they are to build levees for the benefit of the riparian owners from the Ohio River to the Balize. Now, I would discuss the propriety of doing that if it were presented as a distinct proposition, but so far as the improvemont of the navigation of the river is concerned the testimony of men who have been navigating the Mississippi for half a century is that the levees do no good whatever. The reasons I have not time now to discuss, but it was the deliberate judgment of the House that the building of these levees ought not to be permitted, and the plan of the commission has been condemned by experience.

Mr. HISCOCK. I reserve the balance of my time until we shall have heard from the other side if they wish to discuss this question.

Mr. WILLIS. If the House will hear me for a moment or two, I do not think that the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is in the direction of securing the objects that I know he has in view. The House agreed upon certain matters; the Senate disagreed and put in entirely new matters.

I submit to him that there has never been within my recollection a provision connected with the Mississippi River which so carefully guarded the very objects that he wants to accomplish as does this provision. Why do I say that? Because by express terms upon a resolution which I may be permitted to say was offered by the Senator from Kansas, Mr. INGALLS, the commission was practically dethroned—was directed not to expend one dollar; and this, I say to the gentleman from Maine, is in the direction of his desire not to expend one dollar upon what is known as the revetment system, which is the costly part of this work. The expenditure is confined to the contraction work, upon the plan of Mr. Eads—the original plan by which the Mississippi River was to be improved. I submit to my friend that we had better take this as the best provision that has ever been presented on the subject.

In regard to the levees, that is simply the plan in regard to Plum Point and Providence reaches, which has been in operation in the improvement of this river from the very first. It is not a new departure. The difference between that and this is that the small amount we have appropriated in this bill will in the first place not permit us to go beyond Plum Point and Providence reaches. Why? Because the estimate made by the engineer for these two reaches alone was $2,000,000; and the Senate gives not enough by one-half to complete those two reaches. So that it not only prevents revetment, but it practically limits the work to Plum Point and Providence reaches, and in connection with the resolution of Senator INGALLS looks to confining the improvement of this river to the original plan of Captain Eads.

I may be permitted to go so far as to say that the committee of conference have not agreed upon this matter; and that the resolution I have offered provides that the House still further insist upon its nonconcurrence.

Mr. BAYNE. Does the Senate amendment cut down the amount proposed by the House 25 per cent.?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes, it cuts it down 25 per cent. I submit to gentlemen here that we have not come to any conclusion on this matter. We know the views of the House, and we are bound to carry them out. Speaking for myself, I have no desire in the world in connection with this paragraph or any other except to execute as far as we can in the conference committee the will of this House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. One of the objects which I certainly had—and I suppose a great many other members agreed with me—was to confine whatever appropriations were made, if we must make any, to the two reaches named, so as to make a test or experiment. My judgment (it may be an uncharitable one) about the purposes of gentlemen who are specially behind these Mississippi appropriations is that they desire to extend the expenditure of whatever money is appropriated over such distance of river, to use it in making such commencements that they continually involve us in expense before we have determined whether the experiment can by any possibilty be a success. Why, then, can there be any objection to an amendment which shall absolutely limit the expenditures to these two reaches upon which the experiment is in progress at present?

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman has expressed my views of this Mississippi River improvement much better than I could do myself. I submit to him that this provision—I do not say we have assented to it, I do not know that we shall assent to it, but if we should, it practically accomplishes in that direction the very object which he has in view. Why? Because the Senate has cut down by 25 per cent. the Mississippi River appropriation. Prior to this cutting down there was only $2,000,000 for this work; and the lowest estimate made for Plum Point and Providence reaches by the Engineer Corps or by the commission was $2,000,000. Besides, if we adopt the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] we supersede the resolution introduced by the Senator from Kansas, Mr. INGALLS, which goes to the very heart of these heavy expenditures, this revetment system.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is to keep the commission within bounds? What is to confine it inside the banks? Can we not build some sort of levees to hold the commission in check? That is what I want to do.

Mr. WILLIS. They can not expend more money than we give them, certainly.

Mr. ROWELL. If the House passes this resolution there is no danger of the conference committee agreeing to it, is there?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, the resolutions which have been introduced prior to this one by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WILLIS] sought to ascertain the sense of this House on projects which had never been considered by the House, which were introduced into the bill and insisted upon by the Senate. The votes upon those resolutions were in the nature of an expression of the wish of the House upon those points. This measure, this project, this item was carried into the bill by the vote of the House originally. It was debated deliberately and adopted by Congress many years ago, and has been adhered to with great firmness and great unanimity. The Senate changes simply the details of the plan and imposes some directions as to the application of the appropriation for this item in a manner which they say will make it more economical and more effective. I am myself well satisfied that limitation imposed by the Senate amendment will largely reduce the cost of the work and accomplish the best results, and do it more expeditiously.

Now the conference committee ought to be left to deal freely with these details. It will all come back for acceptance by us. We all must understand, and do understand, this great project for the improvement of the Mississippi River is to be slaughtered anyhow, at all events, and under all circumstances. It is not to be spared at any stage of the proceedings.

Gentlemen say they want a better plan. The truth is they do not want any plan at all. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], when he attacked this provision of the bill while before the House originally, said the revetment was the great scarecrow at which he was so frightened. He told us, and quoted from a speech of my colleague [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] in a former Congress, that the revetments were to cost $150,000,000, or even more. And also because they were ineffectual and could not be made secure; that they were liable to destruction; and he relied on the speech of my colleague in a former Congress as the highest authority he could find to sustain that theory. He advocated an amendment which contained an arbitrary provision proposing absolutely to prohibit all revetment in future plans of operations for the improvement of the Mississippi River. Now he insists on restoring revetment and striking out everything else.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] constantly attack the motives of those of us who support this improvement. Who can believe in the sincerity of their motives when they leap so glibly and nimbly over every barrier set before them, and are one day found advocating what they opposed on a former day? If they were really frank, they would admit that the Mississippi River does not run toward New York and Maine, and hence should be blockaded.

They mean simply, and the friends of the bill might as well understand it, that this measure of improvement is to be slaughtered. They can see nothing in all this great work, in which more of the commerce of the country is interested than in any other great work in progress. They can see nothing but private interest, some proposition for the improvement of private property. All the private interests of New York and the East which come under the operation of the tariff law are for the public good. They have the ingenuity and skill to project and set before us all the private interests in their country as questions of great public moment, of public and not individual interest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DUNN. I leave the country to judge of the sincerity of the motives of those gentlemen who deal with great public interests in that way.

I hope we will leave the managers for the House free to consider all the propositions in the bill, and to select that which promises the best results at least cost.

Mr. HISCOCK. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield whatever time I have remaining to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. There is but one minute remaining.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If the time has been kept correctly there are five minutes remaining on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman ran over his time, and there is now but one minute remaining.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will be permitted to go on and submit his remarks.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. REED, of Maine. For five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Maine?

Objection was made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, it is provided in the Senate amendment that no levees shall be built for the purpose of reclaiming lands or preventing injury to lands on private property by overflows. Then there is the usual provision of power to build levees if they are required by the needs of navigation. It is probably not a very amiable word to employ, but it certainly seems absurd for gentlemen to pretend that the requirement, that the commission shall bring up the high-water bank by levees within the measure of these two reaches, is a movement to benefit the private property on either side. The population along these reaches is scant, the land limited, and does not belong to influential bodies, and it would not be protected by this from crevasses above. It is solely to conserve the volume of water immediately in the reaches. It prevents dispersion of power there. The amendment is restrictive to a full application of the adopted plan in the reaches that we are committed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman permit me first to read a few lines?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. In the last Congress I inveighed against the introduction of the revetment system as not being in the plan adopted by Congress, as gentlemen will remember; and I want to read a few lines from a resolution that was adopted unanimously by the commission, as reported in their minutes, at a meeting when they were maturing the plan that was adopted. It was proposed by the president of the commission, General Gillmore, at the meeting in Saint Louis, on January 17, 1880:

That the method of improvement by outlets of any kind is not adapted to the Mississippi River, either to the permanent improvement of its navigation or to the ultimate prevention of destructive floods.

That the method of improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River which promises the most valuable and permanent results will comprise as its essential features the contraction by suitable works of the water way in the wide portions of the river and the protection of caving banks by special means wherever the contracting works referred to do not effect that result.

This idea of uniformity of width and of bringing the banks, new and old, up to the high-water point, and of the projecting works in the wide places being at all times, with the closures of all crevasses or other outlets, the first thing, the main thing, and the leading thing to do, was adopted time and again, and it was clearly set forth in the plan that was recommended to Congress for adoption, and it was adopted on, say, June 28, 1880. It then became law, and was the plan laid down in the law. Some of you remember my surprise, and I may say my indignation, when I found, in the last Congress, that it was being abandoned by the commissioners, and in defiance of what we have been taught to believe is reason and of what we know to be law.

To my astonishment and to the astonishment of both Houses of Congress the commissioners claimed in their last report that they were conforming to the plan of 1880. The result was that the House, by a decisive vote, though I think an unwise one, passed a motion that was intended to destroy the commission itself, instead, as I have always striven for, effecting a change of commissioners or else giving instructions so specific as could not be evaded. This course, which I think the wiser one, and I have always striven for it, holds on to the commission, but reforms the commissioners. They are excellent gentlemen, only they do not carry out the plan that Congress saw fit to confide to them for execution. They show confusion of thought, division in counsel, and feebleness in action. As one of the distinguished Senators from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] said in his very able speech a few days ago, such gentlemen "ought to be removed." This amendment from the Senate cites again the "adopted plan," and then it goes on and so clearly defines it that misconception is impossible. I trust the House will adopt it, and not strike a blind and angry blow at the organic feature—the commission. The commission is one thing; the commissioners are another. They may come, and they may go; but let the work and the organization, or framework, continue.

I am deeply obliged to my kind and distinguished friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] for his indulgence, and I will append the amendment that passed the Senate and I hope we shall adopt it, and that in conference the full amount of two and a quarter millions will be restored:

Improving Mississippi River from head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River: Continuing improvement, $1,687,500; which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission: Provided, That no portion of this appropriation shall be expended to repair or build levees for the purpose of reclaiming lands or preventing injury to lands or private property by overflows: Provided, however, That the commission is authorized to repair and build levees if, in their judgment, it should be done as part of their plan to afford ease and safety to the navigation and commerce of the river and to deepen the channel: And provided further, That the expenditure of so much of said appropriation as may be required to continue the improvement of Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches shall be confined to the complete repair and maintenance of the levees throughout said reaches to the height of 2 feet above the flood of 1882, and to the completion of the permeable works of contraction to such extent as may be required to bring the high-water banks of the river to the comparative uniformity of width contemplated in the first five paragraphs of the plan of improvement recommended by the Mississippi River Commission and adopted by Congress in 1880, and more fully set forth in the report of the Secretary of War for 1881, volume 2, part 3, page 2733: And provided further, That no works of bank protection or revetment shall be executed in said reaches or elsewhere until after it shall be found that the completion of the permeable contracting works and uniform width of the high-water channel will not secure the desired stability of the river banks: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the construction of revetment works where the banks are caving at Greenville reach, Delta Point, in front of the cities of Vicksburg, Memphis, Hickman, and Columbus: And provided further, That contraction works shall be built at the same time in the wide portions of the river immediately above the said revetment works. Of the amount herein appropriated for the Lower Mississippi, $75,000 are to be expended in continuing the work in progress at New Orleans; $187,500 for the rectification of the Red and Atchafalaya Rivers by preventing further enlargement of the latter stream and restricting its outlet capacity, and for keeping open a navigable channel through the mouth of Red or Old River into the Mississippi; $37,500 in improving navigation in the Greenville reach by preventing the bank at Greenville from further caving; $75,000 in deepening the channel at Vicksburg by dredging through the bar existing there; but this last-named sum shall not be expended unless after another examination or survey the commission shall deem it advisable; and if they shall not, then $37,500 shall be expended in the improvement of navigation at Vicksburg by constructing suitable dikes and other appropriate works, and $56,250 in completing the work on the river at Memphis; also $18,750 for the work on the river at Hickman, and $18,750 for work on the river at Columbus, Ky.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, all the results of the consideration of this question in the House have been lost to the House by the Senate amendment; for that portion which was regarded as objectionable in the original bill by the House, and which was eliminated after a full and extended discussion, has been re-enacted by the Senate and much more added, which, in my opinion, is more objectionable than anything previously incorporated in the bill.

Under this amendment of the Senate the feature that gentlemen have constantly denied as the prominent one they had in view, namely, the protection of their own plantations by levees, is forced absolutely upon the commission. Heretofore gentlemen have constantly said that they wanted no improvement of the levees of the river, except as it might affect the navigation, and that the commission was to be allowed to determine for themselves in regard to them. Now they have thrown off their disguise and present this extraordinary provision in the bill:

And provided further, That the expenditure of so much of said appropriation—

That is the whole of it—as may be required to continue the improvement of Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches shall be confined to the complete repair and maintenance of the levees throughout said reaches to the height of 2 feet above the flood of 1882, &c.

Now, I want to know how they propose to reconcile that proposition with their statements heretofore made that they were content to allow the commission to determine exclusively the question as to whether or not the levees were essential to improving the navigation of the river. Here it is imperatively made, by the terms of the bill, compulsory upon them, not if in their judgment it shall be so required, but they actually fix the limit to which they shall go before there is an appropriation available for entering upon the work of the improvement of channel navigation by revetment, contraction, or otherwise. They say, first you must perfectly repair the levees before any work on contraction of the channel, revetments, or repairs of existing work shall be done.

I am glad they have put that provision into the bill. I am glad that gentlemen have at last thrown off the disguise. I am glad that the pretense of the improvement of the Mississippi River is no longer to be held up before the American people. Now we have it in plain terms that the primary object, that the first thing to be done, that the first step in the enterprise, is to secure from overflow the plantations bordering upon the river, even in the district represented by the exceedingly solicitous gentleman from Arkansas. I think it is well for him to omit statements he has indulged in here in regard to the motives of other men and the springs of action that animated them. I know of nothing in all the history of legislation in this House that could be well characterized with all that is offensive in connection with selfishness more than this very amendment that the gentleman is the special advocate of.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, there is one other feature of this amendment to which I desire to call the attention of the House for a few moments. It is this: The report of the commission—the Mississippi River Commission—recommended the levee system as one of the necessities for the improvement of the Mississippi River. The House provision struck that out. We got rid of the plans and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission; but here we go right back to that commission again, and all their reports, at least the most pronounced of them, lay great stress upon the levee system.

Now, then, the provision to which the gentleman from Kentucky has called attention is wise enough and should be in the bill; but if you go further down into the bill you will find another provision, which will readily absorb all the money here appropriated. The first is in conflict with this one to which the gentleman from Iowa has alluded, and if I read this provision of the bill correctly there is a change permitting the construction of the levees, and to carry on the work of revetments, to carry on the whole system which was once denounced by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] upon this floor.

Now, it seems to me, sir, that it is high time we should settle this controversy finally. With reference to this question, so far as the Mississippi River Commission is concerned and the plans of the Mississippi River Commission are concerned, the House should take no backward action.

My attention is called by a gentleman near me to the fact that this bill provides actually for the construction of 138 miles of levees. There is no doubt about that, and I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] for the correctness of the statement. It provides for the building of 138 miles of levees above high-water mark. When has a provision of that kind ever before been introduced in this House—a provision absolutely directing that the work to this extent shall be carried on?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. There is no such provision there. Those levees are in existence to-day.

Mr. HISCOCK. Well, the provision is for their repair.

Mr. BAYNE. It is to raise them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. About 2 feet. But that is a different thing from building them.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is the provision:

That the expenditure of so much of said appropriation as may be required to continue the improvement of Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches shall be confined to the complete repair and maintenance of the levees throughout said reaches to the height of 2 feet above the flood of 1882, and to the completion of the permeable works of contraction to such extent as may be required to bring the high-water banks of the river to the comparative uniformity of width contemplated in the first five paragraphs of the plan of improvement recommended by the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is very different from building them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope we may have the yeas and nays on this.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 50 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 143, nays 88, not voting 91; as follows:

So the resolution of instruction was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. BURROWS. I object. Let them be read.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. DINGLEY, for the rest of the day.

Mr. NEECE with Mr. STRUBLE, on this vote.

Mr. OATES with Mr. WHITING, on this vote.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. KELLEY, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House that the managers upon the part of the House in any conference hereafter granted upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 7480) insist upon striking out of the Senate amendment so much thereof as appropriates $375,000 for continuing the improvement of the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the proposition and fifteen minutes against it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will only detain the House for a minute or two in advocacy of the resolution I have offered. This appropriation was refused in the House, and for the best of reasons. In the first place it does not legitimately belong on a river and harbor improvement bill. The expenditure is to be made above the Long Bridge, where navigation of the river is utterly impossible. In addition to that, we are already investigating the title of the flats, which are intended to be raised by the appropriation. I think that work should be done before any appropriation is made. I think of this as of other matters that it is not properly on the river and harbor bill; and I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 70, noes 39.

Mr. STRAIT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 70.

So the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers of the conference on the part of the House on the river and harbor bill Mr. WILLIS of Kentucky, Mr. BLANCHARD of Louisiana, and Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois.

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES AND TERRITORIES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers on the part of House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (H. Res. 160) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 15,000 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. REID, the gentleman from New York, Mr. FARQUHAR, and, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. DUNN.

EMILY C. STANNARD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will insist upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily C. Stannard, and agree to the request of the Senate for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as conferees on the part of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LOVERING, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. TAULBEE, and the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. MORRILL.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the general deficiency bill be taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

TREASURY BALANCES.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested, if not inconsistent with the public welfare, to transmit to the House, in compliance with its request embraced in House resolution of January 28, 1886, such information as has been compiled as therein directed.

The committee having considered the resolution report that they have considered the same; that they are informed that the information can be furnished without great additional labor; that bills are pending providing means of settling the balances, and it is important to have information concerning their nature and amounts. They therefore recommend that the resolution be amended by striking out the words "requested, if not inconsistent with the public welfare," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "directed;" and that as amended it do pass.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I demand the previous question on the amendment and the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. MCMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROGRESS UPON THE PANAMA CANAL, 1885.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 7, 1886.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Printing be directed to cause to be printed, for distribution by the Senate and the members of the House in the usual proportions, 5,000 copies of the special intelligence report by Lieutenant Kimball and Naval Cadet Capp, United States Navy, upon the progress of the Panama Canal during the year 1885, which report was transmitted to the House by the honorable the Secretary of the Navy on May 20, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the House concurrent resolution of June 7, 1886, to cause to be printed 5,000 copies of the special intelligence report by Lieutenant Kimball and Naval Cadet Capp, United States Navy, upon the progress of the Panama Canal during the year 1885, having considered the same, have instructed me to report the resolution with a favorable report thereon and to recommend its passage. The estimated cost of the proposed printing is $3,347.50.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present another privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 21, 1886.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That 10,000 copies of Senate Executive Document No. 85, Forty-ninth Congress, be printed, one-half for the use of the Senate and the other half for the use of the House.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution, have considered the same, and have instructed me to make a favorable report thereon and to recommend its passage. The estimated cost of printing said report is $5,477.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I will state for the information of the House that this is the report of Mr. Jackson concerning Alaska.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1227) granting an increase of pension to William P. Squires.

The message also informed the House that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, providing for the printing of 6,000 additional copies of the compilation of the laws of the United States relating to loans and the currency, coinage, and banking.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, providing that the proceedings of the Supreme Court of the United States (as they appear on page 707 of volume 117 of the Supreme Court reports), on the occasion of the death of the late Vice-President Hendricks, be published with the memorial addresses already authorized to be published by Congress.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 201) to provide for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, requested a committee of conference, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. GORMAN.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1983) to increase the appropriation for the erection of the public building at Reading, Pa.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7881) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas R. Ware, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. 22) authorizing the preparation of a compilation of the reports of committees of the Senate and House of Representatives;

A bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase-money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 142) authorizing and directing the Commissioner of Labor to make an investigation as to convict labor, and for other purposes.

NORTHERN PACIFIC LAND-GRANT FORFEITURE.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now move to proceed to the consideration of the Northern Pacific land-grant forfeiture bill.

A MEMBER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That is the regular order. It is a privileged report, which was under consideration at the adjournment of the House yesterday.

Mr. STRAIT. I make the point of order that the bill must go to the Calendar as unfinished business. I do not believe that the right to bring a bill in as a privileged report at any time carries with it the right of consideration beyond the day when it is taken up.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule limiting the privilege. The Chair thinks, however, that if the House should enter upon the consideration of a privileged report of this character and should cease to consider it before adjournment, it would perhaps lose its standing as a matter of privilege. But in this case there was a privilege not only to report, but to consider, and the consideration was going on at the hour of adjournment.

Mr. PAYSON. And it was only interrupted by the adjournment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is this equivalent to an order from day to day?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged report, and privileged for consideration under the rules, and the House was proceeding with its consideration.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is a privileged report only; and the right to report at any time gives the right of consideration at any time. It thereupon comes before the House in regular order, like any other bill having the right to be considered. But any other bill which was being considered would become unfinished business by the adjournment of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, unless it were a privileged bill. But the privileged character of this measure does not prevent any member from raising the question of consideration, as the Chair has ruled frequently.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I know it does not.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair thinks the consideration of the bill continues to be privileged from day to day, especially when its consideration was proceeding at the time of adjournment on the day before.

Mr. HENLEY. Regular order!

Mr. REED, of Maine. This does not set aside the morning hour, does it?

The SPEAKER. It has preference over the morning hour; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has moved to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. PAYSON. I withdraw that motion and demand the regular order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does this bill have precedence over the morning hour on the second day of its consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does, until its consideration is completed. It is not a report of as high privilege, for instance, as a report from a committee of conference; still it is a privileged report of the same character, and if its consideration is entered upon by the House it continues, if called up, to be privileged until the House refuses to consider it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I supposed the report was privileged, but it hardly seemed to me the consideration was privileged continuously.

Mr. HENLEY. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is entitled to the floor for the remainder of his time.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, at the hour of adjournment yesterday I was giving a history of this corporation and of its present relation toward the public interest. One fact which I regard as important, and which I should have stated, I overlooked and desire now to state. It is this: While in the granting act the city of Portland was named as the western terminus of the line of the road down the Columbia Valley, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in the fall of 1880 (about the time Mr. Villard, who was subsequently closely identified with the interests of that company, was operating in Oregon) made a contract with the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, the substance of which was that the last-named company would build a line of road from Portland, Oreg., eastward along the valley of the Columbia River and to what is known as Wallula Junction, 214 miles distant eastwardly from Portland, and the Northern Pacific refrain from building on that line and use the line of the Oregon Company by rental; that is, in advance the Northern Pacific Railway Company contracted with the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company for the right of user of this road to be built by the Oregon Company, and, as we upon the Public Lands Committee are advised, though we have never seen the original contract, it contemplates a perpetual lease.

Thus the Northern Pacific Railroad Company practically abandoned a portion of the road which Congress authorized them to construct, and which was in contemplation at the time the grant was made. The importance of this fact will be seen later. I deem it essential to state it now in connection with the other points in the history of the corporation. I think I stated also, but if not, I do now, that the road has been built from the sale of bonds and lands and the earnings; the promoters have invested nothing not paid for.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that I am in favor of the House bill and opposed to that of the Senate; and having given the facts as I understand them I reach the point to state the reasons. Involved in this case, as in every other of like character, are two questions: First, the question of power; second, the question of policy; that is to say, first, whether we have the legal right or authority under the law to declare a forfeiture of these lands; secondly, if the first point should be established affirmatively, whether as a matter of policy, as a matter of fair dealing under all the circumstances of the case, the power that Congress has ought to be exercised.

I am ready to agree now at the outset that upon both these questions gentlemen who do me the honor to listen to me will differ, and differ with sincerity. I shall address myself first to the legal question involved, insisting that we have the legal right to assert this forfeiture with reference to these lands. Afterward I shall address myself to the question of policy—whether or not this power should be exercised.

It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that in this grant two things are given by the General Government to the railroad company. First is given the right of way through the public lands of the nation. For 200 feet on either side of the line of the road as it shall be definitely located, the General Government makes an out-and-out donation of the land for this purpose, and I ought to say here that there is not and has never been any disposition on the part of the Public Lands Committee or of either House of Congress to interfere with the right of the railway company to that grant. There has never been any proposal to interfere with its right to the right of way, the right to build the railroad, or its right to operate under the franchises which were given to it by this act of Congress. Second, the grant of land to aid in its construction. Only, then, with reference to this grant of public lands have we any concern now.

The first time that this question was presented in Congress (and I may say that this is the pioneer case as to the investigation of the legal right or power inherent in Congress to interfere for a breach of the condition upon which the land was granted) was in this very case. In the Forty-seventh Congress a bill was introduced to declare a forfeiture of this grant. That bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee of this House, of which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] was then chairman, and of which I had the honor to be a member. It was, as I have said, the first grant in connection with which the matter was considered, and the inquiry involved then was as to the power of Congress to deal with the question and assert a forfeiture.

By a majority vote of 1, the vote in the committee standing 8 to 7, the Judiciary Committee determined there was no power on the part of Congress to interfere. In other words, it was held this enactment making this grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was an irrevocable pledge of this area of public land to the purpose of the construction of this road, either by this company or such other instrumentality as Congress in its wisdom might determine should carry it out.

The report from that committee was made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], a copy of which I hold in my hand, and without stopping to read the whole of it, only stating the substance of it, I shall incorporate it in my remarks for economy of time.

I had the honor to prepare the views of the minority on that committee in reference to the same proposition, taking the ground then, as I say now for reasons I shall personally give, that Congress had the right to declare a forfeiture of this grant, and that the question of policy was one to be determined by the House.

No discussion was ever had in the House of Representatives in reference to these two propositions during that Congress. For parliamentary reasons, the whole matter going on the table and the point of order being made against it, it was never adopted.

The reports from that committee are as follows:

[House Report No. 1283, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.]

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

June 6, 1882.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. REED, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred sundry bills relating to land grants to railroads, have had the same under consideration and report, as to the Northern Pacific Railroad, as follows:

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company derives its chartered rights from the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Statutes, 365). The road is to be constructed from a point on Lake Superior to Puget Sound, with a branch, via the valley of the Columbia, to a point at or near Portland, Oreg. Twenty alternate odd-numbered sections per mile on each side of the road in Territories and ten in States were granted to the company, with a right under that and subsequent statutes to make up out of a twenty-mile limit on either side all losses arising from prior disposal by the United States of lands the company would have otherwise been entitled to.

By the terms of the original act the road should have been completed July 4, 1876. By joint resolutions approved May 7, 1866 (14 Statutes, 355), and July 1, 1868 (15 Statutes, 255), such changes were made as to time of completion that the Secretary of the Interior, June 11, 1879, held that the effect of them was to require the completion of the road July 4, 1879. Whether this was the exact date or not, it is sufficient to say that the time for completion has now expired beyond question. Eleven hundred and eighty miles of the road have been completed. On the western side it is finished from Puget Sound to the western boundary of Montana, and on the eastern side from Lake Superior to the crossing of the Big Horn, in Montana. About 600 miles remain to be built. These figures we understand to refer to the main line.

Under the provisions of section 3 of the act of July 2, 1864, the land was granted; under those of sections 8 and 9 the conditions were imposed.

The important granting words of section 3 are as follows:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company * * * every alternate section of public land, &c."

The conditions are as follows, in full;

"SEC. 8. That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876.

"SEC. 9. That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein, and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of the conditions hereof and allow the same to continue for upwards of one year, then, in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States, by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road."

Upon this state of facts your committee are called upon to state their opinion as to the legal rights of the United States, and to advise what legislative action, if any, ought to be taken.

The legal effect of the sections as quoted above is to make a present grant to the company of the lands in question, subject to the provisions and conditions stated in sections 8 and 9. The sections taken together vest in the company an estate upon condition-subsequent. If section 9 had not been enacted, it would be quite clear that the estate of the company would have been determinable, at the pleasure of the United States, on the happening of any one of three things: 1st, a failure to begin the road in two years; 2d, a failure in any one year to build 50 miles; and, 3d, a failure in ten years to build, equip, and complete the whole road. To secure this right of forfeiture it was not necessary to mention it in the act. The words "upon condition" were the only words needed. They are as potent as if the words had been added, "and if these conditions are not fulfilled the land shall revert to the United States." But the severity of the words in section 8 Congress had a perfect right to modify. It had a right to say just what should be the effect of a breach of the conditions of the grant. It could rest its reserved rights on the words "upon condition," and then the legal effect would be to retain the right of revertiter, or it could claim that right in so many words, as was done in all the railroad grants made to States. Instead of either of these things, Congress enacted section 9, limiting and defining the effect of a breach of the conditions named in section 8. By that limitation the sole right which remains in the United States at the present time is the right, "by its Congress, to do any and all acts which may be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road." Of course this still leaves to Congress a wide range of power, but its power is necessarily subordinate to the speedy completion of the road. If Congress deems the forfeiture of the lands needed for the speedy completion of the road, it would have a right so to forfeit the lands. It might give them to another company, sell them, and apply the proceeds, provided it judged such a course "needful and necessary to secure the speedy completion of the road."

The purposes and intention of Congress in passing the act of July 2, 1864, appear throughout all the act to be the speedy completion of the road. Every provision has that in view. All the limitations and conditions are to that end, and the limitations of time had that purpose only. Even the right to amend and repeal is subject to the same controlling desire.

Section 20 reads as follows:

"SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may, at any time, having due regard for the rights of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act."

The United States did not want back its lands. It wanted a great public thoroughfare across the continent, and it took every precaution to insure its completion.

The remaining question, therefore, for us to consider is "what is needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road?"

As has already been stated, 1,180 miles of the road have been completed; 600 or less remain. Work is going on at both interior termini and on the tunnels in the heart of Montana. It appears that 150 miles were approved by President Hayes in 1880, and 325 miles by President Arthur last year. The company assert that by September, 1883, they will finish the road; that they are progressing as fast as can possibly be done. No testimony or suggestion to the contrary has been made by any one. Your committee do not see how the transfer of the lands to another company could hasten the completion of the road, nor would it be regarded as advisable for the Government to complete the road by its own direct action. Congress would hardly regard either course as needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road.

We can conceive of no legislation which would hasten the completion of the road, and therefore recommend none.

[House Report 1283, part 2, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.]

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

July 24, 1882.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following as the views of the minority:

Unable to agree with the majority of the committee in its conclusions as to the legal rights of the United States as to the land grant in aid of this railroad, we submit our views.

Two questions are presented under the bill before us.

First. Is there the right of forfeiture as to all unpatented lands within the limits of the grant to this road, so that the United States may revest itself with the title thereto, as in its former estate, by declaration of forfeiture? And,

Second. If the right of such forfeiture is found to exist, is it policy to exercise it?

Of course the first question is purely a legal one, and, if determined in the negative, renders absolutely unnecessary any inquiry as to the second.

The eminent counsel for the railroad company have, in the elaborate briefs filed with the committee, as well as in their oral arguments before it, assumed that by the acts of Congress making the grant and the acts amendatory thereto the title to all these lands was absolute in the company; that because no power was reserved to Congress in express terms to declare a forfeiture for breach of the condition as to the time of the completion of the road, therefore no such power exists; and they also insist that, in any event, by the provisions of the ninth section of the act of July 2, 1864, the grant is irrevocably pledged to the construction of this particular road, and that by that section of the act Congress has restricted its right and power to this: That the land or its proceeds must be appropriated to the completion of the road, irrespective of the time required for its completion.

This latter view the majority of the committee adopt, and, while not assenting to the views of the company as to the necessity of an express reservation in the granting act of the right to declare a forfeiture, yet hold that—

"By that limitation (section 9) the sole right which remains in the United States at the present time is the right by its Congress to do any and all acts which may be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road. * * * All the limitations and conditions are to that end."

And conclude:

"We can conceive of no legislation which would hasten the completion of the road, and therefore recommend none."

The minority do not agree with these views; we assert that the power to declare an absolute forfeiture of this land grant is in Congress, and that the question of the policy of action to that end should be considered and be decided after a careful examination of existing conditions as well as past transactions, and with a broad and liberal view of what has been done under the disadvantageous surroundings of the promoting, constructing, and equipping a railroad through the unimproved section of the country traversed by this road.

The questions are important, involving the title to upwards of 39,900,000 acres of land, estimated by the company to be worth $2.50 per acre, or $99,750,000. (Report of Commissioner of Railroads, 1881, page 185.)

The legislation necessary to be noticed is as follows:

The act incorporating the company and making the grant was passed July 2, 1864 (13 Statutes, 365), sections 3, 8, 9, and 20 being the only ones deemed essential to be noticed in this inquiry, and they are as follows:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway, every alternate section of public lands, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, as said company may adopt, through the Territories of the United States, and 10 alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad whenever it passes through any State. * * *

"SEC. 8. That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, 1876.

"SEC. 9. That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein, and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the said company make any breach of condition hereof and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States by its Congress may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road.

"SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That the better to accomplish the objects of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act."

By joint resolutions of May 7, 1866, and July 1, 1868 (as ruled by the Department), the time of the completion of the road was extended to July 1, 1879; so that absolute default has occurred so far as time is concerned.

It is perfectly clear, under the authorities, that the interest acquired by the company by the act of 1864 to the lands in question was an estate in præsenti, with the conditions-subsequent created by the eighth and ninth sections of the act. (R. R. Co. vs. Smith, 9 Wall., 95; Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wall., 60; Leavenworth, &c., R. R. Co. vs. U. S., 92 U. S., 741.)

By the eighth section of the act it was distinctly asserted—

"That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following conditions, namely, (1) that the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President: and (2) shall complete not less than 50 miles per year; and (3) shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, 1876."

These are the conditions of the eighth section of the act. Nothing could be clearer than that upon a default in the performance of either of these conditions the right attached of declaring a forfeiture for the breach by the Government. The right existed independent of any express reservation in the grant. The law gives the right; it follows as an incident to the estate "upon condition subsequent" as fully and absolutely in the grantor as though expressly reserved; indeed, it is believed that no respectable authority can be found which holds that the power to determine, by the grantor, an estate on condition-subsequent for breach thereof is strengthened by express reservation of the power.

The majority of the committee concede this, and say:

"To secure this right of forfeiture it was not necessary to mention it in the act; the words "upon condition" were the only words needed."

It is perfectly clear, then, that to this point in the legislation the position of the company was that of any ordinary grantee of such an estate, one determinable at the pleasure of the grantor on the happening of either of the three contingencies named in the eighth section.

To this the majority of the committee agree with us.

The divergence in opinion between us begins with the introduction of the ninth section. The majority says:

"But the severity of the words in section 8 Congress had a perfect right to modify. It had a right to say just what should be the effect of a breach of the conditions of the grant. It could rest its reserved rights on the words 'upon condition,' and then the legal effect would be to retain the right of revertiter, or it could claim the right in so many words. * * * Instead of either of these things, Congress enacted section 9, limiting and defining the effect of a breach of the conditions named in section 8. By that limitation the sole right which remains in the United States at the present time is the right, by its Congress, to do any and all acts which may be needful and necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road."

Is this conclusion warranted? That is the question to be first considered.

It should be observed that the language of the ninth section is peculiar, namely:

"That the United States make the several conditional grants herein, and the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same upon the further condition," &c.

Is it not absolutely certain, leaving no room for interpretation or the entertainment of any doubt, that to this point in the legislation, by breach of any of the conditions named in section 8, every right of the company, not only to the land grant, but its very franchises as a corporation, were determinable at the option of the Government, expressed by Congressional action? There is no foundation for even conjecture on this point; the language is explicit, and there is no conflict of authority in the text-books or reports as to the right of revertiter of all rights granted by the act, upon breach of any condition, if forfeiture should be declared by Congress.

So well established is this proposition that it would appear to be an affectation of learning to cite authorities in support of it.

Now, it is insisted that because Congress inserted the provisions of section 9, that "the United States makes the several conditional grants herein" (plainly referring to the condition in section 8; there can be no question as to this), "and the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same" (that is, the grant of land, as well as the franchise and privileges in the act conferred, subject to the conditions named in section 8).

"Upon the further condition that if the company make any breach of conditions hereof and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then * * * the United States * * * may do any and all acts which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road."

This was, in express terms, inserted as a further condition upon the already "conditional grants" of the act; a condition superadded to those in the eighth section, and, by apt expression in the act, the company accepted the "conditional grants" created by the eighth section, with the additional burden imposed by the "further conditions" of the ninth section.

How can it be pretended that the provisions of the ninth section were intended to "modify the severity of the words in section 8?"

No reference is made in the language of the ninth section to any intention to divest the Government of any rights it has reserved by the provisions of the eighth section by operation of law; indeed, we insist that no language could be used which would more forcibly convey the idea that Congress reserved all rights which it had under the eighth section than by using the expression that it did in the ninth section, that "the conditional grants" are made and accepted on the "further (additional) condition," &c.

Undoubtedly Congress had the right to "modify the severity of the words in section 8;" equally clear is it that it had the right "to say just what should be the effect of a breach of the condition of the grant." But has Congress "modified the severity of the words of section 8?" Has it said just "what the effect of a breach of the condition of the grant" should be? Not a word as to this in express terms. Keeping in mind that to reserve the right of forfeiture it was not necessary to mention it in the act; that all that was needed was to use the expressions that were used, namely, "that every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company upon and subject to the following condition," and that the right of declaring a forfeiture for breach of condition is not in the least strengthened by an express reservation of the right in the act, if Congress did modify the severity of the words of section 8, the modification must arise from the legal effect of the provisions of section 9, because no express words are used showing such intention, and the modification, if it exists, must be by an interpretation of the ninth section.

The difficulty with the report of the majority is that it assumes this interpretation of the provisions of section 9, that by imposing a further condition on the company, namely, giving Congress the right to exercise power in its discretion as to the details of business management of the company, and to say what should or should not be done by the company affecting its methods of advancing the work, &c.—a right that Congress would not have had without such a provision—Congress relinquished and absolutely lost all the rights of declaring a forfeiture for breach of condition which the law gave it, and which rights, as we have seen, were as well preserved by operation of law as though saved by express reservation in the grant.

In other words, the majority assert that because, in express terms, Congress imposed a further condition on an already existing "conditional grant," which further condition was not inconsistent with the prior conditions and correlative rights and liabilities under them, the imposition of such further condition was, in legal effect, an abrogation of all legal rights beneficial to the Government growing out of the prior conditions, and the grantee took the estate practically discharged therefrom.

As this is the material portion of the inquiry, let us examine it further.

Under section 8, for a breach of either of the conditions, Congress could determine the estate in the company and revest itself with the granted title, and here its power would end. It could not give direction as to any of the details of the business of the company; it would be powerless to command any act to be done with reference to a speedy completion of the road, or to coerce in any way any action on the part of the company. It was in a position simply of ability to restore itself to its former position, if it chose to exercise its right, leaving the company perfectly free to do as it chose as to either manner or time of completion of the road.

Congress assuming that perhaps it might be to the advantage of the Government to have the power, in certain contingencies, to give such direction to the company in any matter that would insure more speedy action on its part in the construction of its road, in case default should continue as to any condition for more than a year, the ninth section was added, not as a substitute for the provisions of section 8, but, as stated in the section, as a further condition to the already "conditional grants." This is the only reason which can properly be assigned for inserting section 9.

There is no inconsistency between the two sections.

For breach of either condition of the eighth section a power to declare forfeiture existed. This power might or might not be exercised, in the discretion of Congress.

A mere delay to assert the right would not interfere with the subsequent exercise of it, nor relieve the grant of its conditional character. Nothing is better settled than that laches is not imputable to the Government. (See U. S. vs. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat., 720.) The doctrine is reaffirmed in 11 Wheat., 184; 7 Otto, 584; 8 Otto, 489.

If Congress did not choose to assert the right it had, and the default continued for more than a year, then the provisions of section 9 became operative, and all the rights growing out of the conditions in both sections were in a condition to be enforced by the Government, at its pleasure.

It could, as it did, extend the time for the performance of the work, the conditions meanwhile being none the less operative on the ground; no one pretending, however, that the mere extension of time relieved the grant of any of the conditions imposed by the original act.

All parts of a statute must be construed together and effect given to all the provisions, if possible. It is never to be presumed that the Legislature enacts useless provisions; effect must always be given to every provision of a statute, if that be possible, and in the construction of the grants that interpretation should always be given which strengthens the rights reserved by or for the Government.

The courts have frequently held that these grants are laws as well as conveyances, and that such effect must be given them as will carry out the intent of Congress. (Mo. R. R. Co., &c., 7 Otto, 491; Hall vs. Russell, 11 Otto, 503.)

In Leavenworth, &c., R. R. vs. U. S. (92 U. S., 740), citing approvingly Dubuque, &c., vs. Litchfield (23 Howard, 66), the court say:

"All grants of this description are construed strictly against the grantee."

And further:

"A grant like this should be neither enlarged by ingenious reasoning nor diminished by strained construction. If the terms used are plain and unambiguous, there can be no difficulty in interpreting them; if they admit of different meanings, they must be accepted in a sense favorable to the grantor.

"What is not expressly given or follows by necessary implication is withheld."

These views are substantially indorsed by Attorney-General Devens (16. Op. Attorney-General, page 572), when, in giving a construction to the charter of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, where the provisions were identical with those being considered here, that officer held, under these two sections, in case of default continued for more than a year, that it would be necessary for the United States to take advantage of such condition by acting under the ninth section, or by declaring a forfeiture of the grant by legislative action, or by proceeding for enforcing a forfeiture by a judicial proceeding; and he concludes:

"If the United States were disposed to revest in itself or enforce a forfeiture of the lands granted, it would be necessary to take some action indicative of that intention."

Showing that the common-law right of declaring a forfeiture exists in his judgment.

Nor is the character of the grant changed or the rights of the company enlarged as to the estate granted by the resolution of May 31, 1870, which authorized the issuing of bonds and securing them by mortgage, as that resolution only authorized the pledging of "its property and rights of property of all kinds and description," &c.

No language is used which in any way changes the legal character of the original grant or makes the estate in the company other than one "on condition-subsequent."

Nothing is better settled than that a grantee of such an estate can not, by any act less than performance, defeat the condition and convert such estate into an absolute fee.

This committee, in its report in the matter of "Title to certain lands in Michigan," No. 1266, asserted the true doctrine on this question; and if further authorities were needed, Foxcroft vs. Mallett (4 Howard, 353) would appear decisive.

We conclude, then, on the legal question of power in Congress (and we are only dealing with the abstract legal question now), that it has the right—

First. To declare the title to all unpatented lands in the grant forfeited, and revest the United States with it, so that it can be restored to the public domain, open to sale and settlement under existing laws, under section 8.

Second. To take any steps it may deem advisable to insure a speedy completion of the road, under section 9.

So much on the questions of power and the legal status of the grant.

The first question presented by the bill being answered affirmatively, an examination of the second is necessary, namely, Is it wise and prudent policy to exercise the power to forfeit?

The company has contented itself with resting its case before the committee on the legal arguments against the right of forfeiture.

Of course, the majority being of the opinion that no right of absolute forfeiture exists, the facts, figures, conditions, &c., upon which the question of policy must necessarily be decided have not been presented to the committee, and this report does not assume to deal with aught but the legal aspects of the case. The House will determine the question of policy.

Under the law, as we understand it, we are driven to the conclusion above stated.

So, Mr. Speaker, for the first time in the history of this grant, though pending before Congress for all these years, and continuously, the House of Representatives is now called upon to pass its judgment on the question.

I insist at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation is not a contract in the ordinary acceptation of the term; that is to say that in this legislation there is no mutuality of obligation between the two parties. There is no reciprocity of obligation between the railroad company and the Government. The railroad company has either to accept or decline the proffered aid which was made by that act of Congress. The proposition was, if they would build a railroad between the points indicated Congress would hold out to them as a bounty, as a donation, as a gift to them this area of public land. They did not agree in consideration of this they would build it, and there was no obligation whatever on their part to do or not to do it. It must be entirely in their discretion and in their judgment as to whether they should or should not perform. It was a bounty, a donation, nothing else. I agree if they had performed they would have been entitled.

But, Mr. Speaker, you test the liability of the Government and determine what Congress may do by the offer they made, by the language they used. What was it?

First, it was a grant, as I have said, of the right of way; second, a grant of alternate sections designated by odd numbers, twenty sections in width on either side in the States and forty in the Territories. On the face of the section making the grant it is an absolute donation. After this are provisions in the act as to details, how this should be carried out, how the Government should be advised of the performance of the railroad company; after providing for appointment of commissioners by the President for the examination of sections of 20 miles of the road, after providing for determination and report by these commissioners on all these matters to the Government as to whether or not the road had been constructed in the manner provided by the law, after all these details had been provided for, there was inserted in the law section 8:

That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876.

In connection with this section I beg to add, that by the act of 1866, and the subsequent act of 1868, the time for the completion of this road under this section was extended to the 4th of July, 1879. So that as a matter of course the legislation we are now considering stands precisely in the same attitude as though it bore date of July 4, 1879, instead of July 4, 1876.

But that is followed by section 9:

And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditioned—

And I beg, Mr. Speaker, the attention of the House to this language—

That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein, and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same upon the further condition that if the company make any breach of the conditions hereof, and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States by its Congress may do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of said road.

Under these two sections, Mr. Speaker, has arisen a difference among the lawyers who have had occasion to examine into the question with reference to the legal effect of the sections I have quoted. The railway company have always contented themselves, so far as I know, with insisting that because section 9 was incorporated in the act that the only thing left for the Government to do was, after the expiration of one year from the time within which the road should have been completed—all that was left for Congress was "to take such steps as might be needful to insure the speedy completion of the road." That was the doctrine of eight members of the committee in the Forty-ninth Congress which made the report presented to the House by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who doubtless adheres to that position now.

Without going into the details with reference to the matter, I think it is enough to say that upon an examination of these two sections, section 8 providing in express terms for the creation of the old common-law estate, known as an estate in fee upon condition-subsequent, and the language of section 9, which I have quoted, there can be no doubt of the right of Congress in the premises. Of course this is not as exciting as a discussion of a point of order; but I hope to have the attention of the House for a few moments, and especially those who are unlearned in the law or whose attention has not been called to the terms of these sections, while I state the character of the estate that language would convey, leaving out the ninth section; and all agree, so far as I know with reference to this, that (leaving out section 9 for the present) the estate conveyed here is an estate in fee upon condition-subsequent; that is, a present vesting of the title to this land in the company.

The Supreme Court have decided in numerous cases, beginning with Rice vs. The People and coming down through the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, and so on through the Leavenworth and Galveston case and others unnecessary to mention here, that when, in an act making a grant of this character, words in the present tense are used, as that "there be and hereby is granted," it vests a present interest in the company and conveys a title sub modo, vesting in them the title, but subject to the condition as named in the act.

What was the condition? That certain things were to be done within a certain time, and everything was to be done and completed according to the terms of the act by the 4th day of July, 1879.

Now under the law, and under the decisions of the courts, what incidents attach to an estate of that character? I shall content myself, Mr. Speaker, by stating what I believe the law to be, and I have under my hand the adjudication of the courts holding what the law is, but shall content myself by asserting what the law is, and unless disputed by some gentleman who differs in regard to the matter I shall not stop to cite the precedents. If, however, the legal points that I now make are disputed I shall be very grateful, and yield to any interruption with reference to the authorities from which I speak. If any gentleman desires to dispute the authority I will be glad to have my attention called to it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Permit me to ask my colleague whether in this part of his argument he proposes to discuss this case without reference to section 9?

Mr. PAYSON. I have said that I did not. I am dealing with the question now in view of the grant and section 8.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. And will my colleague then proceed with the discussion of the case in connection with that section?

Mr. PAYSON. I promise in advance to cover every question made by any gentleman, and all I ask is that I may not be interrupted to anticipate the course of my argument, but simply to keep in mind what I desire to convey.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. And in that connection I hope my colleague will state what he believes to be the object of inserting this ninth section.

Mr. PAYSON. I will come to that in the due course of the argument, and in the mean time refer my colleague to my report in the Forty-seventh Congress, already in, for as good an argument as I can now make on section 9.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will come at once to the legal propositions involved. What is the character of the estate vested under the law which is conveyed by this kind of enactment, or, in other words, what are the incidents which attach to such an estate? I assert that the law is that the holder of the title possesses the lands in fee with a condition-subsequent.

The object of inserting a condition, at the common law, was to insure the use of the granted property to the purpose intended to be secured. A forfeiture for breach of the condition always, at law, brought back the property ab initio to the grantor, though the title had passed and been paid for by the grantee and he held what was practically the absolute fee, with all the incidents of that kind of title, except the reserved right of the grantor to re-enter for breach of the condition; and it did not matter into how many hands the title had passed.

But such a title to lands in the hands of any grantee, direct or remote is this: He holds them with every incident attached to ownership and possession in fee and absolute conveyance of the title to him, with only one exception; and that is the right on the part of the grantor to insist upon a forfeiture of this estate for a disregard of the condition when it shall be asserted. That is the only exception made in any of the books as between the estate upon condition-subsequent, such as is admitted to be, and an absolute fee-simple. It may be conveyed, it may be mortgaged, it may be sold and dealt with in any way that an absolute fee-simple could be dealt with. Now, that is the condition this grant was in.

I presented to the House in the Forty-eighth Congress a report on the forfeiture of lands granted to a railroad in Oregon (Report No. 383) and which expresses my views so well on the legal question involved that I read so much of it, as part of my argument here, as is relevant.

It must be remembered that under the law the grant of lands to aid in the construction of this road is a grant in præsenti; and the conditions in the act conditions-subsequent (Rutherford vs. Green's heirs, 2 Wheat.; Luessen vs. Price, 12 How., 59; Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wall., 44; Van Wyck vs. Knevals, 16 Otto; Opinion Attorney-General Devens, 16 Opinions Attorneys-General, page —; Opinion Attorney-General Brewster, United States Senate Ex. Doc. 31, first session Forty-eighth Congress).

That the legal title to all the land is in the railroad company; and your committee also agree with the counsel for the company that the legal title so conveyed by the granting act is a subject of sale and transfer by the original grantee (subject, as we insist and shall show, to the condition contained in the act). So that no question arises as to the alleged transfer of the grant by the Oregon Central to the Oregon and California, so far as the passing of the legal title, as such, is concerned. We agree that the last named company took by the transfer all that the first corporation had, and stood where the Oregon Central stood, with the legal title to the grant and charged with the conditions imposed and the burdens created by the act.

This brings us then to consider the real question at issue, and as this is the first grant we have considered where the question is presented of the effect legally of part performance by the grantee or its "successor and assigns," of the conditions named in the granting act, and as the determination of that question in this case is to be a precedent, necessarily, for the action of the committee in subsequent cases, in like character of grant, we have given the subject careful attention, and believe our conclusions fully warranted.

Upon the agreed statement that the grant was one in præsenti, counsel for the company insist that this grant is materially and radically different from any grant ever made by Congress before or since in these two very material respects:

First. There is no reservation in it whatever of any kind or character of a right to re-enter for condition broken; and

Second. There is no reservation whatever of any right to alter, amend, or repeal the act. Nor is there, third, as in the North Pacific and Atlantic Pacific, any reservation of a right upon the part of Congress, in case the grantee does not complete the road within the time specified, "to do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the road."

All there is in the act upon the subject of a condition is in these words:

SEC. 6. And the foregoing grant is upon condition that said company shall complete a section of 20 or more miles of said railroad and telegraph within two years, and the entire railroad and telegraph within six years from the same date.

Counsel call attention to the fact that in grants of this character, before and since, Congress has generally, in terms, provided for forfeiture for breach of the expressed condition, and that in this case there is a departure in the language, in this, that all that section 6 provides is as above recited; and, quoting from his brief:

It is respectfully insisted that the clause in the last section of the act (section 6) requiring said company to complete a section of 20 or more miles within two years, and the entire road within six years from the date of the grant, inasmuch as there is no clause of reverter or right of entry for condition broken, and no reservation of any right to alter, amend, or repeal, can not be held a condition, but simply a direction; it is not a limitation, but merely declaratory of the desire of Congress in the premises, and the failure to keep which on the part of the company gives no right of forfeiture.

We do not deem it necessary to argue that proposition; no language could be used more apt to make the estate one on condition-subsequent than is used in this act; the words are of present grant, "there is hereby granted," and then section 6, "and the foregoing grant is upon condition," &c.

This has always been held by the Supreme Court of the United States, as shown by the cases cited above, to make the grant one on condition-subsequent. (See those cases.)

Again, the counsel urges:

But conceding, for the present, that the words used in the last section are sufficient to create a condition, it is respectfully insisted that there being no express reservation either of a right to re-enter, or to alter or repeal, Congress has no power to declare a forfeiture, and it can be done, if at all, by the judiciary alone. That the very most that Congress could do in this case would be to instruct the Attorney-General to institute the necessary proceedings to have a judicial forfeiture declared.

There being no such reservation in the grant of May 4, 1870, it follows that the judiciary only, and not Congress, can declare a forfeiture on account of failure to perform conditions.

And, aside from all technical rules, it is respectfully submitted that the judiciary, and not the legislative department, is the one to which all these questions of failure to comply with conditions-subsequent should be remitted. The questions to be determined are essentially of a judicial and not of a legislative nature. We considered the same question in the Texas Pacific case, and are content to repeat here what we said there as to both propositions, namely: first, the lack of power to declare forfeiture because of a want of express reservation of the right; and, second, that declaring a forfeiture is a judicial proceeding purely. We said in that case:

As has been stated, we have had the benefit of legal argument by some of the most eminent counsel in the land, and the claim by this company to the grant on legal grounds may be stated in this way:

By the act making the grant the title to the land passed to the Texas Pacific—the act was a grant in præsenti, with a condition-subsequent.

The Texas Pacific, thus being vested with legal title (although subject to the condition-subsequent, which contained, among other things, the building of the road to San Diego and the completing of the whole line by May 2, 1882, and that there should be no consolidation with any competing line, yet) the legal title was an assignable interest, which could be conveyed, and that by the deed made by the Texas Pacific January 18, 1882, to the Southern Pacific, it became vested with the legal title to all land, and because the Congress did not, in making the grant and coupling with it a condition-subsequent, in express terms to reserve to itself the power to declare the grant forfeited for breach of the condition if it should not be complied with, therefore no right of forfeiture exists, and the hands of Congress are tied, and the Government is powerless to resume the grant by reason of such omission.

In other words, generally stated, the distinguished counsel for the company declares that in law the power to declare a forfeiture of a grant made on condition-subsequent for breach of the condition must be reserved to the grantor by express terms in the act making the grant, or it does not exist.

No authority was produced to the committee except the statement of the attorneys asserting this extraordinary doctrine in support of it; but the interests being so great, we have examined the books on the question, and are not able to find a single authority in support of the proposition, and we believe none can be found.

On the contrary, Washburn on Real Property, vol. 2, 3d ed., p. 15, asserts the rule to be—

"Where the condition of a grant is expressed there is no need of reserving a right of entry for a breach thereof in order to enable the grantor to avail himself of it."

See also Jackson vs. Allen, 3 Cowan, 220; Gray vs. Blanchard, 8 Pick., 284; Littleton, sec. 331.

Indeed, all the decided cases we can find, as well as the text-books, are in harmony and to the same effect; so we do not present argument upon it here.

Counsel also urge that, under the law, a forfeiture of a grant is purely a judicial question; one for the courts alone, and that Congress has no power in the matter.

We are of different opinion. It seems perfectly clear to this committee that a declaration of forfeiture is only the act of the grantor, asserting his right to resume the grant, to be exercised at his option, terminating an estate for breach of the condition on which it is granted. The power rests with him; it is at his option whether he will exercise it or not; purely a matter of discretion, with the exercise of which the courts have nothing to do; and until it is exercised there is nothing on which the court can act.

When forfeiture is declared and resumption of ownership asserted by the grantor, then the court may be invoked to declare whether the right existed or whether it had been effectively exercised; but the question of forfeiture is with the grantor, personal or legislative, as the grant is private or public, and the judiciary has no jurisdiction whatever until after the grantor has acted to assert his or its right to declare the forfeiture, and then the grantee may invoke the judiciary.

To us this is too clear to be regarded as debatable or needing elaboration.

To this it might be added that the judicial proceedings, suggested as a necessity by the opponents of forfeiture, must be specially authorized by Congress. Nobody pretends that the Department of Justice could institute any such proceedings without an express act of Congress authorizing it; therefore, the whole matter comes back to this, that affirmative legislation must be had, and we are clearly of opinion that Congress is the only body to exercise the option of reclaiming the lapsed grants.

No difficulty has arisen in any of these cases as to the fact of nonperformance; indeed, in all of them breach of the condition is admitted, so there are no disputed questions of fact to be investigated; and whether the people shall preserve their own property is clearly a question more properly for the people to determine through their representatives than for any court. The Supreme Court, in United States vs. Repentigny (5 Wallace, 267), decided that an act of Congress is an equivalent for the ancient "inquest of office found."

The election to waive the forfeiture or to enforce it rests with Congress.

It is a question of intention, and neither the executive nor judicial department of the Government can know what the pleasure of Congress may be, and can not, therefore, act to revest the title until Congress has declared its intention in that regard.

In cases like this, where there is no limitation in the act on the power, the declaration of forfeiture relates back to the date of the grant, and the Government is restored to its original estate.

This follows from the nature of the estate granted; the estate is one on condition-subsequent, that is, an estate liable to terminate and become no estate on the happening or non-happening of some event in the future.

Here the legal title to the grant as an entirety passed to the company by the act as fully and completely as though the patents had issued at that date, subject, of course, to the conditions named in the grant.

Let this be kept clearly in mind, that the act passed the legal title and conveyed all the estate which the grantee could get; the subsequent building of the road and the issuing of patents only gave precision to the grant, but did not add to or strengthen the title which the company had under the act. What it had it derived wholly from the act making the grant. This the Supreme Court has expressly and repeatedly decided. There has been a breach of the condition of this grant since May 4, 1876, and an abandonment of the project. Therefore there is a right of forfeiture. How far does it extend?

In Sheppard's Touchstone, 154, it is said:

It is generally true that he that doth enter for a condition broken doth make the estate void ab initio, and that he shall be in of his first estate in the same course and manner as it was when he departed with the possession and at the time of the making of the condition. And hence it is that, if there be any charge or incumbrance on the lands, as if the lessee of land upon condition grant a rent charge out of the land or enter into a statute or recognizance and the consee has the land in execution and this charge is after the condition is made, in this case when the condition is broken and the party doth re-enter he shall by relation avoid the rent, statute, and recognizance and hold the land freed from them all.

The same doctrine is found in other authorities. Thus in Coke-Littleton 202*a*, it is said broadly:

He who enters for breach of condition regularly shall have the land of his first estate.

At 201*a* it is said:

In these cases if the rent be not paid at such time or before such time limited and specified within the condition comprised in the indenture, then may the feoffer or his heirs enter into such lands or tenements and them in his former estate to have and to hold the feoffee quite to ouste thereof.

This is the language of Littleton. Coke says:

Regularly it is true he that entereth for a condition broken shall be seized in his first estate which he had at the time of the estate made upon condition, but yet this fayleth in many cases.

Coke goes on to specify the cases in which it "fayleth." They are placed under the two heads of "impossibility" and "necessity," and have no application here.

Butler and Hargreaves, in their note to this passage, say:

It may be further observed: 1st. That as the entry of the feoffer on the feoffee for a condition broken defeats the estate to which the condition was annexed, so it defeats all rights and incidents annexed to that estate, as dower, &c., and all mesne incumbrances of the feoffee.

The same doctrine is in 1 Rolle's Abridgment, 474, 617; Comyn's Digest, title Condition, 0.6.

So in Greenleaf's Cruise on Real Property, volume 2, page 25, section

10 (in Greenleaf's edition the original six volumes are bound in three, and the passage quoted is therefore in his first volume as bound), it is said:

Where a particular time is appointed for the performance of a condition, it must be performed at or before that time.

At page 40, section 39, it is said:

Upon the breach of a condition the feoffer or grantor, or his heir, becomes entitled to the estate to which such condition was annexed.

At page 44, section 52, it is said:

Where a person enters for a condition broken the estate becomes void, ab initio; the person who enters is again seized of his original estate in the same manner as if he had never conveyed it away. And as the entry of the feoffer on the feoffee for a condition broken defeats the estate to which the condition was annexed, so it defeats all rights and incidents annexed to that estate, together with all charges and incumbrances created by the feoffee during his possession; for upon the entry of the feoffer he becomes seized of an estate paramount to that which was subject to these charges.

In section 53 the writer says that on re-entry a rent charge or judgment is gone; and in section 54 he says that the dower of the feoffee's wife is gone on re-entry.

Washburn on Real Property, volume 2, section 13, says:

When such entry had been made the effect was to reduce the estate to the same plight and to cause it to be held in the same terms as if the estate to which the condition was annexed had not been granted.

At page 457, same volume, section 24, it is said that an estate subject to a condition does not lose its capacity of being sold or devised in the same manner as an indefeasible estate, but that the purchaser or whoever takes the estate will take it subject to the condition annexed.

Kent declares the law to the same effect:

Persons who have an estate or freehold subject to a condition are seized, and may convey, though the estate will continue defeasible until the condition be performed or released, or is barred by statute of limitations, or by estoppel.

Again he says:

Laches are chargeable upon the grantee (of an estate subject to condition), even though such grantee or his assignee be an infant or femme covert for nonperformance of the condition annexed to the estate. (Kent's Com., volume 4, pages 125, 126.)

As held in the case of Jackson vs. Crisler (1 Johns. Cas., 125–126), he who purchases an estate of a grantee who holds upon a condition-subsequent takes the estate subject to the condition. He must look to the title and take it as it exists.

The Supreme Court of the United States has expressly decided this to be the law in the well-considered case of Foxcroft vs. Mallet (4 How., 353). The State of Massachusetts gave a large body of land in Maine to Williams College, on the condition that thirty settlers in each township might each have 100 acres for $5. The college conveyed a township to Ingersoll, who conveyed 6,000 acres of the same to Samuel Mallet, subject to the condition that it should bear its proportion of that burden.

Mallet gave back to college a mortgage upon all the land, without expressly referring to that condition in his title, though he did refer to the deed.

That mortgage was afterwards foreclosed, and the lands were conveyed thereunder by mesne conveyances to Foxcroft, who claimed to own the whole tract by title superior to David Mallet, one of the settlers who took title after the mortgage was made. The court decide that the mortgagor could not pass by mortgage a greater interest than he obtains; that—

The condition or charge was on the land as an incumbrance by the very terms of the deed to him, and he could not, if he tried, convey a title to the land which should be free from it. Such a condition attaches to the land wherever it goes, although the same should pass through a hundred hands. In our view, it operates like a covenant which runs with the land, and all assignees are bound by covenants real that run with the land. (Page 377.)

The case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wallace, 44, has been cited as against this doctrine, but an examination of that case will show that it is in harmony with the principle. That case arose on this state of fact:

A grant was made to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a certain railroad.

The road was not built within the time—ten years—and after its expiration the plaintiff went upon the land and cut a lot of trees growing upon it and floated them off, with others.

The defendant, as agent for the State, seized the logs as its property, they having been cut from the lands the title to which was in the State, under the grant, as he insisted.

The plaintiff replevied them, and as to the claim that the title was in the State by the grant, made these points:

(1) That the legal title did not pass by the act to the State; that the act did not vest the title in præsenti; that the State was only an agent for the future disposition of them.

(2) If the title passed to the State by said acts such title reverted to the United States, no part of the road having been built at the expiration of the period limited in the grant, the condition being, "if the road is not completed within ten years no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

So the precise question was, whether there was title in the State sufficient to maintain trespass or replevin against a wrongdoer.

The court held that the grant was one in præsenti; that the legal title to the lands passed to the State by the act itself; that the conditions in the act were conditions-subsequent, and as to them the court said:

The provision that all lands remaining unsold after ten years should revert to the United States if the road be not then completed is no more than a provision that the grant shall be void if a condition-subsequent be not performed; * * * that it is the settled law that no one can take advantage of the non-performance of a condition-subsequent annexed to an estate in fee but the grantor or his heirs, or the successors of the grantor, if the grant proceed from an artificial person, and if they do not see fit to enforce a forfeiture on that ground the title remains unimpaired in the grantee.

In what manner the reserved right of the grantor for breach of the condition must be asserted so as to restore the estate depends upon the character of the grant. If it be a private grant that right must be asserted by entry or its equivalent; if the grant be a public one it must be asserted by judicial proceedings authorized by law * * * or there must be some legislative assertion of ownership of property for breach of the condition, such as an act directing the possession and appropriation of the property or that it be offered for sale or settlement.

Upon the question of sales by the State, after failure to complete the road within the ten years, the court says:

The provision in the act of Congress of 1856 that all lands remaining unsold after ten years shall revert to the United States, if the road be not then completed, is no more than a provision that the grant shall be void if the condition-subsequent be not performed. * * * The prohibition against further sales, if the road be not completed within the period prescribed, adds nothing to the force of the provision. A cessation of sales in that event is implied in the condition that the lands shall then revert; if the condition be not enforced the power to sell continues as before the breach, limited only by the objects of the grant and the manner of sale prescribed in the act.

It was further held that where no action had been taken to assert forfeiture of the estate granted by the act, the title remains "in the State as completely as it existed on the day when the title by location of the route of the railroad acquired precision and became attached to the adjoining alternate sections."

The court therefore held that the plaintiff could not recover the logs, and, as must be apparent, the only question dealt with was the one of legal title, and of course, as the legal title (though subject to the condition-subsequent) was in the State by the grant, it would continue there until Congress took advantage of the breach of the condition by asserting a forfeiture.

This is in harmony with the text-books; the legal title is in the State or the corporation, as the case may be, and the estate may be sold, conveyed, and mortgaged precisely as though the condition was not annexed.

Washburne says, in his work on Real Property, volume 2, page 452, section 24:

An estate subject to a condition does not lose its capacity of being sold or devised in the same manner as an indefeasible estate, but the purchaser or whoever takes the estate will take it subject to the condition annexed. So in Kent's Commentaries, volume 4, pages 125, 126, it is said: "Persons who have an estate or freehold, subject to a condition, are seized and may convey, though the estate will continue defeasible until the condition be performed or released, or is barred by the statute of limitations or by estoppel."

Foxcroft vs. Mallet, 4 Howard, 353, also contains a full exposition of the law on this subject worthy of careful reading.

But Van Wyck vs. Knevals, 16 Otto, 365, is relied on as an authority that by a partial performance by the company it earns, so to speak, a proportional amount of its grant as to all the road constructed before a declaration of forfeiture in the proportion to the whole grant that the constructed portion of the road bears to the whole length of the line. The question was betwen individuals and as to priority of right in this state of case. Van Wyck entered the land April 13, 1870, and received a patent therefor November 15, 1871.

The map of definite location of the road, which gives precision to the grant, was filed in the Department of the Interior March 25, 1870, accepted the same day, forwarded to the local land office April 8, 1870, and received there April 15, 1870. In the mean time Van Wyck had made his entry, and the question was whether the filing of map or the notice at the local land office gave the right to the company to the land, Knevals claiming from the company. On that question the court held for Knevals that the filing of the map and its acceptance by the Department fixed the right.

The condition in the grant in question was as follows:

Provided further, That if said road is not completed within ten years from the date of the acceptance of the grant hereinbefore made, the lands remaining unpatented shall revert to the United States.

And on the question we are considering, the language of the court relied on by those denying the right of absolute forfeiture is as follows:

The defendant [Van Wyck] having failed to establish the validity of his own title, attacks the right of the company to the lands covered by the grant, alleging that the company never completed the construction of the entire road for which the grant was made; that after filing its map with the Secretary of the Interior it changed for part of the distance the route of the road, and that it never complied with the conditions of the law of Nebraska for the extension of its road within the limits of that State. We do not deem these objections, when considered with the facts on which they are based, as having any force. There is to them a ready and conclusive answer. Assuming that the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad, with which the company's road connected, was not, as averred by the complainant, a branch of the Union Pacific Railroad, and that therefore the company's proposed road was not entirely completed, the fact remains that the company constructed a portion of the proposed road, and that portion was accepted as completed in the manner required by the act of Congress.

Patents for some of the adjoining sections were accordingly issued to the company, and a right to all of them, not specially reserved by the condition of the grant, vested in it. So far as that portion of the road which was completed and accepted is concerned, the contract of the company was executed, and as to the lands patented, the transaction on the part of the Government was closed and the title of the company perfected. The right of the company to the remaining odd-numbered sections adjoining the road completed and accepted (not reserved) is equally clear.

If the whole road has not been completed any forfeiture consequent thereon can be asserted only by the grantor, the United States, through judicial proceedings or through the action of Congress. (Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wall., 44.) A third party can not take upon himself to enforce conditions attached to the grant when the Government does not complain of their breach.

All, then, that the court decides is that, as between the Government and the company, the title passed by the grant; it acquired precision by filing the map without regard to the question of notice; that, under the act, when the lands were patented the transaction is closed, and for the obvious reason that in the condition in the grant the act of revertitur in a declaration of forfeiture is restricted to "the lands remaining unpatented."

Let it be remembered that in the acts making these grants various powers are conferred and various restrictions on the power of forfeiture are provided, and we agree that Congress may impose restrictions upon the power to declare a forfeiture in case of default; that it may bind the Government by a limitation as to the extent of the reversion as to what lands shall be affected by the assertion of the right, and what shall be exempted from the operation of the forfeiture; further, that whatever limits the act itself or subsequent legislation imposes on the power to declare forfeiture, either as to the manner of its exercise or the extent to which it shall extend, or as to what shall be exempted from its operation, subsequent Congresses are bound.

In the earlier grants, like that to Illinois for the Illinois Central, the power to declare forfeiture was restricted to this: that if the railroad was not completed within ten years the State should pay the United States what it received upon sales by it; the title of the purchasers to remain valid; the title to the residue of the lands to reinvest in the United States as if the act had not been passed. (9 Statutes, page 467.)

In later grants, like those to Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, and other States, in 11, 13, and 14 Statutes at Large, the restriction on the power of forfeiture was, that if the roads were not completed within the time fixed "no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

Or, like the cases of the Wisconsin Central, and Lake Superior, and Michigan Railroads (13 Statutes, pages 64 and 66), where, if the roads were not completed, no further patents shall be issued to the company, and no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

Or, like the grants to Arkansas, Minnesota, and Missouri (14 Statutes, pages 83 and 87), where, if the roads were not completed as required, "the lands not patented shall revert to the United States."

Or, like the grant to Iowa (13 Statutes, 72) for the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad, "if the road be not completed within ten years, the lands not patented shall revert to the State for the purpose of securing the completion of the road, and should the State fail to complete the road within five years after the ten years, then the lands undisposed of shall revert to the United States."

Or, like the California and Oregon, and the Oregon and California grants (14 Statutes, 239), if the roads were not completed, or failed to file assent as required, "the act shall be null and void, and all lands not conveyed by patent at the date of such failure shall revert to the United States."

Or, like the Northern Pacific act (13 Statutes, 365), the Atlantic and Pacific act, and the Southern Pacific act (14 Statutes, 292), the Texas Pacific act, and the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg act (16 Statutes, 573), where the right of forfeiture was not restricted, but left as at common law (unless modified by the subsequently conferred power to mortgage, not necessary to be noticed now and here) with the imposition of further conditions, "that the United States might, in case of default, do any and all acts necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road."

Or, as in the case, in the act we are now considering, where the "estate on conditions" simply is granted, and no restriction whatever on the power of forfeiture. These different classes of conditions and restrictions on the power we are discussing show the varying moods of Congress on the question, and each case must be examined, when the exercise of the power is invoked, under the particular terms of the condition and the restriction, if any, in it, and as to them all, this clearly follows under the authorities: That where, as in this case, the grant stands on common-law grounds, without restriction on the power by act of Congress, the forfeiture restores the whole grant as it was "at the date of it, at the time of making the condition," nothing but full performance under the act, or waiver by some expressed enactment, will prevent it.

Although the attention of the learned counsel for the company was especially called to this question (and time given to examine into it), namely, the power to declare an absolute forfeiture of this grant, notwithstanding a portion of the road has been built within the time, not an authority has been produced to the committee showing or tending to show that the power does not exist; nor does the committee believe that a respectable authority can be produced, either elementary or among the reported cases decided by the courts, holding that the power to declare an absolute forfeiture is not in the grantor in cases like this where there is no restrictions in the act, or any subsequent enactment.

This, the committee think, determines the legal question, and that Congress has the power to declare full forfeiture.

But having the power, it does not follow that it ought to be exercised.

The question of proper policy, in the exercise of a wise and just discretion, is frequently more difficult of solution than the one of legal right. In this case there appears absolutely no equity or claim to favorable consideration for aid for that part of the road built.

This question in such an estate must be kept in view; that is, namely, who may exercise the right of declaring the forfeiture for breach of the condition, if it occurs? The law is uniform. There has been no divergence, no breach in the uniformity of the authorities on the question—that nobody could assert that but the grantor himself, in this case the General Government of the United States. And I make this statement here so that gentlemen may understand when remembering the case of Schulenberg and Harriman, to which attention was called by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], and the case of Van Wyke and Knevals, referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON]—that gentlemen may understand the application of those cases as I shall make it. Nobody can insist upon a declaration of forfeiture for breach of this condition except the Government of the United States itself. Both these cases are referred to and fully explained in my report in the Oregon case, which I have just read.

My report in the Forty-seventh Congress asserts all that I desire to say as to section 9.

It simply inserts another condition: In express terms, "this further condition" giving the Government all the right it could take under section 9, in addition to those it already had under section 8.

Mr. CASWELL. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PAYSON. I will if it does not anticipate what I am going on to advert to.

Mr. CASWELL. Before you depart from your construction of the grant, I wish to ask you a question for information. I understand that you say you do not regard this as a contract with the company?

Mr. PAYSON. I will anticipate the gentleman myself. It is not necessary to debate that; in the strictest acceptation of the term it is not unless the company performs; because there was no mutuality or reciprocity of obligation. I make that statement that the gentleman may understand me.

Mr. CASWELL. Section 12 provides the company shall accept within two years. You understand they did so accept?

Mr. PAYSON. I do.

Mr. CASWELL. Why does not that make a contract?

Mr. PAYSON. Because the company was not obliged to build the road unless it chose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why not a contract?

Mr. PAYSON. I am saying that because this grant is held up as a bounty to them; they either have it or are entitled to it or they are not. What I am trying to arrive at does not turn upon that question. I was led to say what I did by the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], on yesterday, in which he asserted that we had never given this railroad company nor agreed to give them an acre of ground, and made other remarks of that character which made some impression on some of the gentlemen who listened to him. Another point that was adverted to by some of the gentlemen yesterday was the omission in this act of Congress of reserving to Congress a right to declare a forfeiture. I do not know whether that would be insisted on seriously by any gentlemen within the sound of my voice. It is enough to say I have the authorities at hand here, and read them in the Oregon case. They are numerous, and there is no one to the contrary so far as I am aware; and without any affectation of learning or vanity I assert that one can not be found that holds that where there is an express condition in a deed or an act of Congress making a grant it strengthens the right of the grantor as to the power to declare a forfeiture by reserving in express terms the power so to do. In other words, if there is a condition in the grant the law implies conclusively the right on the part of the grantor to assert a forfeiture, whether there is an express reservation or not. To that doctrine the Judiciary Committee of the House committed itself in the Forty-seventh Congress in a report made by Mr. REED, of Maine, which I have in my hand, of which I shall read only two sentences.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will permit me, I do not understand that there is any contention about that. Even where it is stated in the grant that the land shall revert if the condition is not performed, yet it requires a re-entry on the part of the grantor.

Mr. PAYSON, Oh, I agree to that; but the point I am making is that no express reservation of the right of forfeiture is required, and I may say in passing that it is perhaps necessary for me to call attention to this, because it is suggested to me that the counsel for the railroad company have elaborated that point in the brief which they have filed and copies of which have been distributed among members of the House. This is what I desire to read from the report of the Judiciary Committee:

To secure this right of forfeiture it was not necessary to mention it in the act. The words "upon condition" were the only words which were needed, and they are as potent as if the words had been added, "and if these conditions are not fulfilled the lands shall revert to the United States."

That is the language of the Judiciary Committee in the Forty-seventh Congress, and that is undoubtedly the law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to another point. It was asserted earnestly by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] that it was expressly decided in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman that any railroad company getting a grant of this kind was entitled to the lands as earned lands, provided they were co-terminous with the constructed portion of the road. I deny that proposition in toto. There is not a word in that decision that even squints in that direction, not one; and the sole effect of the decision in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman is to enhance and emphasize the position which I have asserted here as to the character of an estate upon a condition-subsequent and the incidents of that estate and the parties who can take advantage of it. Without stopping to read the report (for I assume to be a little familiar with that case, it being the text-book upon which we have been acting for six years here), the case was this: Suit was brought by Schulenberg against Harriman to recover the value of certain logs which had been cut upon land which it was claimed was Government land. For the value of those logs suit was brought by the plaintiff as the agent of the State of Minnesota, he claiming that the land had been granted to the State to aid in the construction of certain railroads; that although the railroads had never been built, still the title to the lands was in the State, and that therefore an action would lie by the State through its agent, he being authorized for that purpose to recover the value of the logs which were thus severed from the land. The defendant pleaded, as against that, that although the land was granted to the State of Minnesota, it was granted upon condition that the railroad should be built within five years; that more than five years had elapsed since the date of the grant, and that not only was the road still unbuilt, but that no attempt had ever been made to construct it, and because the law provided that in case the road was not built within five years all unsold lands should revert to the United States; that by operation of law the title did revert to the United States, and therefore that the plaintiff could not maintain his suit. That is the whole case in a nutshell.

In that case the decision was simply that the estate was an estate upon condition-subsequent, that the title was in the State of Minnesota, that it made no difference whether the railroad was built or not so far as the condition of the title was concerned, that it was in the State of Minnesota, that nobody could take advantage of the failure to comply with the condition except the Congress of the United States by declaring a forfeiture for breach of the condition, that that right continued in Congress, subject to the right of the State to sell the land for the purposes named in the grant. Now it will be noticed that the provision of that grant was that all lands unsold should revert to the United States. In other cases it is provided that all unpatented lands shall revert to the United States. In some other cases, like the California and Oregon case, there is a provision for certification and a provision that all uncertified lands shall revert to the United States, while in other cases, like this which we are now considering, the power of forfeiture is absolute, there being no limitation or restriction upon it. In the Minnesota case it was decided, and very properly decided, that the title being in the State the suit could be maintained.

Mr. CASWELL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CASWELL. Should not the Government have exercised its right of forfeiture before the road was built?

Mr. PAYSON. It could have done it then.

Mr. CASWELL. And having failed to do it, then are we not estopped now by every consideration of equity from exercising that right?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir. I say no.

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen will persist in anticipating me. I will promise if I have time to reply to any question asked me, as I am ready to give my views on every possible aspect of the case.

I do not undertake to convince the gentleman, but I will give him my idea.

On the first question he asks me. I have answered it fully in the language in the Oregon report. That the election to waive the right of forfeiture or to enforce it rests alone with Congress; no Department of the Government can assume to know the intention of Congress as to its future action in cases of discretion, and therefore can not act to divest the Government of its right to the title, until Congress has declared its intention in that regard.

His last question, as to equity, involves the whole question of policy, which I shall discuss later and fully.

But resuming, to notice the cases cited by the opponents of the bill, in the case of Van Wyck against Knevals, the attempt was to reach lands that were patented. Van Wyck had bought land which had been patented to the railroad company, and the Supreme Court put its decision upon the ground that because the condition in the grant was that unpatented lands only should be subject to forfeiture, and because the lands in question were patented, therefore Congress could not interfere and the transaction was closed. They did put forward one other consideration which I ought to state, for I desire to discuss this question fully and candidly. It being a familiar rule of law that the right to a patent is equivalent to a patent issued, the court say, as to the lands lying opposite to the portions of the road which had been constructed and accepted, that the right to the patent was in the company, and that the right of the company to the lands was equally clear.

If gentlemen will examine the opinion of the court in that case, they will find that one of the salient points of the case is that the limitation upon the power of forfeiture was as to patented lands. That is all there is of it. I say here, and I challenge any gentleman who may follow me to show to the contrary, that there never has been a case decided by a Federal or a State court, as between the United States and a railroad company, where the right of the United States to declare a forfeiture ab initio for breach of the condition in the grant has been denied. No such case can be found. Every case which has been cited here by gentlemen opposed to this bill has been a case which presented a contest between individuals, an individual claiming under the general land law on one side, and by or under the railroad company on the other, and the court has always contented itself in those cases with saying that because this right to declare a forfeiture could be exercised only by Congress, and because Congress had not exercised it, therefore the title with this condition annexed rested in the party who claimed under the railroad grant, and had affixed to it all the incidents of title that a fee-simple title has, subject to this reserved right to which I have so frequently alluded.

This, sir, disposes of all the legal questions made in the cases cited by the opponents of the bill.

There are a few other questions which should be noticed.

It has been suggested that the act of 1870 giving the power to mortgage was a strengthening of the title of the lands in those who claim under the mortgage!

The act, sir, simply gave the company the right to mortgage "its property and rights of property," &c.; that is, just what it had, and nothing more, and all it could mortgage?

The Supreme Court in Farnsworth vs. The Railroad Company, 92 United States, 66, as to precisely such a case, where the right to the land depended upon the completion of the road as a condition-subsequent, which condition was operative when the mortgage was made, precisely as in this case, say:

> The mortgage not having been executed until after the amendment was accepted, and the holding of the lands of the company having been made dependdent upon the completion of the road within the period prescribed, the beneficiaries under that instrument took whatever security it afforded in subordination to the right of the State to enforce the forfeiture.

No, sir, a power to mortgage can never be held to strengthen the title of the mortgagor.

Nor does a "standing by" and permitting the road to be built affect the Government.

The road was theirs; we did not care to and did not interfere; we had given them the right of way, and were and are still willing they should have and use it, and aided them in getting it, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] has said. But that related only to the right of way, not to this grant; not at all.

Let me put it in another way: It is admitted that they have not built the Cascade branch, even now. And that they have not built the road from Wallula to Portland, 214 miles, and have practically abandoned that part of the route.

Now, sir, for this non-user of the franchise have we not the legal right to forfeit it, now and here? Unquestionably; and if so, have we not the right to the incident—the land grant?

I am only now discussing the question of power, of strict legal right.

Gentlemen say "the law abhors a forfeiture," and this is a frequent text in this case. If it were so the law would be very like the gentlemen who quote the maxim.

But it is not so; the law is the reverse, as expressly decided in the Farnsworth case (92 United States). There the court says, that while forfeiture is not favored as between individuals where compensation can be made, yet in case of public grants like this the courts can not and ought not to relieve, and that the maxim quoted does not apply.

We had the power to assert this in 1879, and the authorities I have cited show that we have it now, as a legal right, beyond question.

Should it be exercised?

That is the question of policy, and to that I now address myself.

If, sir, the road as an enterprise is worth all that it has cost, is an excellent investment for the money that is actually put into its construction and maintenance, then so far as the holders of the securities are concerned the proposed action is not inequitable to them, nor does it injure them.

As I have before said, there are only three classes of people interested in this matter—the bondholders, the preferred-stock holders, and the common-stock holders. If the property covered by the mortgage (which is all the property of the company, as well as these lands) outside the lands is ample security they can not complain; and it is.

The financial condition of the company as to bonds is this—given us by the counsel for the company:

First-mortgage bonds	$43,403,000
Second-mortgage bonds	18,857,000
Missouri Division bonds	2,233,500
Pend d'Oreille Division bonds	3,240,000
Total	67,733,500

The length of the road is 2,362 miles, an average of $28,000 per mile. This, sir, is moderate. The Atlantic and Pacific is bonded for $32,500 per mile; the Southern Pacific of California for $34,000; the Southern Pacific of Arizona for $25,000; the Southern Pacific of New Mexico for $25,000; the Oregon Short Line for $25,000. This road runs through a better country than either of the other transcontinental lines.

With the present undeveloped condition of the great West, it has always had a good balance of net earnings; after paying all its operating expenses, its interest on the bonded debt, fixed charges, &c., its net earnings have been as shown officially each year:

To June 30—
1881	$969,129
1882	1,857,465
1883	2,518,529
1884	5,425,820
1885	5,037,848

And after expending large sums for new equipment there was to its surplus account in 1882, $3,258,483; in 1883, $1,149,583; in 1885, $91,959.

It is becoming more and more valuable year by year; so the bondholders are perfectly safe.

It may be said that the sales of land have helped this. I shall show, later, that the sales of land for cash have barely paid the expenses of the land department; the preferred-stock holders have had the cream of this.

The next class are the preferred-stock holders. They are the representatives of the wreck of Jay Cooke & Co.'s failure and are amply secured by having the preference over all except the bondholders, and there is not much of this left—about $35,000,000 secured by the plan of 1875 on all lands east of the Missouri River, which we do not touch by this bill, about 10,000,000 acres, and they hold also $4,667,440 of dividend scrip, drawing 5 per cent. interest, issued to them in January, 1883. They are well provided for, the last class, and those who are actually interested are the common-stock holders. Not a dollar was ever paid into the treasury of the company by a holder of this stock, as I have shown in detail. Therefore no hardships result by this proposed action that can be justly criticised.

When this company asks for equitable treatment at the hands of the representatives of the people they should show that they are treating the people justly. This they are not doing and never have done.

They were created and assisted to build a competing through route to the Pacific. They abandon that, and make an alliance with the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company—a rival company—and abandon 214 miles of their route altogether, as I have shown.

They exact onerous and burdensome contracts from the settlers along their line.

This is one of their contracts:

Pacific Division, Land Department, Northern Pacific Railroad Company, Portland, Oreg., May —, 1883.—This certifies that ——— ———, of King County, in the Territory of Washington, hereinafter called the purchaser, has this day paid to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, hereinafter called the company, the sum of $——, being payment in full for the following described tract of land, situate in the county of King, in the Territory of Washington, to wit: ————, containing 40 acres, more or less, according to the United States Government survey; and that the said purchaser is entitled to a deed from the company conveying said above described premises (subject to the reservations and conditions herein contained) to the said purchaser, to be delivered upon the surrender of this certificate at the office, and until then this certificate shall entitle said purchaser to the full possession and occupancy of said land; reserving and excepting therefrom, however, a strip of land extending through the same (or so much of said strip of land as may be within said described premises) of the width of 400 feet, that is, 200 feet on each side of the center line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, or of any branch or other railroad operated or to be operated, in whole or in part, by the said company, to be used for right of way or other railroad purposes, in case the line of the said Northern Pacific Railroad, or of such branch or other railroad, has been or shall be located on or over or within 200 feet of said described premises; and also reserving and excepting from said described premises so much and such parts thereof as are or may be mineral lands, or contain coal or iron, and also the use, and the right and title to the use, of such surface ground as may be necessary for mining operations, and the right of access to such reserved excepted mineral lands, including lands containing coal or iron, for the purpose of exploring, developing, and working the same, and also reserving the right to take water from, over, or through the said described premises for the use of said company's successors or assigns.

It is hereby agreed that the said purchaser shall, on notice so to do from the said company, erect a good and substantial fence, sufficient to turn stock, and to comply with the requirements of law, on the line or lines between any part of said described premises and the lands reserved to the said company for right of way or other railroad purposes, as hereinbefore expressed; and thereafter, forever, the said purchaser, his heirs or assigns, shall maintain such fence or fences in a good, substantial, and sufficient manner, as above provided; and this agreement shall be expressed in the deed as a condition and a covenant to run with the land.

In witness whereof the said company has caused this certificate to be signed by the general agent of its land department for the western —— district the day and year above written.

SAM. SCHULTZ,
General Land Department, N. P. R. R.

That is what a purchaser gets in buying land from them: subject to a "condition" which may be enforced by the company as long as it shall have existence, running with the land perpetually.

The land grant is used to benefit those inside, and always has been.

The "sales" were, up to May, 1882:

For cash	$684,477
For bonds and stock	10,880,989

In 1884:

For stock	$1,725,570
For cash	715,224
Expenses	482,193

In 1885:

For stock	$1,196,484
For cash	476,631
Expenses	424,999

So the cash received barely pays the expenses and the lands are swallowed up for "preferred stock."

They make discriminations in freight which are illegal and oppressive.

Previous to March 1, 1884, the rates from Chicago to points west of Pend d'Oreille were the same as Portland tariff (from which tariff the Portland merchants received concessions, provided they received all their eastern goods via the Northern Pacific road).

The late advance is, as a rule, made by adding to this tariff the rate from Portland eastward to the local stations in the territory named, thus advancing the rates from Chicago to territory covered by over 600 miles of road in Idaho, Washington, and Oregon from 50 cents to $1.65 per 100 pounds.

This rate was in force to last year, when it was suspended temporarily, as I am told, and again enforced, but I know it was adopted and enforced.

It tells its own story of monopolistic oppression, and is confessedly unjustifiable.

They were to give us a competing line to the Pacific; they celebrated their entrance to Portland by joining the "pool."

We endeavored to procure in the Forty-eighth Congress primary evidence of this, but could not; the Senate committee did the same, but without success; but one of the live papers in Chicago, in an editorial which I quote in part, gave us some information, and the suggestions are in point:

LAND-GRABBING IGNORANCE.

Very remarkable was the ignorance displayed by the officials of the Northern Pacific who appeared before the Senate Committee on Public Lands to argue against the forfeiture of its land grant when they were asked about the anti-competitive pool which the Northern Pacific had formed with the Central Pacific. The Northern Pacific was chartered to give the Pacific coast competition, but almost the first act of its officers was to make an arrangement with the Central Pacific monopoly agreeing not to compete. But the representatives of the road protested that they knew nothing about any such arrangement. The counsel of the road was present and he coolly remarked that "he would have known of such a contract if there had been one," but he had never heard of it. Dear innocents! Fortunately we are able to supply the information about the Northern Pacific which the president and the able counsel did not have about them. We have before us a printed copy prepared for the use of the transcontinental roads of what is called "The Agreement of the Transcontinental Association." The second paragraph reads as follows:

"Resolved, That through rates via all routes to and from Portland via San Francisco and to and from San Francisco via Portland shall be the same," &c.

The fifth section reads:

"All lines here represented solemnly agree to maintain the rates now in force or which may hereafter be mutually agreed upon between San Francisco and Portland on the one hand, and eastern through or competitive points in the United States on the other hand, without cut, rebate, or deviation in any manner."

Subsequent sections provide for the appointment of a pool commissioner, who shall have authority to enforce all the details of this "solemn" agreement not to compete. He is to have copies of all the contracts made by the roads with freight shippers; he is given the power to examine the books of the roads for evidence of violation of this agreement, and is empowered to fine any roads that give the public lower than the monopoly rates, the fine in no case to be less than $500. The Northern Pacific goes so deep into the pool that it agrees to bear its proportionate share of the subsidy paid by the Central Pacific to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company as a reward for not giving the shippers of the Pacific coast lower rates by water than the Central Pacific wants to charge by land. The Pacific Mail, too, be it remembered, has been the recipient of aid from the Government, like the Northern Pacific.

On the last page of this "Transcontinental Agreement" we see the signature of—

"The Northern Pacific Railroad Company by John Muir, superintendent of traffic."

The inquiry is one that if pursued would develop some very interesting information for the people of the United States who have given hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of lands and bonds to the Texas Pacific and the Atlantic and Pacific and the Northern Pacific and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to secure the competition which this agreement is made to prevent. These corporations have failed to deliver us the competition, but they have no false modesty about insisting that they shall have the lands and the bonds.

Again, sir, they join the combination in paying their part of the subsidy to the Pacific Mail.

The people have not forgotten the contract between the Union and the Central Pacific Railroads and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company by which the whole transcontinental traffic and transportation was placed in the hands of these two railroad companies, and tribute was levied to the verge of endurance—daily extortion and robbery under the forms of law.

The contract they made which caused such a state of feeling in the popular mind, so well remembered, I have, and will print so much of it as is specially relevant:

This agreement between the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, parties of the first part, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, party of the second part, made and entered into this 4th day of March in the year 1880.

First. That the said railroad companies, in consideration of the undertakings and agreements of the said steamship company, hereinafter contained, undertake, promise, and agree to and with said steamship company to guarantee, and do hereby guarantee, that the gross earnings upon through freight and passengers between New York and San Francisco, to be provided to said steamship company by said railroad companies, shall be $110,000 per month for 1,200 tons of 2,000 pounds each way, being 600 tons for each of two steamers per month each way, and agree to pay that sum to the steamship company monthly, as hereinafter provided.

All the gross earnings of said steamers from through business between New York and San Francisco, each way, shall go to and belong and be payable to said railroad companies, whether collected by them or by said steamship company.

Second. In consideration of said undertakings and agreements of said railroad companies, the said Pacific Mail Steamship Company covenants, promises, and agrees to and with said railroad companies that it, the said steamship company, will, at its own cost and expense, dispatch and run from the port of New York for Aspinwall two through steamers per month and no more, and two steamers connecting therewith from Panama to San Francisco, and from the port of San Francisco for Panama two through steamers per month and no more, and two steamers connecting therewith from Aspinwall to New York, and that said steamship company will permit said two railroad companies to fix the rates at which all through freight between New York and San Francisco and all passengers shall be transported by the vessels of the steamship company from the port of New York to the port of San Francisco, and from the port of San Francisco to the port of New York: Provided, always, That such rates shall in no case be increased beyond the present general tariff rates of the railroad companies now existing, and will furnish room on each of said steamers from New York and San Francisco, respectively, and their connecting steamers for the transportation of, and will transport from New York to San Francisco and from San Francisco to New York, all such passengers and such freight as may be obtained under rates fixed by said railroad companies as hereinbefore provided, to an amount as to freight not exceeding 600 tons of 2,000 pounds each upon any one steamer. All above steamers to be first-class and equal to those now maintained, and in case of the loss of a steamer, or its withdrawal for any cause, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company shall, as soon as possible, furnish a steamer of equal capacity and rating.

The steamship company is to bear and pay all the expenses and charges of every kind of transporting such goods, passengers, and freight from New York to San Francisco and from San Francisco to New York, including all charges and expenses of every kind in the ports of New York and San Francisce, and all supplies of passengers with food and sleeping accommodations, giving them first-class accommodations, and to continue to use all efforts to obtain passengers as heretofore.

Third. The understanding and intention of this agreement is that the railroad companies shall have entire and exclusive control of all the through business of the said steamship company between New York and San Francisco each way, and that no through freight or passengers shall be taken except at prices to be fixed as hereinbefore provided by the railroad companies and by their consent, but if the said steamship company shall have room or capacity for more than 600 tons of through freight on any steamer and the railroad companies shall desire to fill it, they shall be at liberty to do so at rates fixed by themselves, but at the regular tariff rates then prevailing, the railroad companies to have one-half of the freights on such excess over 600 tons and the steamship company the other half.

Fourth. The said railroad companies shall have the privilege, upon the delivery of freight by the steamship company, to examine the same for the purpose and to the extent only of being enabled to ascertain whether the same is of the character described in the bill of lading thereof.

Fifth. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company shall render to the railroad companies an account or statement of the transactions for through business of each month on or before the tenth day of the succeeding month, showing the amount claimed to be due from the railroad companies under this agreement, and settlement shall be made of the accounts of each month on or before the twentieth day of the succeeding month.

The railroad companies may at any time, on demand, examine the books and accounts of the said steamship company for the purpose of obtaining full details as to freight and passengers transported by said steamship company under this agreement, and verifying the statements and accounts of the said steamship company.

But, sir, that all pretense of competition has been abandoned, and all hopes to that end must be relinquished, I read the next chapter in the history, the entering into this subsidy combination by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company:

This agreement between the Transcontinental Association, an association consisting of the following railroad companies, namely, the Southern Pacific Company, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company, the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company, the Denver and Rio Grande Western Railway Company, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, the Texas and Pacific Railway Company, the Oregon Short Line Railway Company, and the Union Pacific Railway Company, which association is now represented by L. G. Gannon, its general agent, party of the first part, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, a corporation created by and existing under the laws of the State of New York, party of the second part, made and entered into this 1st day of June, 1885, witnesseth:

First. That the said party of the first part, in consideration of the undertakings and agreements of the said steamship company hereinafter contained, undertakes, promises, and agrees to and with said steamship company to guarantee, and does hereby guarantee, that the gross earnings upon through freight and passengers between New York and San Francisco to be provided to said steamship company by said party of the first part shall be $85,000 per month for 1,200 tons of 2,000 pounds, each way, being 600 tons for each of two steamers per month each way, and agrees to pay that sum to the steamship company monthly, as hereinafter provided. All the gross earnings of said steamers from through business between New York and San Francisco, each way, shall go to and belong and be payable to said party of the first part, whether collected by it or said steamship company.

Second. In consideration of said undertakings and agreements of said party of the first part, the said Pacific Mail Steamship Company covenants, promises, and agrees to and with the said party of the first part that it, the said steamship company, will, at its own cost and expense, dispatch and run from the port of New York for Aspinwall two through steamers per month and no more and two steamers connecting therewith from Panama to San Francisco, and from the port of San Francisco for Panama two through steamers per month and no more, and two through steamers connecting therewith from Aspinwall to New York, and that said steamship company will permit said party of the first part to fix the rates at which all through freight between New York and San Francisco and all first-class or cabin passengers shall be transported by the vessels of the steamship company from the port of New York to the port of San Francisco and from the port of San Francisco to the port of New York, and will furnish room on each of said steamers from New York and San Francisco respectively and their connecting steamers for the transportation of, and will transport from New York to San Francisco and from San Francisco to New York all such passengers and such freight as may be obtained under rates fixed by said party of the first part to an amount as to freight not exceeding 600 tons of 2,000 pounds each upon any one steamer.

All above steamers to be first-class and equal to those now maintained, and in case of the loss of a steamer or its withdrawal for any cause, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company shall as soon as possible furnish a steamer of equal capacity and rating.

The steamship company is to bear and pay all the expenses and charges of every kind of transporting such goods, passengers, and freight from New York to San Francisco, and from San Francisco to New York, including all charges and expenses of every kind in the ports of New York and San Francisco, and all supplies of passengers with food and sleeping accommodations, giving them first-class accommodations, and to continue to use all efforts to obtain first-class passengers as heretofore.

Third. The understanding and intention of this agreement is that the party of the first part shall, through agents appointed by itself, have entire and exclusive control of all the through business of the said steamship company between New York and San Francisco each way, and that no through freight or passengers shall be taken except at prices to be fixed by the party of the first part and by its consent; but if the said steamship company shall have room for or capacity for more than 600 tons of through freight on any steamer, and the party of the first part shall desire to fill it, the said party of the first part shall be at liberty to do so at rates fixed by itself, but at the regular tariff rates then prevailing, the party of the first part to have one-half of the freight on such excess over 600 tons, and the steamship company the other half.

Fourth. The said steamship company, in consideration of the undertakings and agreements of the party of the first part, covenants and agrees that it will not carry any steerage passengers between New York and San Francisco, or between San Francisco and New York.

Fifth. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company shall render to the party of the first part an account or statement of the transactions for through business of each month on or before the 10th day of the succeeding month, showing the amount claimed to be due from the party of the first part under this agreement, and on or before the 20th day of the succeeding month the general agent of the party of the first part shall draw his draft in favor of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company upon each of the railroad companies constituting the party of the first part for the pprtion payable by it to said steamship company on account of the aggregate amount payable by the party of the first part to the said steamship company according to the foregoing provisions hereof. The portions of such aggregate amount payable from time to time by the respective companies forming the party of the first part shall be such as has been or may be fixed or prescribed among themselves, and each of the said companies forming the party of the first part shall be liable for its own portion of such aggregate amount, but none of such companies shall be liable for the portion payable by the others or any other of such companies.

The party of the first part, or any of the companies constituting the same may, at any time, on demand, examine the books and accounts of the said steamship company for the purpose of obtaining full details as to freight and passengers transported by said steamship company under this agreement and verifying the accounts and statements of the steamship company.

Sixth. It is mutually understood and agreed that this contract shall be deemed to have commenced on this 1st day of June, 1885, and to include the earnings from through business on steamers sailing on and after that day; and as to each and all of the foregoing provisions shall continue in force for four months from said date and thereafter until thirty days after written notice of the intention to terminate the same shall have been given by either party to the other, which notice may be given on or after, but not before, the 1st day of September, 1885, with this exception, that if the exclusive contract between the said steamship company and the Panama Railroad Company, so far as it refers to the business of the steamship company between San Francisco and New York, is broken or changed in any respect, or if any other competing line by rail or vessel shall be established between the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, either overland or via the Isthmus of Panama, that shall affect the through business concerning which this agreement is made, then the said party of the first part may abrogate and terminate this agreement at any time or not, as it may elect.

Seventh. The arrangements heretofore made between the Union Pacific Railway Company, the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in regard to freight and passengers received by the steamship company in San Francisco for transportation to Europe via Panama shall remain as at present, but the party of the first part agrees with the steamship company that the same shall be referred to their respective representatives at San Francisco, in order that if the same is found practicable an agreement may be arrived at between them on a basis permitting said steamship company to take said class of freight and passengers when and so far as it does not in any manner conflict with the business of the railroad companies forming the party of the first part overland.

This company, which now appeals to us for equitable consideration, enters into the agreement to pay the share of $1,020,000 per annum to the Pacific Mail for the privilege of fixing the rate of all passenger and freight charges between the oceans, no freight or passengers to be carried by water except at prices to be fixed by the railroads, and no steerage passengers to be carried at all.

I do not enlarge upon this state of case; it amply illustrates the adage that where combination is possible competition is impossible.

The ocean is under tribute as well as the land.

The House bill protects all settlers who have purchased from the company, validating their title to the extent of 320 acres each.

We deal equitably and liberally with this company in the House bill. They are permitted to retain 10,039,459 acres of land, much of it very valuable coal land; also all town, city, and village sites. Of the land they have conceded to them they still retain the title to over 5,500,000 acres, worth, exclusive of coal lands, at least $12,000,000; their coal lands are estimated at $8,000,000; the city, town, and village sites are worth at least $2,500,000; in all, over $22,000,000 that we give them by this bill. Repeating then what I said at the outset, this great area of land, 36,907,741 acres, worth at least $100,000,000, which this bill proposes to restore belongs, as a matter of legal right, either to the railroad company or to the people.

I have shown, sir, that under the law we have the power, the legal right, to assert this forfeiture.

I said also that if this land belongs to the people, nothing should constrain us to yield it to the company, except the strongest equitable consideration; equities which are equal to legal obligations.

With confidence I submit, that with what the House bill proposes, the liberality of its provisions in what it permits the company to retain, the facts in the history of the building of the road, and the action of the company toward the people—monopolistic, exacting, and unyielding always—I earnestly insist that to make this additional donation of one hundred millions of property would be an act of stupendous folly.

A word more, sir, and I conclude. I have endeavored to discuss this question with calmness and utter absence of passion. I have no feeling in the matter beyond that of doing my duty to the people whom I represent and the people of the whole country.

I have not attempted to inspire feeling against that company by passionate appeals or vehement declamation.

I confess I desire to see this bill pass, and by an overwhelming majority such as I believe it will receive, but every vote cast for it I desire to be directed by the reason and calm judgment of the member who casts it.

To that end I have addressed the House, Mr. Speaker, as I have, and I thank the body sincerely for the considerate kindness it has shown me in its attention this oppressive day to these observations.

But I can not close in justice to myself without noticing the closing remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin, which I see he permits to remain in the RECORD, that these efforts on the part of the Committee on the Public Lands to restore these lands to the public domain "are the sheerest demagogy and of the cheapest class."

This kind of talk is not new to us. We have had a good deal of it, sir, first and last since this work began. Not only so, sir, but predictions have been freely indulged in by gentlemen who think and act as my neighbor, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE], thinks that nothing ever could or would come of it; that no lands would ever be restored to the Government by this movement, and that it would all end in empty talk.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of pride to me that I have been connected in my way and to the best of my ability with these efforts to reclaim these vast areas of land from those technically holding them, but without right or equity. I was among the first in the matter, and am in the battle still, and expect to remain there.

I have seen the bills in the cases of the Oregon Central grant, with its 3,000,000 acres; the great Texas and Pacific grant, with its 18,000,000 acres; the Iron Mountain grant, with its 800,000 acres; the Atlantic and Pacific grant, with its 23,000,000 acres, all become laws and these great bodies of land saved to the pioneer as a practical gift from the Government, instead of being held at a price by those who had already carved out princely fortunes from the lavish grants and donations of a people's Government.

I see upon the calendars of both Houses bills from our committees which we hope to pass involving 25,000,000 of acres more, nearly all fit some day for cheap homes to landless emigrants.

The results of these laws already passed are now apparent. I have seen myself some of the benefits already accruing to the sturdy pioneer in his quest for a cheap home, and I shall be glad, sir, to see the same measure of success in the near future in Congress that has attended my efforts since I have been here.

I am not seeking popular approval except so far as that approbation is given to efforts for the public good.

Mr. Speaker, next to the confidence and esteem of the membership here my highest desire and ambition is to be connected with efforts for the benefit of the common people of this land; and in the line of this class of legislation which has come to my hand by your partiality, Mr. Speaker, in committee assignment I know I have not been unsuccessful, and I am satisfied with it. When all this work shall be accomplished or when my connection with public service shall have ceased, I venture the hope that my name shall be spoken in terms of kindly remembrance by many who know me not except through earnest, heartfelt labor for their benefit, to provide for them, without cost to themselves except their own labor, the fields which support and the homes which shelter them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has three minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY].

Mr. HENLEY. I demand the previous question on the pending amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], whose constituents are deeply interested in this matter, desires to be heard. This question ought not to be disposed of in this way without giving him a hearing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] demands the previous question upon the amendments and upon ordering the bill to be read a third time. That is the question before the House. Of course, if the House does not order the previous question further debate will be in order.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 79; noes 36.

Mr. NEGLEY. No quorum.

Mr. HENLEY. I wish to make a record on this question, and therefore I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 50 voting in the affirmative, which was more than one-fifth of those present.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 184, nays 52, not voting 86; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

During the roll-call,

Mr. FINDLAY moved by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. GILFILLAN objected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, with Mr. WHITING, until further notice.

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. WAKEFIELD, on this bill. Mr. BLOUNT would vote for the House bill, and Mr. WAKEFIELD against it.

Mr. WALLACE with Mr. LITTLE, for the rest of the day.

Mr. COLLINS with Mr. NELSON, for the rest of the day.

Mr. CARLETON with Mr. STRUBLE, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. SADLER with Mr. WAITE, for the rest of the day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] as a substitute for the amendment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to resume the title to a portion of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and to repeal in part the granting act approved July 2, 1864.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in consequence of the failure of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to construct its road from Wallula Junction to Portland, in the State of Oregon, a distance of 214 miles, over which line the said company have running connections with the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, and have abandoned the building of their own road between said points, the United States resumes the title to the lands granted to said company coterminous with said unfinished part of said road; and so much of the act making the grant of lands to said Northern Pacific Railroad Company as applies between Wallula and Portland is hereby repealed, and the said land is resumed as a part of the public domain.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask to withdraw that amendment so as to let the vote be taken on the substitute proposed by the committee.

Mr. OATES. Is that open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The previous question has been ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENLEY. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OATES. On the adoption of your substitute?

Mr. HENLEY. Yes.

Mr. OATES. If he does I will renew it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. If this vote on the substitute fails will the vote recur on the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The question will be on ordering the Senate bill to be read the third time.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 174, nays 65, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—174.

So the substitute was adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. STRAIT. I object.

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

During the roll-call the following proceedings took place:

Mr. BRUMM. I am announced as having been paired to-day, but that pair is only on political questions; and not regarding this as a political question, I have voted.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. FORAN with Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. JACKSON, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. KING with Mr. BAKER, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HITT. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HITT. At what stage of the proceedings would it be in order to move to recommit this bill with instructions?

The SPEAKER. When the question is on the passage of the bill such a motion is in order, even though the previous question has been ordered upon it.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HENLEY. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HITT. I move to recommit the bill to the committee with instructions to report the Senate bill for which this substitute has been adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that this Senate bill is just the text that the House has stricken out, and it is not in order to direct the committee to report that which the House has just rejected.

The SPEAKER. It has frequently been decided that it is not in order to move to recommit a bill with instructions to bring in a report which would not be in order if offered in the House. The House has just voted to strike out what the gentleman proposes to instruct the committee to report; hence it would not be in order to move that the Senate bill be reported as a substitute for the House bill.

The point of order is sustained.

The previous question was ordered upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. On the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 47, not voting 88; as follows:

YEAS—187.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYSON, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. ELLSBERRY with Mr. PAYNE, for the rest of the day.

Mr. LORE with Mr. MILLARD, for the rest of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HENLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. Would it be in order to move at this time that a conference be requested with the Senate on this bill?

The SPEAKER. The House can ask a conference.

Mr. PAYSON. I make the motion, then, that the House ask a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the conferees at some time during the day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I now call up the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen present may have leave to print remarks upon the amendments of the Senate to the river and harbor bill considered to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that order was made this morning on the request of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am informed by the gentleman from Kentucky that he does not think the request was granted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I have reason to believe that there will be no objection now to consider in the House the report of the Committee on Appropriations in relation to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I therefore ask consent at this time to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the Senate amendments and consider them in the House. The gentleman from Texas will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think we had better go in the regular way about this.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from Texas calls up the special order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does that take precedence of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports from committees may be permitted to hand them to the Clerk for proper reference to the Calendars.

The SPEAKER. For this day only?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Can that not be extended until to-morrow also?

The SPEAKER. It could be if asked.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Then I ask that to-morrow be included in the order.

Mr. MORRISON. Let each day take care of itself.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DAVID L. BRAINARD AND OTHERS.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1987) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RICHARD B. RIANS.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRYANT WATERS.

Mr. COWLES, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7988) granting an increase of pension to Bryant Waters; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANDREW J. ELLIOTT.

Mr. COWLES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 639) granting a pension to Andrew J. Elliott, a soldier of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HOTEL, FORTRESS MONROE, VA.

Mr. NEGLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the joint resolution (H. Res. 197) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlin to erect a hotel upon the lands of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back adversely the resolution providing for the continuance of three session messengers of the House post-office in employment one month after adjournment; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

FRANZ AND CHARLES HUNING AND OTHERS.

Mr. SESSIONS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5530) for the relief of Franz and Charles Huning and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. HIESTAND, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back adversely bills and petitions of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed, namely:

A bill (H. R. 2177) for the relief of Daniel Black;

The petition of Alexander P. Rose, of La Grange County, Tennessee;

The petition of James D. Terry, of Marshall County, Tennessee; and

A bill (H. R. 813) for the relief of Abijah B. Gilbert.

MINNEAPOLIS INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 9818) relative to the Minneapolis industrial exposition to be held annually in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, also reported back with an adverse recommendation bills of the House of the following titles; which were severally ordered to be laid on the table, and the accompanying reports printed:

A bill (H. R. 7341) to provide for the payment of the salary of the agent of the Treasury Department at New York, now employed to supervise the imprinting of internal-revenue stamps upon tin-foil wrappers; and

A bill (H. R. 7342) for the relief of John J. Crooke.

WAREHOUSING AND COLLECTION OF REVENUE.

Mr. HEWITT, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 8730) to modify existing laws in regard to warehouses and the collection of the revenue; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LONG. Has the morning hour been dispensed with?

The SPEAKER. It has not been; but the order as to the interstate commerce bill comes up without the morning hour being dispensed with.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask consent of the House that a vote be first taken on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Commerce, so that that vote may determine which one of the bills we are to amend. I make this request in order to avoid the delay consequent on amending both bills. If the House will take that vote at this time it will indicate which bill it proposes to take up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take the first vote on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Committee on Commerce, leaving the substitute if agreed to or the bill if not agreed to open to amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Texas state what his purpose is afterward?

Mr. REAGAN. The purpose is afterward to take it up by sections.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the proposition? It was not understood here.

The SPEAKER. The first vote will be on agreeing to the substitute of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HISCOCK. That I object to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The objection is made too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman from New York that he did not hear the proposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. If we can have a direct vote on the Senate bill I am in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. This will be a direct vote as between the substitute and the Senate bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. But I want to have a vote in direct terms on concurring in the Senate bill. I wish to have the question decided in that way.

The SPEAKER. Unless some amendment is offered the question now is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HISCOCK. But we can not vote on that without unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Unless some other amendment is offered that is the only amendment pending.

Mr. HISCOCK. What motion can I make to obtain a direct vote on the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. There is no way except to vote down the substitute which the committee proposes, and then the Senate bill will be before the House for consideration. But the gentleman from Texas proposes the vote shall now be taken on the substitute, leaving to gentlemen the right, if it should be agreed to, to offer thereafter amendments to the substitute; the right to do which does not exist without an agreement to that effect.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I supposed from what I had understood the gentleman from Texas to say to-day that he was not going to call up this bill, but was to let it go over until next session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. Would it be in order——

Mr. REAGAN. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered; not the previous question, technically speaking, but general debate was closed by order of the House at 11 o'clock on the last day this bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HISCOCK. Would it be in order to move as an amendment the Senate bill, adding to it a clause that it shall take effect on the 1st day of January next?

The SPEAKER. Both the Senate bill and the substitute proposed by the Committee on Commerce are before the House; and it is in order to move an amendment to either one before the vote is taken on agreeing to the substitute.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I move to amend the substitute offered by the gentleman from Texas by substituting the Senate bill with an additional clause that the act shall take effect on the 1st day of January next.

Mr. REAGAN. I suggest that that is an evasive proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question now is between the Senate bill and the substitute.

Mr. HISCOCK. But I want a vote directly on the Senate bill, and not in the form of being called on to vote down a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The question would be as between the Senate bill and the substitute.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand that; but there is just this difference: In one case I would be voting against the substitute, and of course if I voted against it I would be voting in favor of the Senate bill. But I want to vote affirmatively on the Senate bill and not by a negative vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to amend the substitute of the committee by substituting for it the Senate bill with the additional clause attached, and which he has indicated.

Mr. REAGAN. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it in order to call the previous question on that?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move the previous question on my amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Upon that I desire to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The House had agreed by unanimous consent to take the first vote on the bill of the committee. After that was agreed to the gentleman from New York now proposes a bill already pending as an amendment to the committee's bill. I submit that is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The House agreed, as the Chair supposed, on the request of the gentleman from Texas, to take a vote immediately on the adoption of the substitute, with the privilege to any gentleman thereafter to move amendments to it if it should be defeated. But the gentleman from New York rose and said he did not understand what the gentleman's request was and thereupon objected. The Chair was obliged to take the gentleman's statement of facts.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman from New York can nullify the agreement of the House in that way any other gentleman could rise and nullify any agreement by saying he had not understood the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state there was so much confusion at the time on the floor that it is not surprising the gentleman from New York did not hear the proposition.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understood the motion of the gentleman from Texas to be to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the House bill. Now the gentleman from New York moves the Senate bill with an additional clause attached to the end of the bill. Am I correct?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers as a substitute for the committee's bill the Senate bill with an additional clause.

Mr. SPRINGER. How can we strike it out at one end and put it in at the other?

The SPEAKER. But the House has not yet voted to strike it out. The vote on striking out will come afterward.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the proposition to be as it is stated by the Chair. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] to offer his amendment as a substitute—not to be added, but as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. He offers it as a substitute for the substitute, but it is a different proposition from the Senate bill, because he attaches to it another section.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The point is that the only motion the gentleman from New York can make before the motion of the gentleman from Texas is voted upon is to perfect the text of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. But no one has made a motion to perfect the text.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman's motion is in effect to perfect the text. It is simply an amendment to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. That may be the ultimate result of it, but in form it is a proposition to adopt the Senate bill, with an addition to it, as the substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. In case the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] should prevail, would there then be an opportunity for other amendments to be offered to the Senate bill? In other words, my inquiry is whether I would have an opportunity of offering amendments to the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would not, except by unanimous consent. That was the request which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] made, that after the vote amendments might still be offered to the proposition adopted, but that was not agreed to.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Then I suppose I can offer any amendment on the floor, whether in the Senate bill or not?

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, is not the demand for the previous question pending?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question on the amendment of Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, called for the yeas and nays, but before the question could be taken he withdrew the call.

The previous question was ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 33) for the relief of Alexander K. Shepard;

An act (H. R. 4139) for the relief of Thomas Sampson;

An act (H. R. 8973) to authorize the construction of a railroad, wagon, and foot-passenger bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Dubuque, in the State of Iowa;

An act (H. R. 1205) to provide for the construction of a bridge across the west channel of the Detroit River to connect Belle Isle Park with the mainland;

An act (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 1062) for the relief of Ernest H. Wardwell;

An act (H. R. 9438) appropriating money for the completion of the public building at Greensborough, N. C.;

An act (H. R. 8372) granting a pension to John E. Doggett;

An act (H. R. 758) granting a pension to Alexander Harper;

An act (H. R. 8351) for the relief of Edward Coleman;

An act (H. R. 944) for the relief of Mary Jane Conrad;

An act (H. R. 8066) for the relief of Martha A. Vorhes;

An act (H. R. 4374) to increase the pension of Samuel Frost; and

An act (H. R. 7750) to place the name of John W. Payton on the pension-roll.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 102, nays 125, not voting 95; as follows:

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CULBERSON: Papers relating to the claims of Joseph Commons, of Huntsville, Ala.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON: Memorial of the Pensacola (Fla.) Board of Trade and Exchange—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. FLEEGER: Petition of soldiers of Butler County, Pennsylvania, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of George W. Hartwell and 88 others, citizens of Lowell, Vt., for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

By Mr. HEARD: Petition of soldiers of the sixth district of Missouri, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

Also, petition of citizens of Hickory and Polk Counties, Missouri, for a pension to be granted to Herbert Vanderberg—to the same committee.

By Mr. MORGAN: Petition of Malinda M. Whaley, of Marshall County, Mississippi, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PEEL: Petition of John W. Foster, of Benton County, Arkansas, for relief; also papers in the claim of Paul Meyer—to the same committee.

By Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR: Petition of G. A. Reese, of Jefferson County, Tennessee, asking reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. MILLER: Petition of J. W. Martin and 45 others, citizens of the eighth district of Texas.

By Mr. SAYERS: Petition of E. N. Harris and 128 others, citizens of the tenth district of Texas.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 28, 1886.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I rise to present a conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota presents a conference report, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7480) "making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

S. J. R. McMILLAN,
O. D. CONGER,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ALBERT S. WILLIS,
N. C. BLANCHARD,
THOMAS J. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message from the House of Representatives received yesterday in respect to the same matter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 27, 1886.

Resolved, That the House still further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. WILLIS, Mr. BLANCHARD, and Mr. T. J. HENDERSON be the managers of the said conference on the part of the House.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed that it is the sense of the House that the item in the Senate amendment to said bill making an appropriation for the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-canal be stricken from said Senate amendment.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist on striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill the item making an appropriation for the Lake Michigan and Hennepin Canal.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist upon striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill the item making an appropriation for Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist upon striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill the item commencing with line 1446, down to and including line 1525, providing for the improvement of the Mississippi River from the head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio River.

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed to insist upon striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill so much thereof as appropriates $375,000 for continuing the improvement of the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington.

Mr. McMILLAN. A parliamentary question arises under the circumstances in regard to this bill with respect to the right of the House to make the instructions which have been read and change the character of the conference from a free conference to one with instructions to the members of the conference on the part of the House, but under the circumstances we have concluded to waive any question of that kind in the present case, as the session is so near a close and the interests of the public require, if we can, that the bill be disposed of.

I therefore move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment and grant the further conference asked by the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota what he understands by waiving the question which would arise?

Mr. McMILLAN. That I do not desire to insist upon a point of order in regard to the instructions of the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope it will be understood as the sense of the Senate that our Senate conferees will be required equally to insist upon the Senate amendments.

Mr. CULLOM and others. All of them.

Mr. ALLISON. All of them. We have just as much right to say to our conferees what they shall do as the House has to instruct its conferees what they shall do; and I hope especially where the House of Representatives have singled out items that the Senate conferees, with reference to those particular items, will feel themselves bound to insist upon the amendments.

Mr. DAWES. I think this is a matter of more consequence than its bearing upon two or three items in this bill. If this precedent is established, or if this method of instructing conferees, going into what is called a full and free conference, is in a single instance yielded to, the whole matter of conference between the two Houses ought to be abandoned, and will be abandoned.

I have no particular solicitude about these three or four items in the bill; I voted for each of them; but I say to the Senator from Minnesota that he is yielding the independence of this body when he proposes to waive and go into what he calls and comes back here and reports to be a full and free conference with other conferees who are bound hand and foot.

The Senator is yielding what is of more consequence in legislation and in intercourse between these two bodies than the whole river and harbor bill together; and I do trust that the Senate, looking to the future as well as to this bill, will not for a moment enter into a conference of that kind with conferees instructed beforehand what to do and what not to do. Never in my experience here in this body was such a proposition put upon the records of either House.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question before he sits down?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will pause for a moment. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Iowa to move instructions?

Mr. ALLISON. I will offer the following resolution——

Mr. MILLER. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. MILLER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether in his long experience there can properly be any such thing as a conference between the two Houses when one House sends their conferees to the meeting absolutely instructed that they shall do a certain thing and shall not do a certain other thing?

Mr. DAWES. I never heard it attempted before. I have heard it discussed in both branches before as a thing which could never be tolerated in a committee of conference by either side. I have heard it discussed by parliamentarians of great experience, and I never yet heard it suggested that there could be such a thing as one set of conferees going in free to concede, to consider, and to adopt modifications with another body of conferees bound not to make concessions or modifications upon the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who has a large experience, whether or not——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would like to have the opportunity of having the question presented to the Senate before the debate proceeds. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will be read, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] holding the floor.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate refuse to accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, coupled as it is with instructions to the conferees on the part of the House in respect to certain items in the amendment.

Mr. MILLER and others. That is right.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he has heard of such a proposition as a vote on the part of one House to adhere to a certain amendment to a bill?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. And whether that action of one body is not in effect precisely the action of the House in this case?

Mr. DAWES. It may be in effect the same, but a vote of adherence is a parliamentary motion of last resort, and I understand the effect of it to be a notice to the other House that as between giving up the amendment and giving up the bill the House must consider what they are free to consider in that respect. I understand that it would be competent for the Senate to-day to adhere to its amendment, and I understand that so long as the record of a vote of adherence is upon the Journals of the Senate there is nothing for the House to consider but whether they will take that amendment or lose the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Let me ask the Senator if the Senate should adhere to one amendment and then conferees should be apppointed on the remainder of the bill, or what would practically be the remainder of the bill, is it still a free conference?

Mr. DAWES. It is a free conference on the remainder of the bill, and it is to a conference alone that the remainder of the bill would be committed. Notice would be given to the other branch that this branch had voted to adhere to that amendment, and that as to all other amendments they were ready to go into a full and free conference; but it is a notice to the other branch that we do not desire to go into a conference upon that to which they have voted to adhere. It is a clear distinction, and it is a clear parliamentary path to be trod; but at this moment I should rather vote to adhere to the amendment which substituted this matter than to be left hereafter to the continual plague that would be about us whenever an appropriation bill with many items in it should ever come to that stage when a conference between the two Houses was proper.

I think a further consideration in another quarter of the position in which they have put themselves will show to them that they have taken a step which puts an end to all full and free conference between these bodies, and it is better to retrace when you can a step which may have been taken without due consideration or with too much hurry than to leave it upon the record in the condition in which it is.

Mr. FRYE. I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts, and only asked him these questions to call the attention of the Senate to the parliamentary condition of the bill and to the difference between adhering and the action of the House on the bill.

I am not in favor of a vote of the Senate to adhere to the amendments which it has made, for the reason that I am opposed to all the amendments myself, and voted against them both in committee and in the Senate; but I am in favor of the proposition of the resolution presented by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], which is of adherence in a parliamentary point of view. I think that resolution ought to be passed, and that the House should understand the position which the Senate takes in relation to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like for my own instruction in parliamentary law to know what the real moral and legal difference is between a general insistence upon all the amendments, which each House d es usually do, and an insistence which simply specifies particular items. In one case we determine to adhere to A, B, C, and D, the several amendments, and in the other the House a little more formally and emphatically declares that its conferees are instructed to insist upon A, B, C, and D.

As to the matter of instruction, my memory was to the effect that this had been done, as I had known it to have been done in the other House.

I am fortified by a person whose memory and whose experience are a great deal older than mine, and than that of any of us, that this thing has been done in both Houses more than once. I do not think it is an adherence. It is simply an emphatic insistence. That is all there is to it. In one case the ordinary language is used to insist upon the amendments. In this case they resolve to insist upon A, B, C, and D. The door is not closed to a conference by the action of the other House.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I understand the resolution of the Senator from Iowa to be an amendment to my motion that the Senate further insist upon the amendment and grant the further conference asked by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to state that under the decisions of the Senate made by a very large majority the motion of the Senator from Iowa would not be in order. Under the rules of the House they have the right to give instructions to their committees, and that is occasionally done, and has been done in a recent case.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish we might hear the resolution of the Senator from Iowa once more read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read. The Chair has a case before him where the Senate have decided that this motion would not be in order. The resolution of the Senator from Iowa will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate refuse to accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, coupled as it is with instructions to the conferees on the part of the House in respect to certain items in the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I think that practically we have done the same thing in the Senate which has been done in the House, and my recollection is that it has come about in this way, that a motion has been made to recede from the Senate amendments, and then to vote it down almost unanimously. I think that has been done over and over again to show the sentiment of the Senate. Perhaps we have not instructed our committee of conference, but we reached it in another way on former occasions.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the parliamentary attitude of this matter to be this, that the two Houses, in the first place, have disagreed in regard to certain Senate amendments, and that the two Houses have each insisted upon their respective positions. Everybody understands the parliamentary difference between such a motion and a motion to adhere, which means that the House adhering will not further consider the proposition of the other House. That of course puts an end to anything like a free conference, but a free conference takes place after an insistence.

Mr. MILLER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator does not certainly state the position of affairs just as they are. He may not have heard the message from the House read.

Mr. HOAR. I have read it carefully three or four times.

Mr. MILLER. It is in effect that the House instructs its conferees not to consent to a certain amendment made by the Senate. It is not a general insistence.

Mr. HOAR. I have read it three or four times over. I was coming to that point. I differ from my honorable friend in his interpretation of it.

The House of Representatives has taken special action since the last disagreement between the two Houses in regard to several of these items. In regard to the first it instructs its committee "that it is the sense of the House that the item in the Senate amendment to said bill making appropriation for the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-canal be stricken from said Senate amendment." That is nothing more than ordinary non-concurrence in an amendment. That would appear even if that had not been specially called to the attention of the House. It is merely emphasizing the parliamentary attitude.

In regard to the other three items there is a different form, which is this:

Resolved, That the managers of the said further conference on the part of the House be, and they are hereby, instructed—

Not to adhere, but only—to insist on striking out from the amendment of the Senate to said bill the item making an appropriation for the Lake Michigan and Hennepin Canal.

That is not a direction to these persons to adhere, but is a direction to the committee to maintain what is the attitude of the House itself; the attitude of insistence, which in parliamentary language only means and imports a present opinion, and not a determination that they will not depart from that opinion in the future.

Although it is a little irregular, so far as the practice of the Senate is concerned, as the Senator from Ohio occupying the chair well said, it has been settled that while it is not the practice of the Senate to accompany a free conference with instructions, yet it is the established practice in the other House.

In 1874, the question having come up in the Senate on the salary bill passed at the end of the preceding year, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] had read to the Senate a summary of the precedents on that subject, which was understood to have been drawn up by Mr. Murphy, the Reporter, who is very well acquainted with the parliamentary practices of the Senate, and I should like to send that to the desk and have it read. I ask the Secretary to read the passage beginning in fine print.

Mr. CULLOM. Before that is read, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he regards the conferees on the part of the House as having any freedom at all in the consideration of the items which are specified in the particular resolutions.

Mr. HOAR. In answer to that question, I suppose the conferees on the part of the House would be required in the first place to insist upon this attitude of the House, but that they would be at perfect liberty to report to the House that having insisted and communicated the attitude and purpose of the House, they had been led by the general attitude of the bill or the reasons suggested by the Senate conferees to report to the House that in their judgment it was not expedient for the House further to maintain that attitude, and that it would be wise for the House to withdraw from its disagreement. I ask to have the paper read which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to say to my colleague——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will first read what has been sent to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

An examination, extending back but a few years, shows two instances in direct opposition to the ruling of the Senate on the 3d of March last.

At the first session of the Thirty-eighth Congress, the committee of conference upon a bill "to increase the internal revenue and for other purposes" having reported on the 1st of March, 1864, to the House of Representatives their inability to agree, a resolution was offered by Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, as follows:

"Resolved, That the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments to House bill No. 122, and that the House request of the Senate another committee of conference on the said bill; and it is hereby declared to be the judgment of this House that in an adjustment of the differences between the two Houses on the said bill, there should be an additional duty of not less than 20 nor more than 40 cents per gallon imposed on spirits on hand for sale." (Congressional Globe, page 892, part 1, first session Thirty-eighth Congress.)

A question of order being raised, the decision of the Speaker (Mr. Colfax) was as follows:

"The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the House of Representatives has the power to instruct any committee which it authorizes to be appointed. It is a judicious check upon the power of the Speaker in appointing committees. They have a right to instruct a committee of conference as they have a right to instruct a standing or a select committee. The gentleman from Illinois moves this himself as a resolution. It seems, however, susceptible of division, first, upon asking another committee of conference, and, secondly, upon the instructions. As to the right to move instructions the Chair has no doubt. (Congressional Globe, part 1, first session Thirty-eighth Congress, page 892.)

The decision of the Speaker was acquiesced in by the House, no appeal being taken, and the resolution of Mr. Washburne was agreed to.

On the following day, the action of the House of Representatives having been communicated to the Senate, the Senator from Ohio, Mr. SHERMAN, offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the conference requested by the House of Representatives be agreed to; and that the conference heretofore appointed by the Senate be instructed to agree to proper amendments to the Senate amendments disagreed to by the House, providing for a tax of not exceeding 20 cents a gallon on spirits on hand for sale." (Ibid., page 900.)

The late Senator from Maine, Mr. Fessenden, at once suggested a doubt as to the resolution being in order; to which the Senator from Ohio replied as follows:

"I have not examined for precedents, but I think there can be no doubt of the power of the Senate to instruct its conferees on any point. It is a question of discretion. Ordinarily it would not be done; but there have been two conferences on this disagreement, which has all grown up out of one difference. The House of Representatives have now expressed their opinion on that difference, and I think the Senate ought also to do so." (Ibid., page 900.)

Mr. Fessenden then raised the question of order directly for the decision of the Chair, and the Vice-President, who is now Senator from Maine, Mr. Hamlin, gave his decision in the following words:

"The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair can have no doubt that the resolution proposed by the Senator from Ohio is in order. Conferences are of two characters—free and simple. A free conference is that which leaves the committee of conference entirely free to pass upon any subject where the two branches have disagreed in their vote, not, however, including any action upon any subject where there has been a concurrent vote of both branches. A simple conference—perhaps it should more properly be termed a strict or a specific conference, though the parliamentary term is 'simple'—is that which confines the committee of conference to the specific instructions of the body appointing it. The Chair therefore rules that the resolution is in order."

In the discussion which ensued the Senator from Ohio said:

"The Senate might very properly object to any action by the Senate conferees which was not strictly within the parliamentary rule, but the Senate itself may, by its instructions, enlarge the power of the committee. There is no doubt about that. There is no limit to the power of the Senate over its committees. It may authorize its conferees to agree to amendments to its amendments, which might not be in order if those amendments to the amendments came directly from the conferees without the action of the Senate. That is the view all the conferees took, although they differed on the question of parliamentary law." (Ibid., page 900.)

In the course of the debate, Mr. Hendricks, of Indiana, said:

"I agree with the decision of the President of the Senate that it is competent to instruct a committee of conference on the part of the Senate." (Ibid., page 902.)

Again he said:

"In respect to the questions of disagreement, the Senate may instruct its part of the committee, but outside of the questions of disagreement the Senate can not instruct that committee, for the reason that that is not one of the modes of legislation known to parliamentary usages. * * * The Senate may instruct the committee upon all the questions that were referred to that committee, but not upon other questions." (Ibid., pages 902 and 903.)

From this view of parliamentary law no Senator dissented, although the debate on the subject-matter extends over many pages of the Congressional Globe.

The result of the debate, which was quite protracted, was the rejection of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, although no one doubted the right of the Senate to instruct the conferees, and the adoption of the following resolution offered by Mr. Conness, of California:

"Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant, proposing instructions to the conferees, and ask another free conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 122) to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes." (Ibid, page 907.)

The House of Representatives having agreed to a further free conference, the conferees on again meeting were unable to agree, and the bill was disposed of by the Senate receding from its amendments.

The proceedings in this case, as in that which follows, are recorded in the Journal, but the Congressional Globe is quoted from, because it contains the details of the points raised, with the decisions made and the debate thereon, instead of the Journal, which merely records the votes.

At the first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress an amendment was added by the Senate to the sundry civil expenses appropriation bill increasing the pay of Senators and Representatives and taking effect retroactively from the beginning of that Congress. This amendment was disagreed to by the House of Representatives, but they amended other Senate amendments by the addition of a provision granting bounties to the soldiers of the war of the rebellion. Two committees of conference were unable to agree upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and when the second disagreement was recorded the Globe shows these proceedings occurred:

"Several SENATORS. What shall be done?

"Mr. SHERMAN. There is but one point of difficulty. The Senate conferees proposed to recede from the amendment in regard to the pay of members, but found that that was not at all in the way; that could be laid out of view; the only difficulty is in regard to the question of bounties. The House insist upon some legislation being had in regard to the bounties, and their conferees submitted a proposition which we did not feel at liberty to accept. I will say that the proposition submitted is much more moderate and much more reasonable than any I have yet seen; but we considered that the action of the Senate did not leave us at liberty to accept it." (Congressional Globe, Thirty-ninth Congress, first session, part 5, page 4246.)

And subsequently the Senator from Ohio suggested:

"The Senate may instruct the conferees." (Ibid., page 4247.)

Whereupon Mr. Trumbull, then a Senator from Illinois, moved

"That the committee of conference be instructed to agree to that proposition of the House." (Ibid., page 4247.)

Meaning the proposition which had been stated in detail by Mr. SHERMAN as having been made by the House conferees.

A modification of the terms of the proposition having been suggested by Mr. Doolittle, Mr. Trumbull said:

"The proper motion, I suppose, would be to recommit the report to the committee with instructions to agree to that proposition." (Ibid., page 4247.)

No point of order was raised, no doubt was suggested by any Senator as to the power of the body to instruct the conferees; and the motion having been stated, amendments to the instructions were moved, and finally, the question recurring on the motion of Mr. Trumbull, it was agreed to by a vote of yeas 28, nays 5. (Ibid., page 4248.) And on the very same page of the Globe it appears that the conferees immediately made a report conformably to the instructions of the Senate, and it was agreed to and the bill disposed of.

Mr. HOAR. I merely wish to add that I have no doubt a large majority of the Senate do not desire and do not mean that this bill or any item in it shall be defeated by any difference of opinion or controversy or quarrel stirred up between the two Houses on a side issue not relating to the merit of the bill or the merit of the items. I feel quite sure that if the Senate shall adopt the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce he will feel himself bound to maintain the position of the Senate as to all the items of the bill with the same zeal as if he had gone into a conference entirely instructed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Massachusetts is entirely right.

Mr. DAWES. No one ever doubted the parliamentary power of the two bodies to create a special committee of conference, a committee of conference for a special purpose, to do a special thing, and to accomplish that by the form of instruction or in the manner in which the committee is appointed; but I assert again that there can not be found a precedent where either body has yielded what to it was a committee of full and free conference with another committee that was not capable of entering into a full and free conference. It is perfectly competent for us (the parliamentary law I do not doubt and never did) to instruct a new committee like the committee which is tendered to us here, bound hand and foot, and send the two to meet each other face to face, the one instructed to insist upon a particular line of conduct and the other instructed to insist upon an opposite line of conduct. But what the Senator from Minnesota proposes is not that.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask my colleague a question? Suppose the House had simply prayed for a free conference and nothing more, having itself insisted, would not the committee by all parliamentary law and usage go into the conference exactly as they do now, instructed themselves to insist?

If my colleague will pardon me with one sentence not a part of my question, but that my point may be understood, I have heard Senators here state that they were bound in honor to insist on Senate amendments the majority of which they themselves disapproved of, merely from the fact of having been appointed to represent the Senate. There is one case in my mind which my colleague will recollect, of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] resisted with very great earnestness, with all the force of which he was capable, an amendment to an Indian appropriation bill some years ago, providing for a large expenditure for Indian education. Thereafter he was appointed a member of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, and he went into that conference and insisted upon that amendment to which he had been personally opposed with as much zeal and loyalty and strength as if it had been an amendment of his own creation; and I wish to say that in my judgment the great progress which has been made in Indian education, which has delighted the friends of the Indians throughout the country since that time, has been very largely due to the thorough honor and loyalty with which that Senator stood by the proposition he had not originally approved. So these conferees of the House, without this thing, could go into the conference instructed exactly as they will be now.

Mr. DAWES. If my colleague had added to that long explanation this single sentence he would have answered himself, that the Senator from Kansas after having insisted as he felt bound in honor to do on that vote after that yielded to a modification of it; and he would have said merely this, that every conferee is bound in honor to maintain the position of the body that appoints him, but to maintain it subject, however, to deliberation on the whole, subject to perfect freedom, to consider whether on the whole it is not best to concede either some portion or the whole of the proposition that he was sent out to maintain. He is bound, but he is not bound absolutely; he is bound to maintain it under the limitations that the conferees who are sent over here have not upon them, that is after having considered the matter fairly to yield such modifications as their judgment shall dictate.

My colleague thinks that the House, after having insisted upon a disagreement to the whole of this amendment of the Senate, when they went further and instructed their conferees in addition to the insistence upon the whole, to do a particular thing, did not add at all to the original vote. I guess the House does not understand it so. I do not think anybody over there understood it so, and I do not understand it so now. If the Senate is disposed to instruct its conferees, then its conferees will stand upon an equality, and they will go into the conference and show their credentials and act accordingly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. What does the Senator from Minnesota propose?

Mr. DAWES. He proposes to concede a committee of conference which on our part will be free and full to a committee proposed by the other branch which is instructed to do a particular thing.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask him whether the action of the House has not been merely to permit their conferees to yield any differences that exist on all other points and to maintain their former position in the points in controversy specified in the resolutions?

Mr. DAWES. It does not make any difference in parliamentary law whether it is a big thing or a small thing that they have instructed them upon.

Mr. MCMILLAN. No; but——

Mr. DAWES. The question is whether they send their conferees here just as free as the Senator from Minnesota proposes to send out ours.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to inquire if the resolution of the Senator from Iowa is before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate, but simply to say that if the action of the House in reference to those particular amendments means anything, it means to strengthen their conferees in opposing the particular items which are mentioned in the resolutions from the other House. But if that action does not take those items out of the question of conference, then, so far as I am concerned, I care not whether the resolution of the Senator from Iowa is adopted or whether the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is adopted.

The thing that I desire to emphasize in the Senate is that the Senate conferees shall stand by the action of the Senate on all the amendments that the Senate has placed on the bill, and if they construe the action of the House in the instruction that was given to the House conferees as a taking out of the conference those particular items, then, so far as I am concerned, I am unwilling to vote simply for a general vote of insistance, but want some action on the part of the Senate that will place the Senate squarely as against the action of the House on those particular things. But the chairman of the committee, I suppose, will regard the action of the Senate heretofore as instructions to him and to his committee to stand by all the amendments that the Senate made to the bill; and if that is the understanding, I do not know that it is very material, so far as practical results are concerned, which action is taken by the Senate at this time.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this is not the first time that victories won upon the field were in danger of being lost by diplomacy. The enemies of the river and harbor bill, I assume, will hail with satisfaction any emergency that will prevent any further conference between the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate; and I should regard the adoption of the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa as a summary and final disposition of this bill. Such I do not assume to have been the object or purpose of the Senator in offering the resolution, but he can see as well as the rest of us can that it would be the black flag. It would be an announcement to the House of Representatives that unless they go through with the formality of backing out of the cul de sac in which they have placed themselves, there will be no conference on this bill. If that suits him, it suits me.

But I wish to state as a parliamentary proposition that I can see no difference in the attitude of the House in instructing their conferees to insist upon striking out these five amendments from what it would have been if they had said to their conferees "we insist that you shall endeavor to prevail upon the Senate to strike out all their amendments." In voting to insist upon our amendments, we simply act upon the whole in gross. The greater contains the less. And the House of Representatives in saying that they disagreed to all the amendments of the Senate and asked for a further conference, merely have ventured to express their opinion in rather an unusual way upon five of the amendments about which I suppose they desired to have a public declaration that they are particularly opposed to them.

If the House of Representatives, instead of passing the five particular resolutions that they have adopted, had declared that it was the sense of the House that the managers be instructed to insist on striking out all the Senate amendments, nobody would have objected. That would have been merely in a more formal way what they would have done any way by simply insisting on their refusal to concur in our amendments and asking for a further conference.

But I think it would be well instead of allowing our conferees to go into this conference upon this formal action of the House of Representatives on these five amendments, to express our opinion about these five amendments; and I am particularly interested in the appropriation for the improvement of the Potomac River, and if I am in order I will move that it is the sense of the Senate that the managers on the part of the Senate in the conference hereafter to be granted upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 7480, insist upon retaining the Senate amendment appropriating $375,000 for continuing the improvement of the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington.

That will relieve the conferees from any embarrassment so far as the action of the House is concerned, as it will be offset by the action of the Senate, and therefore the conference would be full and free on that item.

Mr. CULLOM. I move to amend that by adding the other four items that are objected to by the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us take them one at a time.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is done I desire, if I can, to withdraw the resolution which I offered. Of course I am as anxious for the passage of this bill as the Senator from Kansas, and I do not wish by any action of mine or any resolution of mine to impede the natural progress toward a conclusion of this bill satisfactorily to the Senate. I also yield to the judgment of the Senator from Kansas with reference to the proprieties of this particular resolution, so that I withdraw my resolution, if I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his resolution. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to grant a further conference.

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir. I have moved to amend.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or rather to instruct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to amend the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly I have so moved. I think the Reporter has my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposed it was a motion to amend the resolution of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; his motion was to amend the motion to agree to the conference.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Secretary has not the amendment I propose to offer, I will submit it again. I suppose the Reporter took it down. I had not written it. I will restate it:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the managers on the part of the Senate in any conference hereafter granted upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 7480, insist upon retaining——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is impossible for the Secretary unless he is a short-hand reporter to write so fast. Will the Senator write it himself?

Mr. EDMUNDS. While the Senator from Kansas is preparing his amendment I would like to say a word.

If the Senate and the House of Representatives desire to pass any river and harbor bill and for objects that in the main all parties on all sides of the Chamber would be glad to appropriate money for, the simple way to do it now is for the Senate to agree to the four propositions of the House omitting the Potomac River business, with an amendment which shall take out of the text of the House bill or now out of the text of our amendment the Muskingum business and the Barren River business in Kentucky, and subjects that ought to be considered separately and by themselves and without passing in this action any judgment upon the propriety of them intrinsically one way or the other, and the same in regard to the Portage Lake and the Sturgeon Bay and the Hennepin Canals and so on and so on. That would leave the bill then, like most of its predecessors, a pure and simple river and harbor bill for carrying on existing works and opening some new ones upon natural rivers and natural harbors that now exist; and while the bill would still contain many items that I should not be willing to vote for as unnecessary and going too far to localities, still its main objects would be such and the proportionate amount of good expenditure would be so great that I believe it would become a law and the public work would go on.

But it looks to me exactly as if when we attempt to ride into these appropriation bills new schemes, opening new enterprises, no matter how good they are, which are not adapted to the existing rivers and harbors of the United States as our fathers understood them to be, we seem to be working to the end of breaking the whole thing down and doing nothing at all. I suppose it would be perfectly useless to make such a motion, but I think it right to state it.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I can not understand the reasoning of the Senator from Vermont. He says the Senate inserted certain things which might be left out as not being improvements of rivers and harbors. There is not one of the things that he mentioned by name which is not an improvement of the rivers and harbors as fully and as absolutely as any item in any of the bills. I illustrate by one of the things mentioned, the Portage Lake Canal. The object of this is to make a perfect harbor of refuge at each end of that passage-way, one of which the Government has entered upon the construction of by granting land, and has made it a harbor of refuge, and the only harbor of refuge there is for hundreds of miles on the worst part of Lake Superior. Another is the case in regard to the Sturgeon Bay Canal, which in the last appropriation bill and this appropriation bill and every appropriation bill has had aid for making a harbor of refuge by this Government independent of the company's works in deepening the channel across this point. A part of the appropriation for the Hennepin Canal is work upon the Illinois River connecting it as it now is with Lake Michigan by the canal already built and already in use, just as much as the Keokuk Canal, the Louisville Canal, the Sault Ste. Marie, or the Muscle Shoals Canal.

There is no more reason why Congress should make two or three million dollar appropriations to construct a canal through some 30 miles of rocky falls in the Tennessee River than why it should provide for a canal or a harbor of refuge already built, already used, already subjected to tolls; and the only object in putting these items in this bill is to do as we did with the Louisville Canal, and as we did with the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, make a free canal.

On Lake Champlain we are spending thousands of dollars of money in making a harbor of refuge where the lake is only 6, 7, 8, or 10 miles wide, where there is no danger from storms, at the Senator's own home, where the water is deep enough, where there are no rocks in the way, but the Senator here and before the committee urged that appropriation on principle, and yet refuses to let a harbor of refuge exist on the stormy shores of Lake Superior or of Lake Michigan. Usually accurate, usually logical, I insist that the Senator in his remarks here misstates the case. What is the necessity of the $35,000 put on to this bill by the urgency of the Senator from Vermont, when he attacks the open harbors, the useful harbors of refuge assisted in building by this Government on Lake Superior and on Lake Michigan along a coast where the ribs of vessels destroyed for lack of a harbor of refuge to-day lie rotting in the sand.

Sir, the question ought to be, what does the navigation of the country require? At how small and how trifling an expense can we free that navigation from tolls which are onerous in one part of the country, when we have free navigation in other parts of the country? There is no logic in it; there is no reason in it; there is no liberality in it. The question is not one of locality. The question is one of advantage to commerce, to navigation, of the safety of the lives of the sailors, of the protection of the property that goes upon vast fleets around Lake Superior and along Lake Michigan, and to give them, as this Government has attempted to do, by granting land to aid in building these harbors of refuge, to give protection to life and property, which is demanded by the resolutions of five States, by the resolutions of three hundred chambers of commerce, by the petitions of 5,000 navigators and those interested in navigation on Lake Michigan and on Lake Superior.

I can not believe that men who know the wants of that region can be driven from supporting them because a Senator, living on his little inland lake, urges the committee to increase even the House appropriation for a harbor of refuge on a lake that is itself a harbor of refuge! Oh, sir, if we had any place on Lake Superior or on stormy Keweenaw Point where we could run into, a place landlocked as Lake Champlain is, we could wait and wait for the assistance of this Government.

That is the condition. Why should the Senate, in view of the kind of advantage it is to commerce and navigation, relinquish its judgment upon these subjects although the House may ask it? Why should we give two, three, or four hundred thousand dollars to improve harbors which have been used since the country was discovered, along the Atlantic coast where there is access, in order to make them two or three feet deeper, and deny to the great, growing, increasing commerce (increasing beyond all extent and beyond all comparison) upon the great lakes what it needs? Why should we withhold and refuse that little pittance which is asked here to make for the navigation of the lakes these free harbors of refuge and these free channels which are now used?

I do not believe that Senators who desire this bill to be passed for the benefit of navigation all over the country, embracing objects which are useful in all parts of the country, will yield, or will instruct any committee to yield, so plain, palpable, and desirable objects as the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote has placed in this bill.

Why is it, sir, that the protection of navigation in the North and in the Northern States and along the great lakes is the object of attack here? When have the representatives of the North ever shown any opposition to the improvement of every river from the Father of Waters down to the meandering stream of the South where we had to cut away the trees that overhung the banks to permit the passage of vessels, even where there was water enough? I for eighteen years or more in the House and in the Senate have had to do with this question of improving water navigation in all parts of the country, and I defy any man here or elsewhere or anywhere to show that I have ever looked upon these appropriations with reference to sectional feeling or locality. If a place was worthy of improvement for the good of the people along the banks of a river, or for the protection of navigation along the shores of the ocean or Gulf or lake, these interests have found a firm and I believe a consistent friend in me, and they will continually.

But, sir, there seems to be some rule about this, that the importance of the subject, the interest of navigation, wherever it may be found, is to be considered by all members of the Senate alike, and that there shall not be one rule to make great appropriations for one region of country and either in the House or in the Senate a rule which shall condemn the sailor and the vessel-owner and the owners of the cargoes to the uncertainties and to the vicissitudes and to the dangers of shipwreck and the loss of life and of property wherever vessels sail and wherever steamboats run.

There is something more in this question of improving the water communications of the country than mere local desire. It is a question affecting the empire; and wherever commerce can be gathered from one river to another by a little canal, as at Keokuk, or as at Louisville, or as at the Sault Sainte Marie, or as in Romely Marsh, or as in the Tennessee River or the Cumberland River or any other river, it is proper for us to extend the aid of the National Government. And where there are works which have been carried on by this Government aid, and the judgment of Congress is that the facility of navigation demands the assistance of the Government, it should be further extended. There are places where railroad transportation meets water transportation which demand the assistance of the Government, and there, in my judgment, the Senate and the House should agree to give whatever is reasonable and fair, and finally appropriate it to improve the general water courses of the country; whether by making canals up through rocky falls and rapids, or whether by paying a small sum to free from toll those already made, the principle is the same. I insist that we should be guided in our votes and in our judgment by the great demands of the country, and among those demands I venture to say that none is more meritorious than that of the great West with its teeming acres of grain and of cattle and of produce to be transported—the great West when it comes here and demands that between one system of navigation, the Mississippi River, and the lakes there shall be a canal, longer perhaps than the Tennessee Canal, which is only 20 miles long; longer than the Louisville Canal, which is only 2 or 3 miles long; longer than the Keokuk Canal, which is 5 or 6 miles, but which we are improving above where the canal was put by deepening the channel of the Mississippi itself.

Wherever the object is worthy, wherever the connection of one system of navigation with another cheapens transportation, I know of no set rule to prevent our granting aid. The objects of the regulation of commerce and the powers given in that connection are not to do this thing or that thing, not to make this canal or to blast out all the rocks of that river, or to make connection between the upper part and the lower part of it; the object is to regulate commerce; and if by cutting a new channel you can connect two rivers that do not flow in continuous lines, it is as legitimate and as reasonable as it is to make a canal 20 miles long or 1 mile long to connect the lower part of a navigable river with the upper navigation of that river. The benefit to commerce and navigation is the object. That being kept in view, under the power to regulate commerce if we have power to pass any river and harbor bill at all, we have power to do it where in the judgment of the Senate it will be of important value to transportation and to commerce. And I venture to say there is not put into this bill by this Senate—and it has been by yea-and-nay votes—these important works without the full consideration that the growing demands of the country, the interests of commerce, of navigation, of safety all demanded that in the proper time and in the proper amounts these improvements should be made.

Allusion has been made—and I renew the allusion—to the fact that along the northern boundary line that extends from Puget Sound to Montreal the British Government, by the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars, has constructed one of the best-constructed railway beds and railroads ever built on the continent. It runs right alongside of our line. It is the bid of England to get away the traffic of the Pacific Ocean from our borders and from going through our land. All these improvements in the northern lakes—the Hennepin Canal, the Illinois Canal, the Portage Lake Canal—all these are in aid of navigation and of transportation across this continent. Shall we forego the opportunity, at a small expense by commencing works of this kind, of preserving within our own borders this commerce and this transportation which belong to our country and which will so much enrich it?

Mr. President, if one will look at the course of transportation in this world from the earliest history down to the present time, he will find that that nation in the Orient or in Europe, or in any part of the Old World or the New that controls the passage of transportation and the commerce that passes back and forth rules this world. Any nation that kept control of it were the most prosperous in the world. The ruined towers and columns of Palmyra and Baalbec recall the time when transportation from India to Europe passed by caravans through that country, and then Persia and Phenicia were the ruling powers of the world. Finally that route was changed. The great general Alexander made Alexandria the depot for commerce by the Red Sea, and the caravans went out from there on the voyage across the continents of the Old World. Then for a time Egypt controlled. Then Holland, by the discovery of a passage around the capes, commenced that transportation which destroyed the caravan transportation. Venice first, and then Holland, had the control; and for the time being Holland ruled the world. Then England got possession of those means of communication and to-day England, a little island circumscribed and almost powerless in itself, has control of the commerce and the navigation and the transportation of the products of the world from one country to another. This it is which gives England that supremacy which she has earned.

Now, sir, we are here between two oceans midway betweeen the East and the West, the Orient and the Occident, able to control this commerce. Its natural passage is through our country and it should be under our control; and for a paltry difference of opinion we are to give that up and let it remain with England where it is to-day.

Sir, there are higher and more important considerations than the building of this canal, or the improvement of that river, or the deepening of the channel into this harbor or that; they are worthy of care and of thoughtful consideration by the Senate; and they are involved to a greater or less extent in the very questions which are under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I propose to amend that proposition by adding that the conferees on the part of the Senate shall insist on the amendment adopted by the Senate relative to the Mississippi River. I would say, however, in the outset that the best way would be not to instruct the committee at all, but to leave it to their discretion to do what they think best. I offer this amendment, however, notwithstanding the fact that the bill as it came from the House of Representatives appropriated two million and a quarter for the improvement of the Mississippi River, while the bill as adopted by the Senate appropriated only $1,600,000, a difference of quite $600,000 in favor of the House bill.

I do this because the House bill as it appears to me is inconsistent, illogical, and tends to a discontinuance of the work on the Mississippi River, and is directly in opposition to the reports of the engineers employed on the river.

The House bill provides that the appropriation shall be limited to the improvement of the work from Plum Point reach to Lake Providence reach. General Gillmore, whose engineering ability is well known to all Senators, particularly desires that that amendment should not be adopted. He says the Plum Point reach and Lake Providence reach have been improved to the extent desired by the commission for the present. I propose to incorporate an extract from this letter on that subject in my remarks. I will read it to the Senate if they will give me their attention:

It is neither desirable nor expedient that the plan of the commission should be further "tested"—

As the House bill directs—

as the House bill directs, by the completion of the work on the Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches. The plan has been tested there already with amply successful results; there are 50 per cent. greater-low-water-channel depths now over the stretches of river covered by the works than the commission originally promised to accomplish, and quite enough to insure transportation at the lowest water rates when it shall be extended to the shoals above and below. What is needful there at present is that the works should be repaired and maintained at the stage of most advanced progress reached by them. It is not necessary to deepen the channel to 20 feet to prove that a 10-foot channel is attainable.

It must be admitted, however, that the through navigation of the stream has not as yet received any practical benefit, for the simple reason that the improvement is restricted to localities hemmed in by bad river above and below. Two or three additional reaches of shoals and bars should be attacked with the money that first becomes available, with a view to gradually extending the limits of improved navigation. As we already have a fine plant, fully equipped for service, nearly all the money allotted for works of improvement would be applied directly to them.

Here then we have the House bill providing that this large appropriation, two million and a quarter dollars, shall be expended on Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches, and we have at the same time the report of the chief of the commission, General Gillmore, stating that he does not desire any further sum to be appropriated for the improvement of these reaches because the commission have already obtained satisfactory results larger than they had expected to accomplish. In other words they have deep water already throughout those reaches 12 and 15 feet where there were only 4½ and 5 feet. That would appear to be ample reason why we should insist on this amendment.

There is another view of the matter. The bill as it came from the House provides that this sum of two million and a quarter of dollars "shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, without the intervention of the Mississippi River Commission." The Mississippi River Commission have never had anything to do with the actual expenditure of the money appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the river, but it has been expended by the War Department through the engineers of the Army, so that this provision in the House bill would be inoperative and is superfluous and useless. But if it have the meaning which many might ascribe to it, namely, that the improvement should be executed without reference to the plan or recommendation or supervision of the Mississippi River Commission, then I submit that this would be inexpedient and inadvisable.

Here are a number of engineers who have adopted a plan for the improvement of the river which has been approved by the War Department and approved by Congress, for Congress has already voted $28,000,000 to execute it, and it is now in process of successful execution. They have on hand a large plant costing $1,279,000. Is it reasonable now to retire these officers from the execution of this plan, from the supervision of it, and to turn the work over to new officers without experience or the special training required—a responsibility not to be justified upon any safe principles? But the House bill does not supersede the Mississippi River Commission.

In line 1112, the bill of the House expressly provides that the works at Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches which are in progress shall be completed at an early day, "and the plan of the commission for the navigation of the river fully tested." They desire these works to be executed according to the plan of the commission; and yet according to a construction that might be adopted of the bill they provide that the commission shall have no supervision whatever over the methods that may be adopted for the execution of their plan.

But they go further. They provide in line 1117 expressly that the commission is authorized to repair and build levees if, in their judgment, it should be done as part of their plan to afford ease and safety to the navigation and commerce of the river and to deepen the channel.

Here it is in one part of the bill provided that the money shall be expended "without the intervention of the Mississippi River Commission," and another part of the same bill provides that the commission is authorized to repair and build levees and so on—an utter inconsistency between the different provisions of the bill.

But further than that, with respect to the Vicksburg harbor it provides "that the Mississippi River Commission shall execute further surveys and examinations if it shall deem the same advisable."

So we have a bill here which I submit is liable to two constructions. One is that the Mississippi River Commission is thereby abolished. If that be true, I submit that it is inexpedient in the present condition of the work on the Mississippi River after we have appropriated $8,000,000 to be expended according to the plans and under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission, after they have a plant costing a million and a quarter dollars, after Congress has repeatedly indorsed and approved their plan, that this work should be taken out of the hands of these experienced, trained officers, and turned over to others who have had no experience and who, perhaps, possess no knowledge of the phenomena of the Mississippi River.

But whether the commission be abolished or not, I say that the other amendments which were put in the bill by the Senate are proper and wholesome, especially the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] which imposes a restriction upon the Mississippi River Commission in respect to the revetment system which they have adopted in part through certain of the broad reaches in the river, and that system in a letter addressed to Senator HOAR by Captain Eads is shown to be expensive and in his judgment unnecessary, and as a friend of the improvement of the Mississippi River I am as anxious as any Senator on this floor to adopt not only the most enlightened and practicable system, but the most economical one that can possibly be suggested. I am sure if Senators will read the letter—I think it was printed by order of the Senate—addressed by Captain Eads to Senator HOAR, they will be convinced that the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas is in the interest of the improvement of the Mississippi River on the most economical plan possible. I would request Senators who feel any interest in this measure that they read this letter of Captain Eads addressed to the Senator from Massachusetts so that they may appreciate not only the difficulties which restrict and suspend navigation in the Mississippi River for a great many months in the year but the plan by which that distinguished engineer proposes to remove them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Senator have the letter of Captain Eads printed.

Mr. GIBSON. I think it is printed. The Senator from Massachusetts can inform us.

Mr. COCKRELL. Had it not better be printed in the RECORD as part of the Senator's remarks?

Mr. GIBSON. It is not a very long letter, and I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the letter addressed to him by Captain Eads was printed by order of the Senate. I am not sure, but I think I saw a copy of it on my desk.

Mr. HOAR. I do not remember that it was. I think it was printed as a pamphlet and circulated.

Mr. GIBSON. I will ask the Senate to allow me to incorporate that letter, if I can find a copy of it, in my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

Letter to Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, United States Senate, from James B. Eads, on the improvement of the Mississippi River, July 10, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: Remembering that you framed the original act by which I was authorized to apply the jetty system to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi and that you have on many occasions evinced a deep interest in the success of that undertaking, I feel especial pleasure in furnishing you the information you now desire relative to the application of the same system to the river from Cairo to the sea, and the cause of the failure of the Mississippi River Commission to secure any additional depth of channel since that which it secured in 1883 through Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches, and also to explain in what important feature the plan it recommended in 1880 differs from that which it has been pursuing since 1883, and which has led the House of Representatives to virtually suspend its functions.

In 1880 the commission recommended and Congress adopted what is known as the jetty system. This system consists in the reclamation of such excessively wide parts of the river as now interrupt its approximate uniformity. It is called "the jetty system" because the proposed contraction of these wide places is to be accomplished by constructing permeable jetties of brush or willows across the shoals and shallow parts of the river intended to be reclaimed, so that when the floods come these works will make the currents passing through and over them still more sluggish and thus cause more rapid deposits to be made upon such places and so develop new shore lines and concentrate the flow in the main channel and thus deepen it.

At locations A and B on Chart No. 34 are shown some of these permeable works at Plum Point. Those located parallel to the current are mattresses laid on the bottom of the river to protect the channel ends of cross dikes or jetties.* As the frictional resistance to the flow of water increases in exact proportion to the width of the river-bed in contact with it, the current flows more sluggishly over these wide places, and thus retards the passage of the floods to the sea and causes them to assume greater heights. It is well known that the more rapid the current, the more highly the water becomes charged with sand and mud. As the current is made sluggish by the excessive friction of the wide places, large portions of these materials are deposited in them, and form shoals. These only exist in the wide places.

The theory upon which the jetty system is based is that the shoals, shifting channels, caving banks, and inundations result from these excessively wide parts of the river, and from the escape of its flood waters through lateral outlets and over its banks; and also upon the fact that the greater the volume flowing in one channel of uniform width, the greater will be its excavating or erosive power, and therefore the deeper will be its channel and the lower will be the height of its flood line. The logical remedy for these evils consists in the contraction of the wide places, and in the conservation and concentration of all the flood waters into one single channel of uniform width, by the closure of lateral outlets, the repair of defective levees, and the closure of island chutes.

The minutes of the proceedings and the report of 1880 show that the views of the several members were unanimous as to the recommendation of the permeable contraction works, the concentration of all the flood waters into one channel of uniform width, and the closure of outlets. They were by no means unanimous, however, as to protecting the banks against caving and the repairing of the levees.

It will be seen that the grand essential feature of the jetty system consists in bringing the high-water banks to a uniformity of width. The commission has undertaken to create this uniformity, without the chief factor of the plan it recommended in 1880, namely, the permeable jetties. Since 1883 it has been endeavoring to do this by revetting the banks with willow mattresses where they are caving or are likely to cave away. Where this protection is applied the steep banks are first cleared of trees and graded down to the water's edge, to an angle of 45 degrees, and are then covered with willow mattresses about a foot thick, made as wide as practicable, the channel edge being sunk as far down on the submerged bank as is possible.

There are three methods by which this uniform width of the high-water channel can be created:

First. By permeable jetties or contraction works properly placed in the wide portions of the river;

Second. By means of levees alone; and Third. By bank protection or revetment works and levees.

The first is rapid, certain, and economical; the second is slower and more expensive but equally certain; the third is uncertain, more expensive, liable to serious casualties, and involves wasteful expenditures in the construction of works which the changes in the river will often make wholly useless.

The first method was applied at Plum Point reach, 20 miles long (see chart No. 34), and at Lake Providence reach, 35 miles long. These were the worst parts of the river, and are distant about 400 miles from each other. During the first flood (1882-'83), when the contraction works were only partially completed, the low-water depth through both reaches was more than doubled.

Since 1883 the third method, or revetment system only, has been applied in other parts of the river. The report for 1885 shows that $2,240,000 have been expended for revetment works alone. (See Appendix B.)

To give a clearer idea of the value of these three methods, it may be well to refer briefly to some of the phenomena of the Mississippi, and to explain the causes of them.

Every one has observed that water flows more sluggishly in shallow depths near the shore than in the central ones which are deep. This is because the frictional resistance in proportion to the volume is greater in the shallow depths than in the deep ones. The friction at one locality is not increased by the weight of the water as it would be if it were a solid mass. This fact is thoroughly established by a vast number of experiments on the flow of water through pipes. The deep currents are more rapid because they have greater volume in proportion to this frictional resistance, and the shallow ones are more sluggish because they have less. The friction between the water and the river-bed is only increased by increasing the surface of the bed in contact with the water, and not by the depth or weight of the water. He who does not keep these simple facts

*In Appendix A will be found extracts from the report of 1880, more fully explaining the plan then recommended.

in mind will be unable to comprehend the seeming vagaries of the river. (See Appendix C.)

A third element of the problem consists in the transporting power of the water. This power increases and diminishes very rapidly as the velocity of the current changes. It increases with the square of the velocity and diminishes in the same ratio; hence if a shallow shore current move at 2 miles per hour, while the central current moves at 5, the shallow water can carry only four units of sediment per unit of volume, while the other can carry twenty-five, hence all silt-bearing rivers deposit sediment in the shallow parts and take up sediment from the deeper parts of their beds. This creates a tendency in them to narrow and deepen the bed of the river. The shallow margins naturally grow more shallow by receiving the excess of sediment with which the water becomes charged when flowing elsewhere more rapidly. This tendency is hastened by levees because they conserve the whole volume of the river, and therefore increase the rapidity of the current in flood time, and thus create deeper channels, and thereby lessen the ratio of frictional resistance and thus promote the discharge of the floods.

The current being thus made more rapid excavates the deep channels and ultimately produces in this way a lowering of the height of the floods, and so lessens the need of high levees. Although the width between the levees at first must necessarily be very unequal, the shallow parts of the bed which they inclose become gradually built up by deposits upon them, and where lands are valuable the riparian owners are prompt to reclaim these shallow parts, or battures, by advancing the levees around them, and thus they gradually contract the stream by taking in these accretions, until finally the flood channel between the levees attains a remarkable uniformity of width.

This process is necessarily slow when accomplished by individual effort alone, but that it will accomplish it will be seen by inspecting the accompanying chart, No. 28,* of a part of 230 miles of the river below Red River which has been thus improved. It represents this part of the river as surveyed by Humphreys and Abbot in 1851, and the survey of the commission in 1883. It shows the very slight changes which have occurred since that date, the latter survey being superposed upon that of 1851.

These two surveys, thus compared, prove absolutely one of the most important facts ever brought to light in the improvement of an alluvial or silt-bearing river subject to overflows, namely, the immense importance of levees as a factor in deepening, correcting, and permanently locating its channel. (See Appendix F.) This chart is incontestable evidence that the caving of the banks practically ceases when the flood channel assumes a uniform width, and that revetment works are neither necessary in creating the desired contraction, nor in protecting the banks when it has been attained, and it proves beyond controversy the soundness of the foregoing theories. The total absence of shoals in this part of the river shows that the opinion of the commission advanced in its report of July, 1885, that uniform width of the high-water channel will not produce uniform depth, nor any considerable approach to it, in a river where great differences exist between its high and low water stages, is not well founded.

The commission says: "But it is nowhere asserted in the report, nor is it believed by the commission, that uniform depth or any very near approach to it is practically attainable upon the Mississippi River, or upon any large silt-bearing stream flowing through an alluvial bed and having a difference of 45 to 50 feet between its high and low water stages." In answer to the part of the above extract which I have italicized, I submit, first, that the following from the report of 1880 led me to believe that it is so asserted:

"This would seem to be so in the very nature of things, because uniformity of width secured by contraction will produce increased velocity, and therefore increased erosion of bed at the shallow places."

I am further constrained to believe that the commission is in error in its opinion that any "near approach to uniformity of depth is practically unattainable upon the Mississippi River or upon any large silt-bearing stream flowing through an alluvial bed and having a difference of 45 to 50 feet between its high and low water stages."

The chart of the river I have submitted, showing the effect of levees, proves the contrary, and if it be answered that this part of the river does not have a difference of 45 to 50 feet between its high and low water stages, the rejoinder is that from Cairo to Columbus, 21 miles, the river has a difference of over 50 feet between its high and low water stages, and it has maintained a comparative uniformity of width and freedom from shoals ever since it has been inclosed with levees. The fluctuations of the river, shown in the chart, are about 30 feet, and if these had anything to do in preventing the attainment of a near approach to a uniform depth, they would certainly prevent the remarkable uniformity which exists in this part of the river. The uniformity in width, which has been accomplished here by levees alone, the stability of its banks, and its deep channel, prove conclusively that works of revetment are wholly unnecessary in bringing about or maintaining this condition of things.

Caving will continue to occur in the wide reaches of the river until the high-water banks are fully developed, and the flood volume is brought to a uniformity of width, but the caving will become less and less as contraction takes place. Although breaches may occur in the contraction works from time to time, during excessive floods, their repair will not often be required, for the very reason that the main channel will continue to develop, and minor ones, through breaches in the contraction works, will become less and less in depth until they are finally obliterated. I know this fact from experience with such works, where the river is a mile and three-quarters in width, and where breaches occurred through them, in some cases 200 feet wide, and of very considerable depth. The contraction works are expected to be simply temporary aids to the natural action of the river, and to promote its efforts to bring its banks to a uniformity of width; which uniformity, once obtained, is permanent, as chart 28 proves.

The idea upon which the revetments are used is not simply because the commission believes that they are necessary for the fixation of the channel by preventing the caving, but that if the river be prevented from further widening by holding its caving banks it will contract itself by natural agencies. It is not claimed by the commission that the channel can be immediately deepened by revetment. (See Appendix E.) Contraction works are immediate in their deepening effect, and require but one flood to produce all or nearly all of this effect Hence no part whatever of the improvement produced by the flood of 1883 in these two reaches can be credited to the revetment works, then partially completed. Nearly all of this was destroyed in a year or two, and the efforts to renew it with stronger and more costly work since 1883 have not given an inch more depth through these reaches. The conclusion is, therefore, unanswerable that all of this revetment work was utterly useless, so far as the improvement of the channel is concerned. Its beneficial effect, where it is claimed that it remains intact, except at Memphis, is confined solely to the protection, at different localities, of a few acres of land, worth probably $20 per acre. (See Appendix D.) Unless maintained intact for many years it can be of no benefit to the channel.

The contraction works, costing probably one-fourth as much per mile, do not require to be strong or kept in repair. Having performed their duty during one flood, the next year's work consists in building other similar structures on the deposits caused by those of the previous year. In some parts of these reaches the deposits caused by these works during the flood of 1883 were over 30 feet deep.

It is a mistake to suppose that when breaches occur through these permeable works the deepening produced in the channel by the parts left uninjured will be lost again if they be not repaired. The tendency of the river, as before stated, is to deepen its deepest channel and to deposit in its shoalest parts. Crevasses through the levees and outlets interrupt this natural process by diverting more or less of its volume into abnormal channels. This interrupts the uniformity of its velocity and a reduction of its volume also takes place. The excavating power of the river depends wholly upon these two, namely, velocity and volume. Therefore its natural tendency to deepen and contract its channel is interrupted and lessened.

Keep the whole flood volume within levees, and in forty or fifty years it will assume the desired uniformity of width without other treatment than that of contracting the levees and inclosing the land made by the deposit. Revetting its banks, without the maintenance of the levees, will never accomplish it. With levees, revetment may possibly reduce this period slightly, but it will involve the additional expenditure of at least $100,000,000. (See Appendix E.) With the contraction works and the levees 15 feet should be secured from Cairo to the sea within three years, and the entire completion of the work should be done within six or eight years, at a cost of thirty or forty millions. Then, levees above Red River would be practically useless, and the least low-water depth would be over 20 feet. The tendency to caving would become less and less as the correction of the width progressed, and, when completed, bank protection would be almost wholly unnecessary, or no more necessary than it now is below Baton Rouge.

With respect to the value of levees I took issue with the commission, and submitted a minority report, in which I said, "I am unwilling to commit myself now to any expression in the present report which in the slightest degree tends to throw a doubt upon the necessity of, or to justify any further delay in, the closure of these outlets (or gaps in the levees). On the contrary, I deem it proper to urge with redoubled force the absolute necessity of their immediate closure." My reasons for urging the maintenance of the levees during the period of river improvement were given at full length in this report, and were further urged before the Committee on Commerce and the Mississippi River, in the House of Representatives. (See Appendix F.)

Congress at that session appropriated $4,123,000 for the improvement of the river, and left the commission free to use so much of it as they thought proper in the repairs of the levees. The commission now fully recognize the importance of maintaining the levees as a factor in the improvemant of the river. But its members are not agreed as to the height to which they should be raised. My own opinion is that the extraordinary floods should be restrained, and that 2 feet above the flood of 1883 is amply sufficient.

Contracting the channel of a stream to deepen it is a plan as old as navigation itself. It has been applied all over Europe and elsewhere, to deepen the low-water channels of navigable rivers. Yet the last report and recommendation, made in 1879 by a board of United States engineers, for the improvement of the Mississippi below the Ohio, rose only to the dignity of advising such a plan as an engineer of the Nile would probably have suggested in the time of Thothmes I, namely, "the contraction of the low-water channel and the protection of caving banks where necessary." This plan has been often confounded with the jetty system, and is referred to to prove that there is nothing new in the latter. The wide difference between the two is not generally understood.

This board said:* "As the shoals are, ordinarily, at points where the river, being wide, crosses at low water from one bank to the other, those are the places at which greater depth of water is needed, and here works to narrow the low-water river will often be required on both sides.

"The object of these works is simply to give through the low-water river the form which it has given to itself where the navigation is good." * * *

"If 10 feet of water could be secured at low river, from Saint Louis to New Orleans, it would probably satisfy all demands; and if the improvement of the river is undertaken, that depth should be aimed at."

This board does not propose to cause the river to build up new high-water shore lines through the wide places. Its report has not a line in it alluding to the necessity of controlling the flood volume of the river, between high-water banks of uniform width, as the certain means of producing the deepest and most permanent low-water channel for navigation. It does not even allude to the necessity of closing the natural outlets and maintaining the levees during the progress of the work, to the end that the increased volume of water so controlled will insure the deepest excavation of the bed and thus lower the flood surface of the river, and so, in a few years, make safe, without levees, 32,000 square miles of land now subject to devastating inundations. Nor does it offer to demonstrate, by referring to the natural laws controlling the river, that these great benefits to navigation, agriculture, and commerce must inevitably follow the closure of outlets, the maintenance of levees, and the building up of new and parallel high-water banks through its wide places. Neither does this report explain why these wide places and depleting outlets are the disturbing causes which would have made the permanence of their 10-feet channel a simple impossibility so long as these outlets remain open and the excessive widths of the high-water channel still exist. Yet this report was made by some of the most accomplished officers of the United States Army, namely: Generals Barnard, Tower, Wright, Comstock, and Suter, and it was approved by General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers.

Their plan was wholly a low-water treatment such as the ancients practiced. It does not approximate the dignity of a system. It stops where the chief features of the jetty system begin. It only resembles this system in the fact that its completed contraction works are part of the initial works required by the jetty system. It is a plan based wholly upon observation and one made without reference to the natural laws controlling the river, and in the belief that there is no relation between the velocity of the current and the quantity of silt transported by the water; that outlets will not cause shoals; that the confinement of the flood-waters between levees would increase the height of the floods, and that the bed of the river was too firm to be eroded by the current; errors which had been advanced in the celebrated report of Humphreys & Abbot, and generally accepted by the United States Engineer Corps and by other engineers all over Europe and America, and which have now been proven to be errors by the investigations of the Mississippi River Commission.

The jetty system is based upon a theory which is the result of thorough study of the river, and is in perfect harmony with the laws of gravity and friction and with their modifying control over the silt-bearing power of the river, by which all of its apparently complex phenomena are produced, and by which theory each one of these mysteries can be fully explained. By this theory the works recommended are clearly indicated and their necessity fully demonstrated, and I may add that the absolute truth of it has been proven by the results secured in 1883 at Plum Point and Lake Providence. This theory was not, in 1879, accepted by the distinguished engineers just referred to.

Congress when it created the commission directed it to examine and report upon the jetty system. It did so in 1880 and recommended its adoption. If this system (not simply contraction of the low-water channel, but the complete rectification of the high-water channel of a river by the methods set forth in the report of 1880) has ever been applied elsewhere, I have never seen an account of it. It is only applicable through the alluvial basin of a very large river. It would not do on the Ohio or on any stream having a bottom interrupted by chains of rocks or hard beds of gravel.

*This chart and all of the others herein are reduced by photolithography from those published in the Annual Report of the Mississippi River Commission, 1883, Ex. Doc. No. 37, H. R., Forty-eighth Congress, first session, except No. 34, which is from the report three weeks later.

The inevitable lowering of the flood-line which would follow the complete rectification of the high-water channel, below the iron gate on the Danube, would increase the obstruction there, and compel the blasting of a deeper channel at that point, and this would allow a more rapid discharge than the river above could supply in summer without injury to the navigation above, hence the contracting dikes used there are built up only to the mean height between extreme high and low water on this and on most other rivers in Europe. Permeable jetties or contraction works are not used on any of them, I believe.

The rectification of the Rhine, below Cologne, has produced results similar to those desired on the Mississippi, by bringing its high-water banks to a uniform width. But the new banks were not made by the river, or induced by permeable contraction works, but were stone dikes built by hand. This would be wholly impracticable on the Mississippi, because of its enormous cost. The uniform widths of channel on the Danube, Elbe, Rhone, and other rivers in Europe are made by stone dikes also.

By narrowing Current River in Missouri at its several shoals to improve its navigation the stream was virtually made dry through the dry season.

The Ohio, Rhine, Danube, Elbe, and many other rivers constitute in low water a series of pools, the waters of which are prevented from rapidly escaping in the dry season by a shoal at the lower end of each. To completely scour this away, as is proposed on the Mississippi, would result in draining off the water in the pool and increasing the obstruction at the next shoal above. Such streams are usually improved by movable dams, or by locks and dams at the shoals.

The rectification of the high-water channel of the Mississippi and the closure of the Atchafalaya will in all probability lower the height of the floods at Red River 5 feet, and at Cairo probably 10 feet; but this will not impair the low-water navigation above, because of the immense volume of its discharge even in low water, when its surface slope is greatly reduced and its current more sluggish. At Cairo the rise is about 52 feet.

I think the action of the House in suspending the commission is to be regretted, not only because of the reflection which such action casts upon the distinguished, conscientious, and earnest men who compose it, but because they have accumulated a large amount of important data with which they are thoroughly familiar, in addition to which they have secured an experience of much value in the further prosecution of the work, acquired after years of familiarity with the prominent features of the river under the stimulus of a laudable professional pride, tempered by a sense of grave responsibility. The organization, with its personnel, plant, and floating machinery for prosecuting this certainly the most important and extensive improvement ever undertaken on this continent, will be disorganized, and the success of the plan adopted in 1880 will be imperiled by new experiments and needless delay. The views of any seven men on such a problem can never be completely harmonious until the work is finished, and final results are known.

Congress alone has authority to decide and dictate where such conflicts of opinion on important questions occur; and it has not hesitated heretofore to instruct the commission as to what it shall, and what it shall not, do. It interdicted and subsequently authorized it to build levees. It twice gave the commission instructions to close the Atchafalaya, and it has instructed it on various other matters.

As the attempt to protect the banks has not deepened the channel, after three years of trial, would it not be better, instead of suspending the commission, to instruct it to confine its expenditures to the levees and contraction works? Experience has proved their efficacy in deepening the channel, and this was the primary object in creating the commission. (See Appendix G)

Very respectfully yours,

JAS. B. EADS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 10, 1886.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,
United States Senate.

NOTE.

JULY 26, 1886.

The House of Representatives voted to adopt the following amendment to the River and Harbor bill offered by Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa, just before its final passage by that body:

"Improving Mississippi River from head of the passes to the mouth of the Ohio: Continuing improvements, $2,250,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War without the intervention of the Mississippi River Commission."

This amendment was adopted by 22 majority.

The last eight words of this amendment were stricken out in the Senate Committee on Commerce, and the following were inserted in lieu of them, namely: "In accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission."

When the bill was under consideration by the Senate Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, after consultation with the friends of the improvement, offered the following amendment:

"And provided further, That the expenditure of so much of said appropriation as may be required to continue the improvement of Plum Point and Lake Providence reaches shall be confined to the complete repair and maintenance of the levees throughout said reaches to the height of 2 feet above the flood of 1882, and to the completion of the permeable works of contraction to such extent as may be required to bring the high-water banks of the river to the comparative uniformity of width contemplated in the first five paragraphs of the plan of improvement recommended by the Mississippi River Commission and adopted by Congress in 1880, and more fully set forth in the report of the Secretary of War for 1881, volume 2, part 3, page 2733: And provided further, That no works of bank protection or revetment shall be executed in said reaches or elsewhere until after it shall be found that the completion of the permeable contracting works and uniform width of the high-water channel will not secure the desired stability of the river banks: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the construction of revetment works where the banks are caving, at Greenville reach, Delta Point, in front of the cities of Vicksburg, Memphis, Hickman, and Columbus: And provided further, That contraction works shall be built at the same time in the wide portions of the river immediately above the said revetment works."

This amendment was adopted by a vote of 32 to 18.

On the return of the bill to the House, Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, moved to strike out this amendment. This motion was defeated by 44 majority. The bill is now before a conference committee of the Senate and House, and the amendment of Mr. INGALLS has been accepted by this committee.

APPENDICES.

A.

On pages 2733 and 2734, volume 2, part 3, Report of the Secretary of War, 1881, the commission says:

"The bad navigation of the river is produced by the caving and erosion of its banks, and the excessive widths and the bars and shoals resulting directly therefrom.

"It has been observed in the Mississippi River, and is indeed true of all silt-bearing streams flowing through alluvial deposits, that the more nearly the high-river width, or width between the banks, approaches to uniformity, the more nearly uniform will be the channel depth, the less will be the variations of velocity, and the less the rate of caving to be expected in concave bends. This would seem to be so in the very nature of things, because uniformity of width secured by contraction will produce increased velocity, and therefore increased erosion of bed at the shoal places, accompanied by a corresponding deposit of silt at the deep places, and consequently greater uniformity of depth.

"Uniform depth joined to uniform width, that is to say, uniformity of effective cross-section, implies uniform velocity, and this means that there will be no violent eddies and cross-currents, and no great and sudden fluctuations in the silt-transporting power of the current. There will, therefore, be less erosion from oblique currents and eddies, and no formations of shoals and bars produced by silt taken up from one part of the channel and dropped in another. As the friction of the bed retards the flow of the water, any diminution of the friction will promote the discharge of floods. The frictional surface is greater in proportion to volume of discharge where the river is wide and shoal than where it is narrow and deep. It follows, therefore, that after the wide, shoal places are suitably narrowed and the normal sectional area is restored by deepening the channel the friction will be less than it was before.

"This will result in a more easy and rapid discharge of the flowing water, and consequently in a lowering of the flood-surface. It would seem, therefore, that the plan of improvement must comprise, as its essential features, the contraction of the water way of the river to a comparatively uniform width, and the protection of caving banks, and this is presumed to be the plan referred to in the act as the 'jetty system.' It is known, from observation of the river below Cairo, not only that shoals and bars, producing insufficient depth and bad navigation, are always accompanied by a low-water width exceeding 3,000 feet, but that wherever the river does not exceed that width there is a good channel. In other words, bad navigation invariably accompanies a wide low-river water way, and good navigation a narrow one.

"The work to be done therefore is to scour and maintain a channel through the shoals and bars existing in those portions of the river where the width is excessive, and to build up new banks and develop new shore lines, so as to establish as far as practicable the requisite conditions of uniform velocity for all stages of the river.

"It is believed that this improvement can be accomplished below Cairo by contracting the low-water channel way to an approximately uniform width of about 3,000 feet, for the purpose of scouring out a channel through the shoals and bars, and by causing, through the action of appropriate works constructed at suitable localities, the deposition of sand and other earthy materials transported by the water upon the dry bars and other portions of the present bed not embraced within the limits of the proposed low-water channel. The ultimate effect sought to be produced by such deposits is a comparative uniformity in the width of the high-water channel of the river."

On page 2735 the report says:

"By a permeable dike located upon the new shore line to be developed, connected with the old bank at suitable intervals by cross-lines of like character, or by jetties of hurdles, or other permeable works projecting from the bank with their channel ends terminating on the margin to the proposed water way, or by any other equivalent works, the area to be reclaimed and raised will be converted into a series of silting basins."

B.

The minutes of the commission show that I gave no sanction whatever for any revetments or other bank protection, unless it should be found that the contraction works would not stop the caving; and the report shows that the caving was not expected to stop until the high-water channel was made uniform by the contraction works.

The commission endeavored to prove in its report of 1885 that all of the members of the commission in 1880 contemplated an extensive use of bank revetment, and it appeals to the minutes of the meetings of the commission to sustain this statement. It is proper here to say that as soon as I saw this report, which was not published until about six months after it was submitted, I addressed a letter to the president of the commission protesting against my being included in the expression of any such views, and I made extensive quotations from the minutes to show that wherever bank protection was contemplated in any of the propositions proposed I had the idea of the necessity of it eliminated from such propositions, and never consented to any such idea being incorporated into the report of 1880 as the protection of the banks without the additional words "wherever necessary."

That the commission did not contemplate the revetment system in 1880 except as a contingent and supplementary part of the plan it recommended, is shown by the minutes of the meeting held by it in Saint Louis, February 17, 1880, when preparing its official report. Several propositions for insertion in the report were then offered by different members, containing the idea that it would be necessary to protect the banks, and each one of these was omitted, after argument by me, from the report. The following, which was offered by the president of the commission, was unanimously adopted, all the members being present:

"Resolved, That the following general principle be embodied in the report of the commission that the method of improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River which promises the most valuable and permanent results, will comprise, as its essential features, the contraction by suitable works of the water way in the wide portions of the river, and the protection of caving banks by special means, whenever the contracting works referred to do not effect that result."

The part of this resolution I have italicized, clearly conveys the idea that the protection of caving banks should not be undertaken until it shall have been first ascertained that the contracting works referred to will not stop the caving.

C.

One illustration of the effect of increasing the surface in contact with flowing water, without altering the slope, weight, or depth of the water, is the following: Construct a conduit or flume, say 3 feet wide and 3 feet deep, with any given fall or slope, and supply it with water until it is brimful. Then put a cover on it in contact with the water's surface, and its capacity to discharge the water is at once diminished, because the wetted surface or frictional resistance has been increased from 9 feet to 12 feet. If a pipe 24 inches in diameter be substituted for the square box, its maximum discharge will be attained when the flowing water is about 22½ inches deep. When flowing full it would discharge less with the same head of water, because a very little additional volume of water has brought a very large part of the surface of the pipe, not previously wetted, into contact with the water.

D.

The river at Memphis is about 2,700 feet wide; 2½ miles above, it is at least 12,000 feet. (See chart No. 44.) If there be any reliance placed upon the natural laws above stated here is a place suggesting the contraction of this wide part of the river to cut down the shoals existing in it and transport their substance by the current down into the deep place in front of Memphis, which was causing the caving there. The water being checked by the great resistance to its flow in the wide part, unloaded its excess of sand there in flood-time, and shoaled the river to 6 feet depth. Being contracted into one-fifth of its width at Memphis its current became again rapid, because the water had so much less frictional resistance here, and having unloaded its burden and thus built up the shoals a mile or two above, the water was ready to carry its load again. Assuming that its flood velocity in the wide place was reduced to 3 miles an hour, and in the narrow place was increased to 6 (not an improbable assumption), then through the wide part the water could only carry nine units of sand for every thirty-six units in front of Memphis.

That it went to work in the bed of the river to recover this, or some approximate difference in its burden, is shown in the fact that the depth became twelve or sixteen times as great at Memphis as on the shoals above, and when the supporting pressure of the water was removed by the subsidence of the flood from its concave bank, a part of this bank, carrying valuable city improvements, slid into this deep hole and restored the angle of repose to the bank. The process was repeated year after year, and so this caving has continued for eight or ten years past.

An examination of charts, Nos. 25 and 26, shows that these wide places, with their resultant caving banks, gradually move down stream, and this wide place has followed this general rule until its influence reached the narrow locality of Memphis.

Some idea of the difference in cost of the works for bank protection and those for contraction may be formed from the following statement (see page 2121, Report of the Chief of Engineers, part 3, 1883):

"The main item of cost will, of course, be the bank protection. The work so far done on the Plum Point reach has cost below low water about $3 per running foot, the upper bank protection not yet on will not exceed $9 per foot, making a total cost of bank, per foot, $12. As regards contraction works, the dikes on Lake Providence reach have so far cost, complete with piles, foot mats, and screens, $3.50 per running foot. The prices given are for recent work, and do not include cost of plant."

In the Annual Report for 1883, Executive Document No. 37, Forty-eighth Congress, H. R., I find the following statement:

"In Louisiana Bend the work of revetting the bank has been commenced, and to date about half a mile has been completed. This is a work offering peculiar difficulties, the water being over 100 feet deep at low water, while at high stages work is impossible owing to the great depth of water and extremely rapid current."

The first indication which the reports of the commission give of their determination to advance the revetment system to an equal prominence with the system of contraction works referred to, occurs in its report for 1882 on page 2120, Report of Chief of Engineers, part 3, 1883, and is as follows. In describing the plan of improvement, it says:

"It consists essentially in seeking to increase the navigable depth at low water by narrowing the width at that stage to about 3,000 feet, it being found that where this width is exceeded bad navigation as a rule exists. To accomplish this result recourse is had to light, permeable structures erected in the river-bed, and designed by checking the velocity of the current to induce deposits of sediment on those portions of the bed which it is proposed to reclaim from the river. By a continuance of this action, which merely imitates the natural processes constantly at work, it is expected that these deposits will ultimately be raised to the level of the normal banks. When this is done the river will have a nearly uniform width, and the tendency which now exists to form shoals in the wide places will be done away with. At the same time the concentrated flow thus set up will scour down the bed, remove the present shoals, and ultimately to some extent lower the good line. To prevent the constant bank erosion now going on, both the old banks, and the new ones where exposed to this action, must be protected by brush mattresses below the low-water line, and above that point by brush or stone, or the natural vegetation."

In the commission's report (see page 2538, Executive Document, part 2, volume 1, Forty-ninth Congress, H. R.) we find that the revetment system has been still further advanced in importance as follows:

"They also deem it essential to the success of the work already done, and a necessary part of their plan of improvement, that the revetment of banks which are caving with sufficient rapidity to endanger or embarass navigation should be at once undertaken and carried forward systematically, beginning at Cairo and progressing down stream, precedence in time being given to those places where the caving is most rapid or injurious. Throughout the portions of the river lying between the reaches of bad navigation are found many long stretches where navigation is now good, and which only need work of this character to keep it so, while at other points shoals exist which would probably disappear or become less troublesome if the banks were held and the river allowed to contract and deepeen by natural agencies. The fixation of the channel is of the utmost importance in the plan of improvement contemplated by the Commission, as otherwise changes may occur from the caving of the banks which will destroy or render useless costly works of improvement, and by causing fresh shoals where navigation is now good, render an indefinite extension of the work necessary.

"This work is conservative in its nature, and can not supersede the work already begun or projected for the shoal portions of the river, but it is an important adjunct, and as much time will be required for its execution there should be no delay in beginning it. The commission have provided for initiating this work between Cairo and Memphis in the estimate which accompanies this report."

This is really a proposition to revet the whole river commencing at Cairo, and to make this work the leading feature of the plan.

On page 2867, annual report Chief of Engineers, 1885, the following indicates plainly that the commission has placed still greater stress upon the revetment system than upon the contraction works. It says:

"It has been claimed that the caving of banks should be arrested by works of channel contraction at the wide places above, and much unwarranted stress seems to have been laid upon a hypothetical discussion introduced into the first report of the commission, where it is stated theoretically that "uniform depth joined to uniform width—that is to say, uniformity of effective cross-section—implies uniform velocity, and this means that there will be no violent eddies or cross-currents, and no great and sudden fluctuations in the silt-transporting power of the current." But it is nowhere asserted in that report, nor is it believed by the commission, that uniform depth, or any very near approach to it, is practically attainable upon the Mississippi River, or upon any large silt-bearing stream flowing through an alluvial bed and having a difference of 45 to 50 feet between its high and low water stages. In its low stage the obstructed portions of the river present a series of shallow crossings or bars, where the width is excessive and upon which there is frequently only about 6 to 10 feet depth of water, alternating with concave bends, where there are depths of 80 feet, and in some places of 90 to 95 feet and upward.

"The scour induced by works of improvement at the wide places will doubtless deepen the channel across the bars to 15 or 20 feet, leaving the depths in the bends substantially unchanged, so that the full measure of approach to uniform depth attained by these results consists in this, that where there formerly existed, as between the deep bends and the shallow bars, a difference ranging from 70 to 90 feet in depth, there now exists, after the improvement, a difference of 60 to 80 feet, or more. This represents an amelioration of former conditions, which, although sufficient for purposes of navigation, is evidently too small to effect in any considerable degree, or perhaps in any sensible degree, the cross-currents, eddies, and fluctuations of velocity resulting from constantly varying depths. It would seem, therefore, that stability of banks, as the result of such uniformity of depth as can be secured by works of contraction is practically unattainable.

"For this reason the plan of improvement contemplated a liberal use of bank revetment, roughly estimated to cost more than four times as much as the corresponding works of channel contraction. It may be stated that it is not the intention, nor has it been the practice, of the commission to protect a bank by revetment merely because it is caving. Other considerations must govern this question. But where an imminent danger threatens the immediate destruction of interests of great value—as, for example, where a caving bend is about to take in flank and carry away costly works of improvement, or produce a disastrous cut-off, or where a city's river front is to be maintained, as at Vicksburg, or a portion of the city itself to be protected against undermining, as at Memphis—then it is believed to be imperative that the local remedy of holding the banks intact by a mattress revetment or other equivalent device should be adopted."

In the report of 1880 will be found the following statement: "The views of the several members, however, are not in entire accord with respect to the degree of importance which should be attached to the concentration of the flood waters by levees as a factor in the plan of improvement of low-water navigation, which has received the unanimous preference of the commission."

In the next annual report of the commission I differed with the majority so radically on the subject of levees that I submitted a minority report, from which I append the following extract. (See report of the Chief of Engineers, 1882, volume 2, part 3, pages 2766-2780.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 12, 1882.

General Q. A. GILLMORE, U. S. A.,
President of the Mississippi River Commission:

SIR: I feel compelled to withhold my signature from the last annual report of the Mississippi River Commission, as I differ with the views expressed therein on the following important points.

LEVEES.

In the report the following paragraph occurs:

"It is considered by all that levees, by confining the flood waters of the river within a comparatively restricted space, do tend, in some degree, to increase the scouring and deepening power of the current. But the extent and potency of their influence in the improvement of the low-water channel, in respect to which, for the purpose of navigation merely, improvement is most needed, and their value, for that purpose, as compared with other methods of improvement, and as compared with their cost, are regarded as subjects requiring further observation and study, and the accumulation of further and more comprehensive data, before final conclusions can be reached concerning them."

The effect of this paragraph is to weaken the recommendation made by the commission in its report of February, 1880, with regard to the importance of closing the gaps in the levees. The report of 1880 states that—

"The views of the several members, however, are not in entire accord with respect to the degree of importance which should be attached to the concentration of flood waters by levees as a factor in the plan of improvement of low-water navigation which has received the unanimous preference of the commission."

My views regarding the important agency of the levees in improving the low-water channel of the Mississippi were not expressed in that report with the degree of emphasis which I then desired, and I am unwilling to commit myself now to any expression in the present report, which, in the slightest degree, tends to throw a doubt upon the necessity of, or to justify any further delay in the closing of these outlets. On the contrary, I deem it proper to urge with redoubled force the absolute necessity of their immediate closure.

From quotations hereinafter made from the previous report of the commission, it will be seen that it relies upon the increased volume of discharge for scouring more deeply the bed of the river and lowering its floods. The loss of its volume through outlets or crevasses is fully recognized in that report, as the cause of the deposition of sedimentary matters in the bed of the river, by which its flood surface is raised from year to year.

Observations made by the commission plainly show that the effect of the present gaps in the levees has been to raise the flood-line of the river many inches above any heights previously attained within the 700 miles in which they exist most numerously, between Natchez and the mouth of the Ohio River. Within this distance there have occurred during the last eighteen years innumerable crevasses, aggregating, in 1875, a length of about 100 miles, and throughout this part of the river the deposits have raised its bed so much as to greatly injure navigation and to cause smaller floods to rise to heights never before attained.

This question is of such vast importance, and in view of my dissenting from the report of the commission, I trust that I will be pardoned for explaining, at some length, the general principles underlying the plan of improvement recommended by the commission, and the relation which the levees have to that plan. It should be borne in mind that this plan is only applicable to the rectification of a sediment-bearing river, and not to rivers flowing through rocky beds, and whose waters are clear. It should be especially noted, also, that this plan, when fully executed, will render the further use of levees almost, if not entirely, unnecessary. A more ready understanding of the principles upon which it is based will be had by first briefly describing the formation of the lower or main alluvial basin of the river.

This basin extends from Commerce, Mo. (a few miles above the mouth of the Ohio), to the Gulf of Mexico, and has an average width of about 60 miles. Its length is about 600 miles in a direct line, and it contains about 34,000 square miles, or an area equal to that of the State of Indiana. At the upper end of the basin a spur of the Ozark Mountains has been cut through by the river at the town of Commerce, and through this, over a rocky bottom 6 or 8 eight miles in length, the Mississippi now flows. Forty miles above Cairo, on the Ohio River, the same spur has been cut through by that tributary. Throughout this entire basin bounded by highlands on each side we have every reason to believe that an estuary of the Gulf of Mexico once existed similar to the Gulf of St. Lawrence or to the Rio de la Plata, which is now being filled and built up by the immense mass of deposits annually poured into it by the Parana and Paraguay Rivers.

The floods of the Mississippi River, being highly charged with sedimentary matter, have filled this ancient and extensive estuary with alluvial deposits to the height of about 300 feet above the sea at the upper end of the basin. The surface of the land thus made by the river has a comparatively regular descent from the upper end of the basin to the Gulf, being at Gaines's Landing, midway to the Gulf, about 140 feet above the sea. Through these deposits the river winds its tortuous course in a channel about 1,150 miles long.

Experience and observation prove most conclusively that the quantity of solid matter which the water of the river is able to hold in suspension is strictly regulated by the velocity of the current. Therefore during the natural process of this land formation whenever the flood waters escaped over the banks of the channel the loss of current in the water thus escaping caused the sandy or heavier portions of the solid matter held in suspension in it to settle almost immediately on the submerged banks, while the argillaceous and lighter portions, which take longer to settle, were carried back by the feebler current to the swamps or lower lands, on which they were deposited over a much more extensive area. These lighter matters now constitute the blue and other colored clay strata which are found in all parts and at all depths of the basin. The river banks were thus kept constantly higher than the lands more distant from the stream. Before any levees were built on them they were usually from 10 to 15 feet higher than the lands one or two thousand yards distant from the river.

The size of the flowing volume of any river constitutes, as will be seen hereafter, a very important element in determining the velocity of its current, and as the loss of volume over the natural banks has the effect of producing a more sluggish current in the main channel, a deposition of sediment resulted wherever this loss occurred.

In this manner the bed of the stream, during each successive flood, was built up higher and higher, while the water escaping over the banks built them up also. Thus the river and its banks were both gradually elevated above the neighboring lands until some important breach occurred in one or the other bank, and caused the river to seek a new channel through or over the lower lands. Illustrations of this process are frequently occurring at this time in the lower part of the basin.

Sixty miles above the mouth of the river its flood surface is now 7 or 8 feet higher than the mean level of the Gulf, and through this 60 miles it flows to the sea between narrow banks that have been elevated by repeated overflows above the sea-level. From time to time the river has broken through these narrow embankments and found a steeper and shorter route to the salt water. Through such new route its heavily-laden waters bear immense quantities of sediment, which is deposited in the Gulf at the mouth of the outlet, because the current can carry it no farther.

About 35 miles above the mouth, one of these outlets, known as "The Jump," occurred about forty years ago. It has already formed over a hundred square miles of territory upon which rice plantations exist, and on which trees are growing larger than a man's body. From 6,000 acres of this land, purchased from the State of Louisiana, were obtained nearly all of the willows used in the construction of the jetties. The gradual enlargement of this sub-delta has so lengthened the outlet and flattened the surface-slope of its branching channels that the current from the river through them, even in flood time, is now too sluggish to carry the heavy sedimentary matters of the main river by that route to the sea, and hence this outlet is gradually closing up. When it first occurred the water in it was 100 feet deep; now it is scarcely 4 or 5.

During this land-building process of the river outlets were doubtless formed from time to time throughout the entire 600 miles of the basin in a similar manner to the one described at "The Jump." Occasionally the conditions were such as to cause the entire stream to forsake its old channel, and in this way it was enabled to distribute its deposits throughout the whole width of the basin from bluff to bluff. Cut-offs and crevasses facilitated this distribution, and the elevation of the bed and the banks of the stream give it the ability to maintain a sufficient height above the adjacent lands to send its earthy matters many miles away from its channel, while the unstable character of its banks enabled it to change its location from time to time, and thus to cover every part of the basin with its deposits.

Levees stop this land-building process, because they restrain the floods within the defined channel of the river, and so long as they are intact it is impossible for the banks or the bed of the river to be built up to greater heights by the natural process just described. It is an error completely and often disproved, but still repeatedly advanced by misinformed persons, that rivers confined between levees have a tendency to have their beds elevated, and, as a consequence, to need a corresponding elevation of the levees. The Po and the Rhine and other rivers in Europe effectually disprove such assertions. Their channels have been deepened and their floods lowered as a consequence of perfect levees, and this, it will be presently seen, is an inevitable result of the laws which control the phenomena of sedimentary streams, wherever they flow in channels made through their own deposits. These principles or laws I will now endeavor to explain.

The term "slope of the river" is used by engineers to indicate the inclination which the surface of the flood bears to the sea-level. When "the slope" is referred to without qualification, it means the flood line at the various points along the river, and is synonymous with the term "the fall of the river per mile." It has no reference to the slope of the bottom of the river. One end of the slope is unalterably fixed by the Gulf of Mexico. Other points in its line may be lowered or elevated to a certain extent by natural or artificial causes.

The force which produces the current is the fall of the water from a higher to a lower level, and the slope is an indication of the amount of this force. Other conditions being the same, the steeper the slope the more rapid will be the current.

The chief element which retards the current is the friction between the water and the bed of the stream. This friction increases as the surface in contact with the water increases, and is, therefore, greatest where the width is greatest, and conversely it is least where the width of the channel is least. Hence it is evident that the velocity of the current may not only be increased by increasing the slope, but also by decreasing the friction. It must be remembered that nearly all of the sedimentary matter transported by the water is carried in suspension, and that the quantity carried is in proportion to its velocity. Only a small quantity of it is rolled along the bottom. Hence if the current be checked when its waters are heavily charged with this sediment (as they always are in flood time), a deposition of a portion of their burden becomes inevitable.

No fact in connection with the river is more thoroughly established than that the current in flood time can not be checked in the slightest degree without causing a deposition of some part of the sediment. Screens of iron wire with meshes 1 foot square, placed across shoals in the Missouri River, have sufficed to retard the current enough to cause deposits 16 feet deep to be formed during one flood, and in this simple manner new banks have been developed in excessively wide parts of that river to deepen its channel and lower its slope. Willow screens, first used at the jetties at the mouth of the river for the same purpose, raised the bottom during one flood over a large area at the head of the passes where it was from 12 to 16 feet deep, almost to the surface of the water, and 70 or 80 acres of land covered with vegetation are now to be seen on the eastern side of the upper end of the South Pass channel that has been thus formed.

I have named three controlling principles which are present in every problem presented by the characteristic phenomena of the river. Each one of these is very simple in itself. It is, however, absolutely necessary to remember each of them to fully comprehend the subject, and to be able to recognize the respective influence of each in creating these phenomena. I will briefly repeat them to more strongly impress their importance. The first is the force producing the current. This force is simply the result of the fall of the river from a higher to a lower level. The second is the frictional resistance of its bed. The third is the intimate relation between the quantity of sediment carried in the water and the velocity of the current.

If we increase or decrease the current from any cause, we increase or decrease the quantity of sediment carried by the river. We can increase or decrease the current temporarily by either of two methods, namely, by altering the slope or by altering the frictional resistance. Therefore by these two methods the scouring and depositing effect can be produced. If we increase the current during the floods we produce a greater deepening and enlarging of the channel through the shoals, and they are left in better condition during low water, and at the same time we ultimately lower the height of the floods. If we decrease the current we produce shoals and higher floods.

The river, from Commerce to the Gulf, between the levees, is simply a grand trunk into which is poured all of the sedimentary matters of the tributaries. This trunk must discharge as much sediment as it receives, or that which it does not discharge must be left in the channel and thus injure navigation. If it discharges more than it receives the excess must be taken out of the bed of the channel, and it will be deepened thereby and the floods will be lowered. Hence it follows that by the process of deposit, or scour, the river has the ability to produce a current capable of carrying its sedimentary burden, without loss or gain, to the sea. The velocity of current we may call the normal current. In seasons of great floods the normal current will be more rapid than when the waters are less highly charged with sediment.

This normal current is produced by the river itself as a result of these three controlling principles. Flowing over a bed of deposits from which it takes up additional sediment when the current is too rapid, it thus deepens the bed, and with it the slope, and thus the current declines. If it be too sluggish, deposits fall to the bottom and by raising the bed it increases the slope, and as this is steepened the current is accelerated until the normal velocity is again attained. It follows, therefore, that it is not in the power of man to permanently increase its current above the normal velocity. If it be increased from any cause, the water will take up an additional burden from the bed of the river and thus enlarge and deepen its channel, and its slope will be thereby reduced, and with this reduction will follow a reduction of current and the scouring will cease as the current diminishes until the normal rate is attained, and then the channel will be sufficiently enlarged and the slope so lowered as to prevent any further scouring.

The importance of the levees as a means of improving the navigation of the river comes wholly from the relation which the volume of a sedimentary stream bears to the frictional resistance of the bed. If the volume be diminished the ratio of friction to the volume will be increased; and, conversely, if the volume be increased the ratio of frictional resistance will be decreased. Hence, if it can be shown that a higher velocity of current results from the retention of the whole volume within the levees it must follow that a greater amount of sediment will be transported, and if this amount be greater than that which the tributaries contribute it must be taken up out of the bed to the benefit of navigation and the flood line must consequently be lowered to such a degree as will finally reduce the excess of current which the increased volume has produced, down to the normal velocity. The increase of volume which will be secured by the closure of these gaps will produce this increased current.

Through these a large part of the volume of the floods now escapes, and this force the river is expending in its prehistoric occupation of land-building—a process wholly incompatible with the occupation of this vast alluvial district by man. Instead of letting this worse than wasted force be thus employed, the plan recommended by the commission proposes to utilize the entire force of the river to deepen its channel for the safe transit of the immense products of the valley, and for the safe discharge of its entire volume of flood waters without interrupting in any manner the avocations of commerce and agriculture. That it is entirely practicable to retain within the present levees the entire flood discharge of the river, if they be repaired, even without raising them any higher, I will now endeavor to prove.

* * * * * * *

Some idea of the immense increase in the capacity of the river to discharge its floods, as a result of the reduction of friction and increase of slope, may be inferred from a few facts I have tabulated from the exact measurement of Humphreys and Abbot during the floods of 1851 and 1858. They are excerpted from Appendix D of their report. These measurements were made at two places on the river nearly 1,000 miles apart, and when the floods were confined within the levees.

FIRST—AT COLUMBUS, 20 MILES BELOW CAIRO.

1853.	Height in feet.	Discharge per second in cubic feet.	Mean velocity in feet.
June 15, 1858, height of river above low water	40.1	1,349,400	8.19
June 28, 1858	38.0	1,156,960	7.22
Difference	2.1	192,440	.97

SECOND—AT COLUMBUS.

June 15, 1858	40.1	1,349,400	8.19
July 1, 1858	33.3	841,487	5.62
Difference	6.8	507,913	2.57

THIRD—AT CARROLLTON, NEAR NEW ORLEANS.

February 24, 1851	11.8	894,491	5.04
March 17, 1851	14.8	1,152,504	6.22
Difference	3.0	258,013	1.18

FOURTH—AT CARROLLTON.

February 21, 1851	10.1	766,497	4.41
March 8, 1851	14.1	1,068,464	5.81
Difference	4.0	301,967	1.40

FIFTH—AT CARROLLTON.

March 19, 1851	14.9	1,149,398	6.19
August 25, 1851	8.1	572,388	3.38
Difference	6.8	577,010	2.81

We see by the first table that when the river at Columbus was 83 feet above low-water mark an additional rise of only 2.1 feet was sufficient to increase the mean current nearly 1 foot per second, and that the discharge was one-sixth greater. The depth of river at the time was about 96 feet. Therefore this 16 per cent. increase of discharge was attained with the addition of only one-fortieth part of its depth.

The second table shows that a decrease of 6.8 feet in the height of the river at this place resulted in a loss of more than 2½ feet per second in the current and a diminution of 508,000 cubic feet per second in the discharge. If we suppose the banks of the river to have been 90 feet above the bottom of the channel, this table proves that with levees only 7 feet high upon them, they would retain a sufficiently increased volume to add 60 per cent. to the discharge of the river, and over 45 per cent. to the velocity of the current.

The third table shows that at Carrollton, near New Orleans, an increase of 3 feet in the height of the river added nearly 30 per cent. to the amount which was discharged (almost doubling the percentage of increase shown with a rise of 2.1 feet at Columbus) while the current was accelerated at the same time more than 20 per cent.

The fourth table shows that at 4 feet greater height of the river it discharged 40 per cent. more water and that its current was increased 32 per cent.

The fifth table shows that with a difference of only 6.8 feet the discharge of the river at Carrollton was more than double. The river here at the lowest stage was 115 feet deep. Hence there was an increase of only one-seventeenth part of its total depth required to produce this astonishing difference in the discharge of the river. The velocity was at the same time increased 85 per cent.

These tables are the result of actual observation and careful measurements. They represent stubborn facts, without any theorizing, and they show how absurd are some of the statements made as to the effect of outlets in lowering the floods of the river. For instance, the fifth table shows that when the river (March 19, 1851) was nearly up to the highest water mark known at Carrollton, it would have required an outlet larger than the Mississippi itself to lower it 6.8 feet. Such outlet would have had to discharge 577,000 cubic feet per second, while the whole river could only discharge 572,000 feet, when its surface was 6.8 feet lower.

This enormous quantity of water (577,000 cubic feet per second) would cover a square mile 1 foot deep in about forty-eight seconds. In twenty-four hours it would cover 1,800 miles to the same depth, and in less than a fortnight it would put an average depth of 3 feet over an area as large as the entire State of New Jersey. To lower the river only 2 feet at Carrollton, when in flood, would require an outlet as big as Red River. This is because such loss of volume lowers the slope and increases the frictional resistance in the main stream below the outlet; and this causes it to flow more slowly, and thus prevents that great reduction in its height which the thoughtless would expect.

When we refer to the three principles governing this problem and know how thoroughly they are established by experience, observation, and experiment, and remember the intimate relation existing between the quantity of sediment carried and the velocity of the current, it would seem impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than that the loss of velocity which invariably accompanies a lower height of the flood line can not fail to result in a deposition of sediment in the channel of the river where such loss of velocity occurs during a flood when the water is carrying such an enormous volume of sediment. But this fact does not rely for proof upon the plain deductions to be drawn from a consideration of the three principles we have referred to. The numerous soundings and examinations made of the bed of the river show that below every outlet its channel is reduced in size by the deposits thrown down as a result of the loss of volume through such outlet and the consequent reduction in velocity of current.

The floods do not come so suddenly but that the increased velocity due to the increased volume is felt many days before the floods rise near the top of the levees, and if these gaps were closed I have no doubt that the increased velocity resulting therefrom would enable the floods to be discharged without any danger of their overtopping the present levees. It is possible that some very extraordinary flood, if it occurred the next year after they were closed, might break through them or escape at some one of the lowest points in them; but extraordinary floods are exceptional, and it is altogether possible that before another one comes the channel of the river would be restored to the dimensions which it had when these levees were intact, and when they were capable of discharging any one of the ordinary floods which occurred.

If they be left open, new shoals and injurious changes in the channel will be occuring at other points of the river than those selected by the commission for immediate improvement, and these new obstructions and changes in the channel will require so much more additional work, and this will undoubtedly cost twice or thrice as much as it will to repair the levees. By repairing them the channel will not only be prevented from becoming worse at any point on the river, but the shoaling which has occurred as a result of these outlets will be removed by the effect of the levees, and the works of improvement can then be limited to the reduction of the excessively wide places which now exist, and which are inclosed by the present lines of levees. These wide places are the cause of cut-offs, caving banks, shifting channels, and vexatious shoals.

The plan of improvement recommended by the commission differs from any other previously proposed for the correction of the channel in the fact that it looks to a rectification of the high-water channel by the ultimate narrowing of these wide places as the only method by which a deep and uniform low-water channel can be permanently secured.

The wide places in the high-water channel create alternations of current velocity and steeper slopes to overcome the excessive frictional resistance. These cause the water to be highly charged with sediment at one part of its journey to the sea, and much less highly charged at others. This creates scouring and depositing in the bed and radical changes in the channel by the caving away of its banks.

By reducing these wide places to a width approximately the same as that of the narrow parts of the river, the friction is reduced, a lower slope and more uniform depth will be obtained, and the velocity of current will not be subject to its present changes. A uniform charge of sediment will result from uniformity of current velocity, and the caving of the banks will then be practically arrested, for the reason that when the water has the full charge of sediment due to its velocity it can carry no more, and can not, therefore, scour the channel more deeply, by which the undermining of the banks is effected. Permanence of channel will not, therefore, be secured until excessive widths are reduced. A less depth at low water than 20 feet will not insure stability of channel for the reason that a less depth will result from only a partial reduction of the wide places.

Permanence of channel will be attained only in proportion as uniformity of width of the high-water channel is attained, and when this is secured the depth at low water may be considerably more than 20 feet, but it will certainly not be less. The sooner these wide places are corrected the less will the improvement of the river cost. The maintenance of the levees, as far as they may be necessary to control the floods, will greatly lessen the cost of the work, because the retention of the water within them will prevent new shoals from forming during the narrowing of the wide places, and because the larger is the volume of a silt-bearing river in flood time the deeper will be its channel.

Through the 330 miles below the mouth of Red River the river has a comparatively uniform width, and the caving of the banks is very slight as compared with the changes occurring in the 820 miles above Red River. In conclusion, I may say that what I have urged here in regard to the closing of these gaps is but a repetition of an argument made by me before the Committee on Commerce of the House six years ago (1876). In closing my address to the committee, I then said:

"There can be no doubt of the entire feasibility of so correcting the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf that a channel depth of 20 feet during the low-water seasons can be permanently secured throughout its entire course, and that the alluvial lands on each side of its waters can be made absolutely safe from overflow without levees by such correction. This can be accomplished for a sum entirely within the ability of the Government, and one really insignificant when compared with the magnitude of the benefits which would flow from such improvement. Until such work is accomplished an annual expenditure for the maintenance of the levees is imperative."

In the report for 1883 we find the following views at that time regarding levees:

"The facts observed during the past year, of which the more important have been here recapitulated, have corroborated the views of the commission heretofore expressed in reference to the utility of levees as a means of channel improvement. This statement is made as heretofore, with the limitation that for purposes of channel improvement merely the limit of economy is reached with the confinement of the ordinary flood, and does not extend to the restraint of the abnormal or extraordinary flood. The result of this qualification is that the building of levees to the height necessary to protect the alluvial basin from overflow is not necessary as a part of a logical plan of river improvement. The work of determining approximately what will be the necessary height of such system of levees has been in the hands of a committee since a time prior to the last report who will report upon it as soon as the extensive investigations necessary to reach satisfactory conclusions upon the subject can be finished."

It will be seen, in view of the facts developed by chart 28 and the theories advanced in the text, that the extraordinary floods must be controlled.

Chart 28 of the report of 1883 shows the effect of maintaining the levees continuously for many years. Chart 27 shows the portion of the river immediately above the former. Here the land was less valuable and the levees less thoroughly maintained. Charts 26 and 25 show the river above the last one, where the effect of escapements of the floods, made many miles above, have, after passing over extensive swamps and depositing their sand, returned again into the river almost clear and ready to take up a fresh burden. The tendency of the river to correct its width has thus been continually disturbed by defective levees above these places, as well as by imperfect levees in these localities.

Of the contraction works it says on the same page:

"Wherever the contraction works had been even approximately completed, the depths were nearly double those found on the unimproved portions of the river in their vicinity. It seems as if this fact should settle all doubts as to the possibility of so improving the navigation of the river by the methods adopted by the commission as to meet any reasonable requirement."

Mr. GIBSON. This celebrated engineer, who has been so successful at the mouth of the river, insists on the application of the jetty system from the mouth to Cairo, and I wish Senators would do themselves and the great interests involved in the improvement of the Mississippi the justice to read his letter on the subject.

I attempted the other day before the Senate to explain as far as I could the principles upon which the theory and plan of that engineer rested, and I am sure if Senators will read his letter and give a little thought to the subject they will see that while the Senate bill provides $600,000 less for the Mississippi River than the House bill, the Senate bill is founded upon better principles not only of hydraulic engineering but of economy. I see for one that unless this plan shall be executed with economy and produce results that will justify these expenditures, the improvement of the Mississippi River will break down. I hope it will not be permitted to fail on account of misrepresentations or through influences inimical to or jealous of the greatest natural water way in our country. The fate of this measure is watched with eager interest by the millions of people in the Mississippi Valley, whose voice will again be heard demanding that the claims of this great river for improvement shall not be neglected.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I think that the wisest thing we can do at this moment—and now I am addressing myself to the proposition of my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS]—is to insist upon all our amendments; and I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw the particular instruction that he proposed, especially so as that particular amendment is in no possible danger. I do not believe there are five Senators here who are not in favor of continuing the improvement about the city of Washington on the Potomac River. But it is manifest that if we enter upon the question of specific instructions we shall occupy anew the time of the Senate with reference to these different questions. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is very much interested in one branch of this bill, as I am, namely, that portion of it which accepts the Illinois and Michigan Canal. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] just now has made a very able and considerate argument in favor of the Senate amendment for the improvement of the Mississippi River, including the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas. The other House, it seems, did not agree with that provision.

Now if we argue them over and over again here the effect will be that at the end we shall be practically in no better position in reference to this bill than we shall now be if we insist upon the Senate amendments one and all and intrust this question again to our conferees, having faith that they will do what they understand to be the best thing to do as representing the true vote and sentiment of the Senate upon these questions.

So I trust my friend from Kansas now will withdraw his motion to instruct and that we shall take the vote upon the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

Mr. HOAR. I desire to raise a question of order on that motion if it is insisted on. Let the Chair have the motion read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the managers on the part of the Senate insist upon retaining Senate amendment appropriating $375,000 for continuing the improvement of the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator read it in a different form. There was a point of order I had in my mind, which will not lie against this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair understands the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], he moved, instead of the proposition of the Senator from Kansas, the following:

That the Senate insist on its amendments, including the clauses thereof referred to in the message of the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for.

Mr. ALLISON. I will offer that if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] is satisfied.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has endeavored to put the Senator's motion in form.

Mr. INGALLS. That proposition is the last one made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Iowa to move it as an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Senate insist upon its amendment, including the clauses thereof referred to in the message of the House, and agree to the conference asked for.

Mr. MCMILLAN and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on this amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion as amended.

The motion was agreed to; and, by unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of G. W. Church and 26 other citizens of Montague, Tex., praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CALL presented the petition of the Pensacola (Fla.) Board of Trade and Exchange, praying that provision be made by the present Congress for the protection and prosecution of the important public works which have been undertaken for the improvement of rivers and harbors; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3173) for the relief of Samuel H. Flemming, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 2878) to amend section 3860 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment, to report it back favorably with amendments, and I give notice that immediately upon the completion of the fortification bill I shall ask the Senate to consider this bill.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2714) to submit to the Court of Claims for adjudication the title of William McGarrahan to the Rancho Panoche Grande tract of land, in the State of California, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred certain messages from the President of the United States returning the following bills with his objections thereto, submitted reports thereon recommending the passage of the bills, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding:

A bill (S. 857) granting a pension to Dudley B. Branch; and

A bill (S. 1630) granting a pension to James C. Chandler.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2124) amendatory of and supplementary to "an act to alter the judicial districts of Pennsylvania, and for other purposes," approved May 26, 1824, and providing an additional place for holding the several courts thereof, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9857) in relation to the western judicial district of Wisconsin, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2553) for the relief of Thomas A. Osborne, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2483) to grant to the trustees of the German Lutheran Trinity congregation of Washington, D. C., the right to sell a portion of their cemetery lands, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 118) relative to certain papers in the State Department by error, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution submitted by Mr. CALL on the 9th instant in relation to the arrest and detention of American citizens in Mexico, reported it with the recommendation that its further consideration be indefinitely postponed, and reported the following resolution in lieu thereof, recommending its passage:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the Senate all the information and correspondence in his possession concerning the imprisonment of citizens of the United States in Mexico, and any delays or injustice in respect of their being brought to trial, or their trial, and what efforts have been made by the Executive Departments to redress such grievances, if any exist.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5196) to detach certain counties from the United States judicial district of California and create the United States judicial district of Southern California, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 982) granting the right of way to the Wyoming Central Railway Company across the Fort Fetterman military reservation, in the Territory of Wyoming, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

HASKELL MULTICHARGE GUN.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the testimony taken before the two Houses of Congress on the Haskell multicharge gun, with the accompanying reports, be printed, and that 200 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2879) granting an increase of pension to Matthew McFarlan Lewey; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2878) donating condemned cast-iron cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2881) for the relief of G. D. Hamilton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JUDGE FOR SOUTHERN ALABAMA—JUDICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. PUGH. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to allow me to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed House bill 28, and to accompany that with a request to the House to return that bill to the Senate. I make this motion with the knowledge and consent of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who offered an amendment to this bill. The bill merely provides for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama, while the amendment affects the salaries of all district judges.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent of the Senate for leave at this time to offer a motion to reconsider the action of the Senate on the passage of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 28) to provide for the appointment and compensation of a district judge for the southern district of Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The motion to reconsider will be entered and the usual request for the return of the bill from the House of Representatives will be sent.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill 9798.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL COURTS IN COLORADO.

Mr. TELLER. I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts to lay the appropriation bill aside temporarily to allow me to call up a bill which has been recalled from the other House. The bill came from the House to the Senate, and was amended after it came from the committee. Finding that it is impossible to get it through the House, I have had it recalled, and now ask to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, and that we disagree to the amendment and let the bill become a law. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide for terms of court in Colorado. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator also moves to reconsider the vote on the third reading of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment made by the Senate will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "year" in line 6 the Senate inserted "instead of the terms now provided by law."

The vote adopting the amendment was reconsidered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to explain, and then I shall leave it to the Senate to do what it likes. The committee recommended that amendment, or it was put on here, I do not remember which.

Mr. TELLER. It was put on here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the ground that as the bill was drawn it provides on the face of it for other and different terms from those now fixed by law without abolishing the other terms. If that construction be correct—and in point of mere literal law I think it really is, although that is not what was meant to be done—then as in criminal cases (as the judges will not call the old terms) the man must be bound over to the next legal term of court. I am afraid there may be a failure of justice. My friend from Colorado thinks that as the judge himself drew the bill he and all the other judges will construe it to be a provision in lieu of the old terms. I think that in point of law administered in a criminal case it will not bear that construction; but as I have stated to the Senator from Colorado who thinks it quite desirable to get it done now, if he is willing to take the risk I have nothing to say.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the amendment may be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Now, I hope the bill will pass without amendment.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the bill proceeds I desire to give notice that immediately upon its conclusion I shall ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution relating to the surplus in the Treasury, and I think from what I know of the fortification bill that it will not take much time, so that I can call up the joint resolution by 3 or 4 o'clock.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me for a moment to call up House bill 8738 to amend the Revised Statutes as to packing and selling cut tobacco. I very seldom make such a request, but this bill will take but a very few minutes.

Mr. DAWES. I should be very glad to——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to appeal, too. I have a bill I should like to pass.

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to appeal, too.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to call up a bill reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia for the purpose of erecting a bridge over the Eastern Branch at the eastern end of Pennsylvania avenue, a very important bill.

Mr. DAWES. I have no recourse but to object.

Mr. EUSTIS. I am unable to hear the answer of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I am compelled under the circumstances to decline to yield.

Mr. EUSTIS. I must appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts. This is a bill which has passed the House of Representatives and been reported by the Finance Committee. It is simply with reference to the mode of packing tobacco.

Mr. MILLER. I shall object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The fortification bill is before the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the formal reading will be dispensed with, and the bill will be read in connection with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. What bill is it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to state before the reading of the bill commence that the bill as it came from the House contained an appropriation of $620,000, although the estimates of the Department for the necessities of fortifications and coast defense were $3,396,000. The act of last year contained an appropriation of $725,000. The amount proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations to this bill is $6,010,000. That amount is added to the bill, so that the amount of the bill as reported to the Senate is $6,630,000.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Senate is impatient at any debate upon matters under consideration, I think that it will contribute to the speedy disposition of this bill if I should in as few words as possible explain to the Senate what has led the Committee on Appropriations to recommend this departure not only from the bill as it has come from the House of Representatives, but from the fortification bills which have passed both branches of Congress for a great many years past.

It is true that for over twenty years Congress has appropriated for fortifications and coast defenses but little more, if any, in any one year than the amount appropriated in this bill as it came from the House, that is $600,000 yearly for nearly twenty-five years.

Mr. HAWLEY. How was that divided—for what purposes?

Mr. DAWES. About $100,000 of it was appropriated to the preservation and care simply of the fortifications of the country, not one dollar for the improvement of their efficiency or the enlargement of their power and ability to do what they were erected for. The miserable balance of $400,000 or $500,000 from year to year has been devoted to minor propositions, the construction of small guns, the purchase of powder, and other matters of no moment at all.

Mr. HARRIS. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether I understood him to say that the estimates of the Department were about $3,000,000?

Mr. DAWES. Three million three hundred and ninety-six thousand dollars.

Mr. HARRIS. Did I further understand him to say that the Senate Committee on Appropriations had recommended the appropriation of something over $6,000,000?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator ought to have understood me so. I said that the Committee on Appropriations had added to this bill by way of amendment $6,010,000, making the appropriations in the bill as recommended by the committee $6,630,000.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I would be glad to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I want to hear his explanation as to why the committee has exceeded the estimates.

Mr. DAWES. I hope that the Senator from Tennessee will give me his attention, for I thought it was due to the Senate that there should be some explanation of this considerable departure from the precedents in this respect.

I have said that only $100,000 or such a matter each year had been appropriated for over twenty years to the preservation and care of the fortifications of the country. The result of this policy of appropriations simply for the preservation and repair of fortifications without any addition or improvement has been that while the fortifications of this country in 1860 were perfectly ample for the purposes for which they were erected, and equal in reference to the power of assault upon them from armament on the sea to those of any other country in the world, the utter failure by this policy of any enlargement or improvement during all the time from 1860 to this present day has been, in view of the great improvement of the power and effective work possible from offensive warfare from the sea, to leave all our ports absolutely defenseless.

There is not a port of the United States that can offer the slightest resistance to the approach of a hostile vessel of war which now would rank at all among the first-class vessels of war. There are powers, what are called third or fourth rate powers, among the nations of the earth who possess ships of war capable of laying the port of New York under contribution, if not in ashes, in an hour's time, or any other port of the United States, in spite of any resistance that any of those ports can offer to any hostile vessel of war that can be sent into them. And not only can they lay them in ashes or under contribution, but, being the center from which radiates commerce by railroad or international commerce, it would be the same as seizing the center of the nervous system of the body in a close grasp or cutting it with a knife; it would paralyze the entire commercial interests of the country.

This has been called to the attention of Congress from time to time. It is no new statement on my part. Nothing which I can offer in support of the amendments proposed by the committee will have the attraction of anything new in statement. It is an old story, often repeated, that such has been the progress of improvement in the armament of war vessels owned by other countries, and such has been the stationary condition of our coast defenses, that in view of them we are, as I say, perfectly defenseless.

There are now in construction guns that are to be carried upon vessels of war incased in an armament of wrought steel 30 inches in thickness, and which will carry themselves a projectile of 2,000 pounds, or a ton's weight, for 10 miles.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that?

Mr. DAWES. Being constructed in England at this moment is a war vessel and guns with which to arm it which, I beg leave to repeat, will be of such formidable character as to be incased in an armament of steel 30 inches in thickness and carrying a projectile of 2,000 pounds 10 miles. It so happens that the harbors into which vessels of the deepest draught may enter are the great commercial centers of the country and are more exposed than any other points upon our coast, and into them a vessel owned by the inconsiderable, in comparison with us, power of Chili or Italy is able to enter to-day to work the ruin or the subjection of the great commercial centers and through them all the radiating nerves of commerce in this country.

Sir, the question which the Committee on Appropriations met and which they have endeavored in some part to answer is this: Are we content to continue this condition of things? Are we content to confess to the whole world that we are entirely helpless in defense? Are we content to present this Government in such a helpless condition that in all our negotiations with foreign powers, in all our treatment with them or complications which necessarily arise, we are to take their terms? The committee felt as if that question had been ignored from year to year quite long enough. They felt that in some respects this was an opportune moment to seek, if possible, to adopt some policy that would clearly bring us into some condition of defense on our coast commensurate with our importance in other respects as a nation and our wealth and enterprise and growth, which are all temptations to those who might desire, in our helpless condition, to pick a quarrel with us.

While we have been thus hesitating, other nations have been assiduous in their efforts to keep their coast defenses abreast pari passu with all the improvements which have been adopted in modern warfare in the armament of vessels and in the construction of guns. While we have left ourselves prostrate before England she has erected at Halifax on our north and at the Bermuda Islands on our south fortifications of modern improvement and of modern strength and capacity; so that in our present condition she actually commands us. Although there is nothing in our present relations with England that would lead us to suppose that our present peaceful condition in reference to her may not continue, yet she has the power to take in her great war vessels at either point and from them to dictate to us any terms she might please to impose in any negotiations, even the pending negotiations in reference to the fisheries.

I say that other nations have been thus assiduous. They have developed the true method of improving armament, and they present to us to-day the results of all their experiments and inventions, and we are able, if we are disposed to avail ourselves of them all, to start from this time forward where they leave off. We are safe if we avail ourselves of existing knowledge upon the subject and all the expense to which other nations have resorted. And, sir, this is an opportune moment in other respects. The Treasury of this country is in such a condition as will justify an appropriation of as large an amount in entering upon this policy as can be economically and wisely expended. There is even in the Treasury so much money that some of us are willing, as has been expressed upon this floor, to vote for very extraordinary outlays for rivers and harbors and for like appropriations in order to get that money out of the Treasury and into circulation among the people. If that was a sound policy for a statesman upon this floor, here is an opportunity to expend money in a way that will bring to the country permanent and indispensable benefits.

Therefore the committee made up their minds that it would not do for us to continue this state of things any longer, and they addressed themselves to the best means, and to what means would be justified in this present condition of things, toward inaugurating a policy which would at least lead this Government to put itself in a comparative attitude of safe defense.

The great outlay and that which will cost the most time and money is the construction of the armament of fortifications and of vessels of war. If we were prepared to enter to-morrow upon the work of constructing guns that would compare favorably with those already completed and in existence and in operation among foreign nations, it would take us two years or two years and a half before a single gun would be constructed and ready for use. But before that is to be considered in what way and by what means shall we obtain those guns. There are three ways of obtaining them. One is to purchase them abroad, constructed in the great gun foundries of England or France, and import them. The answer to that is twofold. First, in the condition of the opportunities and ability to construct guns abroad, there is no capacity existing abroad to supply the foreign demand; there is no ability in the largest plants abroad to take a contract in addition to what they now have to supply the Government of the United States with any considerable supply of these guns. They would, therefore, be obliged to enlarge their plant and require as much time for that purpose as would be required by us for the construction of a plant to produce these guns.

Another answer is that to be dependent upon foreign nations for the supply of guns for our own defense is to surrender in advance our power to defend ourselves, for the moment that any difficulty should arise with the foreign nation with whose subject we had that contract, that moment our ability to supply ourselves with the means of defense would be cut off, and therefore we should be as dependent as if we had made no effort whatever.

The committee were led step by step to the conclusion they have arrived at in their amendments to this bill, and the first step was to determine that if possible they would seek to embark in the work of producing the armament for the fortifications of this country. The next step was to determine that in securing these guns they would if possible determine that they should be made in this country, and thereby make ourselves as independent in our ability to arm ourselves as we should be when we had got possession of the guns themselves.

The next step was to determine how in this country it could be brought about that these large results could come to us whatever inducement we might hold out by way of appropriation. There are three ways of doing it. One way is to open up this project to everybody and advertise for bids from those who would undertake to furnish the Government with this material. The answer to that was apparent to the committee, that an outlay in the outset to the amount of a million dollars was perhaps necessary, for anybody who would undertake to manufacture a single gun of the quality required, and there being no such manufactory now existent in this country, no men to offer in advance to take a contract that would involve them in the first instance in an outlay of a million dollars, and then trust not only to the uncertainty of obtaining a contract but to the uncertainty of its continuance for more than a single year, so that the committee were compelled to abandon that project.

Another project and another step in the investigations of the committee was to consider whether the United States could not in some sort of partnership with private enterprise so encourage it that it would come forward and invest itself in such plant. The answer to that is from experience everywhere that it is not only fruitless but entangling and always accompanied with loss and ultimate abandonment.

The committee, however, were led to inquire whether it were possible under any circumstances to embark in this country in the production of the materials suitable for the proper armament of our coast defenses. That involves a preliminary question before all others, whether there exists in this country the proper material out of which to construct such armament. On that point the committee had the advantage of the investigation which the Senate had ordered two years ago by a special committee of which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] was chairman, which made, after a most thorough and exhaustive examination of the resources of this country in this regard, a report to the Senate which is full of not only most valuable information an instruction upon these points, but information which is most gratifying to those who feel the necessity of so developing this country as to put it upon an independent footing in all its relations to the other countries of the world. From that report they learned, and upon it they act in this bill, that this nation has at hand all the material of the quality and the quantity needed, and so located as to be able in and of itself to produce from itself everything necessary to make the coast armament and the fortifications of this country equal to the exigencies and necessities of this day.

Then it was considered by the committee that if the Government could not do this itself, could not do it in partnership with private enterprise, was it possible to divide this work, and is there any part of it that private enterprise can well and successfully, and more so than the Government, undertake, and is there some part of it that the Government can better perform than private enterprise? And upon this point they had the benefit of a board called the gun foundry board, appointed by act of Congress three or four years since, that considered this subject most elaborately and made a report, and of a commission that was appointed by the last fortification act, which has also reported, which commission consisted of the Secretary of War as its president, General Benét, General Newton, Lieut. Col. Henry L. Abbot, Capt. Charles S. Smith, Commander W. T. Sampson, Commander C. S. Goodrich, and Messrs. Joseph Morgan, jr., and Erastus Corning from civil life. They all join, and the committee have adopted their conclusions upon the developments of the special committee of which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] was chairman, that it is possible to make this division of the work; first, that the rough casting, the material, the parts of all the gun armament and armor of the country could best be produced out of material in this country by private enterprise, and that the finishing and the completing and the putting together for final use of these parts thus produced was better to be done in a Government establishment than by private enterprise.

The operating considerations which led to this were that an establishment made for the purpose of producing the rough parts of the gun could also be utilized in other private enterprises, would not be exclusively devoted to the uses of the Government, and that therefore they could be maintained at less cost and with more prospect of successful and profitable operation than could those that were established for the final finishing up and nice construction of those parts which would require machinery of great force and of special application, so that they could be used for nothing else, and an establishment for that work could look nowhere else for remuneration except by contracts with the Government. Therefore it was thought by these boards—which opinion the Committee on Appropriations adopted in this bill—that it was better to divide the whole work and to contrive some method by which the rough parts would be constructed at private establishments and the finer finishing of those parts by the Government.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to ask whether I understood the Senator correctly in saying that the report of the committee of which the Senator from Connecticut was chairman ascertained that we had in this country steel and other materials suitable for heavy ordnance, such as would be required for modern warfare?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Connecticut of course will answer that much better than myself. I will say that the committee so understand the report of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the question was addressed to the Senator from Massachusetts, and I did not pay close attention. Will the Senator from Louisiana kindly repeat it?

Mr. GIBSON. The question was whether we have in this country the necessary materials, steel, &c.?

Mr. HAWLEY. We make as fine steel as there is in the world for certain purposes, and we have a large number of open-hearth furnaces, some of them capable of producing and producing very large quantities. I am not aware that the steel-makers of any nation in the world confine themselves absolutely and strictly to the ores of their own country; but I think we are more nearly independent than any other nation; and in reality, if it be needed, we can furnish from the ore up to the manganese, everything that is necessary to the operation of making steel, from our own soil. We do not produce it now in the sizes; we have no machinery in the sizes adapted to large guns, but it requires only a respectable contract to induce any one of a dozen manufacturers to undertake that.

Mr. GIBSON. I am very much gratified to hear that we have steel to make the heaviest ordnance in modern warfare.

Mr. HAWLEY. We have the steel and can produce it now in a small quantity, but there is no plant that is capable of producing and wielding and handling it. We now make admirable steel for all ordinary purposes, and can, if necessary, confine ourselves to domestic materials entirely.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senator from Louisiana has only to study the report and the evidence accompanying it made by the Senator from Connecticut to be relieved of any doubt. The fact that there exists in this country the material in the quantity necessary, of the finest quality, to produce this armament, that it is brought into use, no one intends to declare; but the upshot of this bill, as amended, is to bring it forth, to demonstrate its existence here. The very fact that all these resources are within our reach is of itself an element of strength in any contest we may have with foreign nations who undertake to arrogate to themselves all the facilities of making the armaments of the world.

Going upon that supposition and upon that idea of division, I will state the next step taken by the committee. It is perfectly evident, as I have said in reference to another point, that in order for any private concern to undertake to produce at all any portion of the armament which it is proposed to produce, they must first make a very large outlay of capital, investment, plant—a plant which will depend almost exclusively upon the chance of obtaining a contract with the Government to produce this article. As I have said, no half-dozen concerns, companies, organizations will enter into an investment in advance before the Government upon the uncertainty of a competition in entering into this contract. Then it must take at least two years to perfect such a plant, and no man is going to make that investment in advance of knowing what he is going to do.

The committee, following the suggestions of these boards, and the other committee to which I take such pleasure in alluding, whose help in this matter the Committee on Appropriations are so willing to acknowledge, make this proposition: They offer to contract after advertisement for thirty days with anybody who will enter into a contract with the Government to produce a certain quantity of this material; and they say you shall not depend for the ability to fulfill this contract on our part upon a yearly appropriation, which is always subject to the contingencies of Congressional action, but we will say to you that this contract shall be to the extent of $6,000,000. For that amount we want as early as practicable to be produced all the specifications indicated in the bill, and that you shall have six years to fulfill this contract, requiring them to complete their plant and be able to produce portions of it within a year and a half or two years.

This is the plan of the committee. Along with it comes the idea that the Government has establishments furnished to some extent now, and if this plan is adopted to enlarge, to meet this branch of the case, a plant in which they can assemble and finish and put together the parts of this armament just as fast as they can be produced by private contract.

I apologize to the Senate for taking so much time to explain this plan. Any Senator who has followed me will see the idea of the committee. If any Senator feels satisfied with the present condition of things he of course will not vote for this proposition. If any Senator, feeling that he is not satisfied with this condition of things, desires to enter upon any method of restoring to their relative power and efficacy the fortifications of this country and yet does not agree to this method, it will be certainly within his power to offer by way of amendment such suggestions as will improve and work out the problem that the committee desire to work out.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. DAWES. I will say before the Senator puts his interrogatory that with any Senator who with the committee agrees that this condition of things ought not longer to exist, but who may not quite agree with the plan suggested by the committee, the committee will have no struggle, but will join heartily with any Senator in an earnest and honest effort to improve this plan in such a way as will most effectively and most speedily accomplish the result which he and they have at heart. But with any Senator who is satisfied with the confessed helpless and defenseless condition of this country, confessed to the world, the committee have an earnest and a sincere difference. They feel that the country has continued in this condition quite long enough. They feel that this is a serious question which commends itself to the statesmanship of the Senate and can not be longer ignored.

The fact that for twenty-five years we have gone on developing and increasing in population and wealth and have suffered no harm from this condition of things does not to the Committee on Appropriations seem a sufficient argument for continuing this condition of things, but rather an argument that we should make haste, availing ourselves of our increased abilities as well as our increased necessities to seek out the best and the most efficient remedy.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON] said to me that before he put his question to the Senator from Massachusetts he would allow me to make a suggestion about the difficulties I have in regard to the bill, and that I might ask to see whether some improvement could not be made.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to add a few words more?

Mr. BECK. After I have made a few suggestions I will yield, because it is only at this point that I desire to do it, and I do not wish to take the Senator from New Jersey off the floor. I desire to explain something of the extent the committee went, because I am a member of the committee, and I have had a good deal of difficulty to know what it was best to do.

Mr. DAWES. Would it not be as convenient to the Senator to postpone his remarks until I have said all I desire to say?

Mr. BECK. Of course; but I should a great deal rather have the Senator tell me wherein I am mistaken. It is only that.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

Mr. BECK. I was very much at ease with regard to this bill, as the Senator knows. My desire is to procure the best guns, and to procure them now, and then to go on and make more. I went to see the commanding general of the Army and had a long and very interesting conversation with him. I went to see the Secretary of the Navy and had an interesting conversation with him. I went wherever I thought I could obtain information. The result of my examination was that guns are what we want, and big guns; that we want them now, and then we want to make as many more as we can on the best terms which can be made; to make them at home ultimately, but not to wait defenseless until we can make such as we need. I want to see the ports of Boston, New York, Norfolk, and San Francisco, which seem to be the most important points, fortified now; and my desire was to buy from Mr. Krupp or anybody else in the world enough guns to give us protection while we were going on.

This bill seems to me to fail to do that, and as we have waited for years and years, lying at the mercy of England as the Senator has said, with Halifax on one side of us and Bermuda on the other, to dictate terms, I do not want to lie that way any longer, nor to wait until we make guns of our own and establish plants of our own, which may be very difficult. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] made a statement the other day before the committee which was so full of information and so hopeful of the future that I think the time is not far distant when we can do it.

As to fortifications, I should keep up what we have got, partly for ornamentation and partly for the purpose of showing what we have once had. As the commanding-general of the Army said to me, he would rather have something in the shape of guns. He said that he would dig the holes if we would give him the guns, and I believe he will, and he will have a sufficient amount of troops and a safe place to prevent the landing of any hostile force from any fleet.

I am not going to vote against this bill. I am for it. I will take the chances on it, whether it is right or wrong; but I should like to add to it something that would give us some guns now, such as all the world use. As the Senator from Massachusetts said, we can not buy them abroad, because where they are making first-class guns they can not fill their contracts. That shows that there are some guns which the world has accepted as being first class, and we had better have some of them added also to what we are going to make, and then make as good as those are and improve on them if we can, and I think we can, for I believe if the opportunity was given to us we have talent enough to improve on anything made anywhere. But it takes time and it takes a great deal of expense, and a plant has to be established.

I intended to propose an amendment to have Mr. Barlow test a gun. That amendment was to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of War to procure one 8-inch cast-iron rifled cannon, to be constructed after the design and under the superintendence of Milton Barlow, of Richmond, Ky., and for testing the same, $20,000: Provided, That the said Barlow shall make no claim on the United States other than an amount which may seem reasonable to the Secretary of War for his services in superintending the construction and testing of said gun, and which amount shall be paid from the sum above appropriated.

This gun is designed by a simple and effectual method to accomplish the same object for which the multicharged gun is designed, namely, a prolonged application of force to a heavy shot. Barlow's plan of gun will be like ordinary guns of the same caliber except an increase of length and a different method of charging and consuming an increased charge of powder. It is intended that this gun is to be made at the South Boston Iron Works, an establishment that served us so well during the late war and has been held intact at great expense expecting patronage from the Government, &c.

The only reason why I wanted that appropriation made is because I have known Mr. Barlow so long. He invented the first rifle-gun in 1866, and he is one of the best men I ever saw to make things useful. I could not get that put in; perhaps it would not be right; but still I want something done, and to appropriate money, I do not care how much, in the bounds of reason, to relieve us from our present defenseless position. That is what I want. The very statement the Senator from Massachusetts has made about the power England has over us and the humiliating condition we are in, ought to be removed at once. I would regret nothing so much as to see England, France, or Germany do anything to humiliate us. When there was trouble between Chili and Peru I would not have regretted so much if Chili had sent some ship of war to make some demonstration upon us, perhaps to bore a hole or two in the post-office in New York or some other fine public building, to show our folly in being so defenseless so long. We could have stood that from some little power, though not from a big one, only to illustrate the condition we are in.

I do not believe the bill goes quite far enough to get us something now while we are waiting to see if we can make these great guns; and that is my objection to it, after talking with the best informed men upon the subject.

Mr. DAWES. No one can appreciate more than I do, and the rest of the committee, the attitude of the Senator from Kentucky toward this measure, and certainly no one would more heartily co-operate with him in the very direction he has indicated than I myself. As to his allusion to the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut before the committee, I would not take a word of that out of the mouth of the Senator from Connecticut, but I choose to have him make the impression that we know he will upon the Senate and which he did make upon the committee, when I shall get through with my remarks.

Mr. BECK. I did not mean that. I meant to say that I hoped the Senator from Connecticut would tell the Senate in substance what he said to the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt we shall have the benefit of it. I should regret very much if we did not.

On the point of obtaining guns sooner than these plants would obtain them, I should like very much some plan that would result in that; but we are informed by this very able board which made its report to this session of Congress, and which was appointed last year, over which the Secretary of War presided, the ablest board that it was possible for the President to select to test means for us to procure guns of Krupp or any of those great establishments, that they are employed now to their utmost capacity in filling the contracts of nations abroad, and that it would be impossible for them to undertake to produce for us any considerable number of these guns, or any gun perhaps until they had enlarged their plant, which would take substantially as much time as it would to develop as efficient a plant here. So, very little time would be gained by any resort to a foreign purchase for that purpose.

My idea is (it may be a crude one, and may not be worth anything) for us to hurry on this process as fast as possible, and to supply in the mean time all present exigencies by utilizing the plants in this country in the production of cast-iron guns, which are of great value. Though the common consent of all engineers and learned men on this point is that they are ultimately to be superseded entirely by steel, at present they can be utilized just as far as we can find opportunity and place to put them. There is in this bill a provision looking to that end, but any amendment to the bill which will produce sooner than this proposition does what we want, and at the same time not make us more dependent on foreign nations than we are now, which can be suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, or the Senator from New Jersey who is familiar with these things, will find no more earnest and honest supporter than myself.

Mr. BECK. That is just the difficulty I have had. I do not know what to suggest, but I desired to call out some suggestion from the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DAWES. I am unable, it would be foolishness for me to pretend that I was able, to suggest any method by which we could sooner than this produce any considerable amount of armament. This, in the opinion of the committee, will ultimately produce these results.

Mr. President, one word more and I shall leave this subject. This is a matter which deserves the serious consideration of the Senate. It is embarking upon a policy which must necessarily cost the Government a great deal of money. The fortifications in their present condition (the same they were in in 1860, not improved at all from that time) cost the Government to put them in that position $45,000,000. They are now in comparison with offensive warfare utterly useless. It will cost us many more millions before we get through with this work to put our fortifications again in a position relatively to what they were in in 1860. It is no small or child's work; it is an earnest work; and if it does not address itself to the statesmanship of the country we had better abandon it at once and content ourselves with the helpless condition we find ourselves in. If, on the other hand, we are determined to take hold of it in earnest, let us address ourselves to this plan with such suggestions of improvement as shall come from better knowledge and better experience than the Committee on Appropriations have been able to bring to bear upon the subject.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Before the Senator from Massachusetts sits down I should like to have him answer a question or two, which I presume he has already answered, but owing to my necessary absence from the Chamber I did not hear him. I wish to premise, however, before asking the question, by saying that I am in entire sympathy with him; and in proof of my earnestness and sincerity upon this subject I will state that five years ago I introduced a bill into the Senate making provision for an appropriation of about $5,000,000 for a like purpose, and almost in like terms with those employed by the committee in this bill.

I find, however, on the second page, in the second amendment offered by the committee, that it is proposed to expend $400,000 in the purchase, manufacture, and erection of tools and machinery at a location designated in the bill, namely, Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa. I wish to ask the Senator——

Mr. DAWES. I think the words "Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.," are in there by mistake.

Mr. MCPHERSON. They are in the copy of the bill I have.

Mr. DAWES. Those words are printed in the amendment, but I certainly am of the opinion that they were stricken out.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It seems to me that unless the committee have excellent information touching that point it would be unwise to designate a particular point where the money should be expended, because there are many things to be considered.

Mr. DAWES. I beg the Senator's pardon; those words were left in by design. It was in another part of the bill that that modification was stricken out.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am not prepared to say that the Frankford arsenal is not the best location for these works, but there are many things to be taken into consideration in a measure of this kind. The material being very heavy the matter of transportation should weigh very much. It seems to me that unless the committee are thoroughly advised it would be unwise to designate any particular point, but we should rather leave it to the board appointed to supervise these matters under the direction of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the Senator what led to the insertion of those words. It comes back to me now. There was another location in another part of the bill which it was thought wise to strike out, and I first thought this was the one. If I do not interrupt the Senator I will state it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Not at all.

Mr. DAWES. The committee were led to insert these words because of the establishment already existing at Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, where, on the information the committee had from the Ordnance Bureau, they are in process of doing, on a small scale, the very work which it is proposed to do here, and that it would be economy to go on and develop the work there. If, however, I understand and see the force of the Senator's suggestion——

Mr. MCPHERSON. Is there any water transportation at Frankford, Pa., where these guns when made, or any of the material proposed to be made, could be moved immediately by water transportation?

Mr. DAWES. I am not able myself to answer that question. I was about to say to the Senator that if the location at Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, is any obstacle in that amendment, and he will move to strike it out, I shall not object to leaving it to the discretion of the Secretaries to locate it either there or anywhere else, availing themselves of their knowledge of the existing condition of things at Frankford.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think for safety it would be wise to do it.

Mr. DAWES. When the amendment is reached I shall leave the matter to the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then there is another clause to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator, which he will find near the bottom of the third page. I see that provision is made for testing guns to be manufactured, to be contracted for at the South Boston Iron Works. The first test is a very severe one. They shall endure "a firing test of two hundred rounds with standard charges adapted to such a weapon." I find as we go on there shall be such a test of each of said guns thereafter manufactured and tested by ten rounds in the same manner. I suggest to the Senator that inasmuch as the test of a heavy gun is a very delicate matter and one which requires a good deal of care, he ought to increase the test of all the guns to fifty rounds instead of ten.

Mr. DAWES. That may be.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Because if there is a defect in the individual gun, of course it always produces disaster. Then I would recommend fifty rounds instead of ten rounds.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 17 to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; still further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill numbered 88, 179, and 180; asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CABELL, and Mr. CANNON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 71) for the benefit of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, and Nevada when a Territory.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate to print the proceedings of the Supreme Court of the United States on the occasion of the death of Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice-President of the United States.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2794) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection and construction of a public building at Oxford, Miss.," approved July 12, 1882; and

A bill (S. 2796) to establish a land office at Lamar, Colo.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 658) for the relief of Francis W. Haldeman;

A bill (H. R. 1249) for the relief of Margaret F. Ryan;

A bill (H. R. 1511) for the relief of Sidney R. Smith;

A bill (H. R. 1802) for the relief of Moses B. Walker;

A bill (H. R. 2475) to amend an act approved May 25, 1882, entitled "An act for the construction of a public building at Galveston, Tex.;"

A bill (H. R. 4503) to authorize the Secretary of War to permit the Carrollton and Lock Number One Turnpike Road Company to locate and construct its road on land belonging to the United States at Lock No. 1, on the Kentucky River, in the State of Kentucky;

A bill (H. R. 5552) for the relief of James Cain;

A bill (H. R. 5872) for the relief of R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard;

A bill (H. R. 260) for the relief of Margaret S. Fain;

A bill (H. R. 578) for the relief of Emma J. Halloway;

A bill (H. R. 887) granting a pension to Thomas S. Duvall;

A bill (H. R. 1584) for the relief of Mrs. Aurelia C. Richardson;

A bill (H. R. 1617) for the relief of George H. Lawrence;

A bill (H. R. 1681) for the relief of William Hicks;

A bill (H. R. 2027) granting a pension to Joshua Armstrong;

A bill (H. R. 2964) to restore to the pension-list the name of Abel Mishler, of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. 3118) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Buck;

A bill (H. R. 3551) granting a pension to George W. Cutler, late a private in Company B, Ninth New Hampshire Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 3851) granting a pension to William P. Shelton;

A bill (H. R. 3948) granting a pension to James F. Salyers;

A bill (H. R. 4032) granting a pension to John McGowan;

A bill (H. R. 5041) granting a pension to Sally A. Stone;

A bill (H. R. 5389) granting a pension to Ann Kinney;

A bill (H. R. 5950) granting a pension to Catherine Reisinger;

A bill (H. R. 6425) granting a pension to Jonathan S. Lents;

A bill (H. R. 6606) granting a pension to Sallie B. Bent;

A bill (H. R. 6824) granting a pension to James Savercool;

A bill (H. R. 7163) granting a pension to Peter Adams;

A bill (H. R. 7169) to grant a pension to James Robinson;

A bill (H. R. 7234) granting a pension to Susan Hawes;

A bill (H. R. 7244) granting a pension to Robert B. Kirkpatrick;

A bill (H. R. 7517) for the relief of Warren L. Rice;

A bill (H. R. 7712) granting a pension to Virginia Taylor Randall;

A bill (H. R. 7721) granting a pension to Ellen J. Welch;

A bill (H. R. 7728) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Collins;

A bill (H. R. 7736) to increase the pension of George W. Parks;

A bill (H. R. 7749) granting a pension to Aretus N. Butler;

A bill (H. R. 8046) granting a pension to Erastus W. Kennedy;

A bill (H. R. 8057) for the relief of Theodore Dunmire;

A bill (H. R. 8333) granting a pension to Lucinda Sawyer;

A bill (H. R. 8334) for the relief of Jacob Nix;

A bill (H. R. 8352) for the relief of Levi A. Cronkhite.

A bill (H. R. 8374) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary M. Gillham;

A bill (H. R. 8481) granting a pension to Thomas Walsh;

A bill (H. R. 8556) granting a pension to Abraham Points;

A bill (H. R. 8635) granting a pension to Irene Googins;

A bill (H. R. 8663) to increase the pension of Jonas Schoonover;

A bill (H. R. 8963) granting a pension to Michael Fitzpatrick;

A bill (H. R. 8977) to restore to the pension-roll the name of Samuel Bulman;

A bill (H. R. 9052) granting an increase of pension to Capt. John F. Morris;

A bill (H. R. 9457) granting a pension to Martin V. Curry; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 138) to print 10,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the international sheep and wool show held in Philadelphia in September, 1880.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me that I may call up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill in order to agree to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). If there be no objection the action of the House of Representatives will be laid before the Senate.

The Secretary read the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the second and seventeenth amendments of the Senate, and still further insisting upon its disagreement to the eighty-eighth, one hundred and seventy-ninth, and one hundred and eightieth amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate still further insist upon the amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the further conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the presiding officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is a very important bill and it launches upon a field of expenditure which in my view is entirely necessary. I agree to the provisions of the bill as amended by the Committee on Appropriations. The subject embraces not only the Army but the Navy. There are certain features in it to which as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I have given a good deal of investigation and study. I have before me my notes and figures touching upon the subject, and was purposing to take some time of the Senate, but at this late day and with the desire of the Senate to do business rather than listen to talk and to long speeches when business is required I shall not inflict my speech upon the Senate, but will content myself with hoping that the bill may be put through speedily. I shall be glad to vote for it as the Senator from Massachusetts has brought it in. I prefer to do that to taking up the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, after line 13, to insert:

For continuing the sea-wall around Governor's Island, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the words "Sec. 2," to strike out:

For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including the procurement of steel forgings for the manufacture of heavy guns; for guns, carriages, projectile, fuses, powder, implements, and materials for which shall all be of American production, their trial and proof, and the testing of improvements of the same, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, $500,000, to be available until expended.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For the purchase, manufacture, and erection of the necessary tools and machinery for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance at the Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.; for gun-carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, implements, and materials for the trial and proof of such ordnance, and to complete the two 10-inch breech-loading steel guns now under fabrication, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, including compensation of draughtsman on gun construction, $400,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to offer some verbal amendments to the amendment before it is adopted. In the eleventh line, after the word "for," I move to insert "guns in process of construction;" so as to read:

For guns in process of construction, gun-carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In the sixteenth line the word "draughtsmen" should be inserted in the place of "draughtsman."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That modification in the amendment will be made.

Mr. DAWES. In line 16, after the word "construction," I move to insert the words "while employed in the Ordnance Bureau;" so as to read:

Including compensation of draughtsmen on gun construction while employed in the Ordnance Bureau.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. In line 11, after the word "Pennsylvania," I move to insert:

In accordance with the plan recommended by the gun foundry board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DOLPH. Let the amendment be read. If there is objection to it I will explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 11, after the word "Pennsylvania," it is proposed to insert the words:

In accordance with the plan recommended by the gun foundry board.

So as to read:

For the purchase, manufacture, and erection of the necessary tools and machinery for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance at the Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., in accordance with the plan recommended by the gun foundry board.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Do I understand that the gun foundry board have recommended this place?

Mr. DOLPH. I shall talk about the place directly. The location is one thing and the building and plant another. In regard to the location, although that is not involved in the amendment offered by me, I will say that the gun foundry board recommended Watervliet arsenal, but the Chief of Ordnance and the Secretary of War have recommended Frankford arsenal. I will read from some correspondence which I have in my possession.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator from Oregon will permit me to offer my amendment prior to his perhaps he would add his amendment to it in better form.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think my amendment involves the question of location. With the understanding that the Senator from New Jersey is to offer an amendment in regard to location, I shall reserve what I have to say upon the matter of location until his amendment is offered.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I will move——

Mr. DOLPH. Let my own amendment be first disposed of.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Do I understand the Senator to permit my amendment to be first disposed of.

Mr. DOLPH. No; I propose to have the amendment offered by myself first disposed of.

Mr. President, it will be observed that the appropriation proposed here for the purchase, manufacture, and erection of the necessary tools and machinery for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance, and also for the purchase of gun-carriages, &c., and the completion of guns already in course of construction is only $400,000. The question of the location and the necessary plant for the manufacture of guns was reported upon by the gun foundry board. That board reported that $900,000 would be required for the purpose of the erection of the necessary buildings and the furnishing of the necessary machinery for a gun factory; that is, a factory at which the parts of the guns could be assembled and the guns constructed after the steel, forged and roughly turned and bored, had been furnished.

What I fear is that with this limited appropriation of $400,000, which is only in part to be expended for the necessary machinery for the manufacture of guns, the Secretary of War may not understand that he is expected to furnish machinery necessary for a complete gun factory at which the largest guns may be built up and finished.

This is an important matter. I do not wish to see any more money wasted upon it. What is required is a factory sufficient for the manufacture of the largest steel guns. Therefore I want this provision amended so that the proposed appropriation may not be considered the entire appropriation for that purpose, and that whatever expenditure is made shall be made in pursuance of the plan recommended by the gun foundry board; in other words, so as to secure a sufficient plant for the construction of 16-inch steel guns.

Mr. PLUMB. There is substantially no difference of opinion among people skilled in the art of constructing guns as to what kind of a plant is necessary to do the work that is here under contemplation. The gun foundry board only brought together that which was the common knowledge of all persons engaged in this business and who had given it any attention. Therefore their plan has no special merit as against other plans, because it simply is the plan of putting in the necessary lathes and machinery of a known pattern and character for the finishing of the forging which may be made and delivered for that purpose.

The committee in determining upon the appropriation of this amount of money took counsel of those persons who will have the administration of this law, if it shall be passed, and learned from them, in the first place, that we have at the Frankford arsenal, near Philadelphia, the ground necessary for this purpose; that there is also there a considerable portion of the buildings necessary for this work; that in addition to that there were already on hand a good many of the lathes which are necessary, so that it would not be necessary to appropriate as large a sum of money to do the work satisfactorily at the Frankford arsenal as it would if we were to build an entirely new establishment somewhere where we should have to supply both buildings and machinery and probably also the ground. I do not find the estimate of the cost of one of these gun factories, but the amount is about $800,000 or $900,000, and in that was $350,000 for the building.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator yield for a moment to me?

Mr. PLUMB. I will.

Mr. MCPHERSON. We have a certain number of buildings in Washington, we have a plant here of quite large size and abundance of ground. We have water transportation which leads directly to the works. If there is no water transportation at Frankford, Pa., by which this heavy material can be readily and cheaply moved, the cost of all the buildings which may be located at Frankford would be a simple bagatelle compared with the cost of transporting yearly from those works. As the Government is intending to build great establishments for use in the future, it seems to me that the location is one of vast importance to be considered, and as the committee have recommended positively and have determined positively that the work shall be done at Frankford, I wish to know the ground upon which they made that location. Was it simply because a few old rickety buildings are now constructed at Frankford, which have lathes and other things, as are in other such establishments, which could be very readily and very cheaply moved?

Mr. PLUMB. That to me was a minor reason, but it was one of the reasons which operated upon the minds of the committee, myself included, in determining upon the location.

In the first place, it is, the committee believe, more economical to make use of what we already have and building on to it in the way of machinery. I am speaking about that proposition alone. In the next place, Philadelphia is the center of a great industrial activity. It is a place where mechanics, as we believe, can as readily as anywhere else, and much more readily than at Washington, be obtained and drawn into the service of the Government. In the next place it is in proximity to the great iron works of the country, and therefore the facility for getting the rough work, the forgings, to this place where they must be finished is greater and better than it would be at Washington, for instance.

But the Senator will bear in mind with reference to Washington that it was the plan of the gun foundry board to have two establishments of this kind, two gun factories, one for the Navy and one for the Army. There is one at Washington now for the Navy, which is doing here the work on 6-inch guns and over required for the Navy, though not equipped as it ought to be. I think probably the Senator will see before we get through that provision will be made in some other bill for enlarging the establishment at Washington which is doing the Navy work, with a view of making it capable of doing all the Navy work.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Why can it not do both the Navy and Army work?

Mr. PLUMB. There seems to be a consensus of opinion to the effect that this work ought to be divided. While it is true that a gun is a gun for the purposes of use upon a ship as upon land, at the same time it is equally true that methods of construction of ships sometimes require a little different length of gun, they require to be mounted differently, and so on, in such a way that there is great force in the suggestion that the ultimate manufacture and mounting and assembling and finishing of guns for the Army and Navy should be done at different establishments.

In the next place, while in the Army the calibers divide themselves into 6, 8, 10, and 12 inch bore and so on, in the Navy frequently the calibers are arranged differently, and they go from 6-inch to 8, and from 8 to 9½, and so on. In the problem of making a gun which would answer all purposes on shipboard, the facility for handling is different from what it would be in a fort on the land, and the question of the protrusion of the armor would affect in some way the length of the gun, and the place in which it should be worked on shipboard, inside of the ship, would, of course, affect the gun in the same way—that is, the length of it, the style of it, and the manner of its being mounted; and for that purpose it seems to have been agreed that it were better to have two establishments.

Besides that, one establishment will not be enough. This is a work which seems to have been underestimated not only in its importance but in the preparation and the length of time necessary to produce the guns. It is not expected that under this bill we shall get scarcely any, if any, satisfactory forgings inside of eighteen months, and it takes a long time to complete the guns even after all the experimental stages have been passed.

As a very accomplished officer of ordnance said to the committte, what we want now is that learning, that knowledge which comes of an effort to do a particular thing had in mind to be done. We have learned all that could be learned by mere investigation, by inquiry, by observation, by the work which others have done and are doing now. What we need to learn are those things which come with the skill, the labor, and the directing of it in the making of guns. If we fail, undoubtedly we shall learn a great deal. One of the largest iron works of Pennsylvania is now on its third forging for a 6-inch gun, having failed in the two preceding attempts to make a satisfactory piece of steel or form for the purpose of making a gun. It is not a simple problem. It is one which has to be learned by manufacturer, by workman, by draughtsman, by all the people who have to do with it, as thoroughly as any other branch of manufacture. Though they may be skilled generally in what it is necessary to know to make up the manufacture, the strength of steel or iron, all these things have to be done not by inquiry nor by observation but by the actual test of doing, and that ought to be entered upon at as early a day as possible.

After that is all done we provide here for not to exceed 10,000 gross tons. Suppose we get them, when you consider the weight of these great guns, from 100 to 200, 300, 400, and 500 tons, it will readily be seen that we shall get very few guns out of these 10,000 gross tons of steel. We shall have got only into the experimental stage really, and this experimental stage will exhaust two, three, four, or perhaps six years of time.

By reason of all these things the committee thought that we ought to provide for this Army work by itself; and inasmuch as it was experimental, instead of saying we will go to work and carry out a certain plan which has been put upon paper we will take what we already have and build on to it from time to time according as experience, which we learn in doing the thing, shall determine is best to be done; so that we shall not be, as sometimes is the case, in the condition of having a great plant which we made according to a formula, building it all at once, without trial, without experiment as we go along, and which may be a failure in some essential part in such a way as will not only require it to be done over again but will merely delay the work in the end.

We have at Frankford arsenal a number of lathes; we have buildings; we have grounds. It is in a place, as I said, which is the center of industrial activity. Mechanics of all kinds, and especially those who are skillful workers in steel and iron, can be had there probably as well as anywhere else in the United States and better than in many other places. By means of that which is there provided already at hand we shall be able to put in the additional lathes and the additional machinery necessary for the finishing of guns to greater advantage, as we believe, than it would be if we were to cut out, as I said, one single pattern as a whole in some new place and work that, being meanwhile forbidden, as we should be, or at least unable to give any use of it as we went along.

If we commence at Frankford putting in this machinery we shall almost immediately commence to use it. The great guns that we have in various stages of preparation elsewhere will be brought there and we shall begin upon them, and as one piece of machinery after another goes in we shall be using it in such a way as to determine not only its capacity but its proper relation to the other machinery which has been put in; so that what we put in from time to time is merely cumulative, and offers as I think a very much better chance for illustrations than though we were to take some general plan which, as I said before, has only been formulated and put on paper.

Mr. DAWES. I will read just what the board recommend applicable to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon:

The board recommends the establishment of two gun factories under the control of the Government and selects the Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y., as the site for the Army, and the Washington navy-yard, District of Columbia, as the site for the Navy.

They estimate that each one of these will cost $900,000.

Mr. PLUMB. And in that $350,000 is for the necessary buildings.

Mr. HAWLEY. And the shrinking-pit, an expensive part of the work, but that is a part of the construction of buildings.

Mr. DAWES. Here are the items of expense:

Buildings and shrinking-pit, $350,000; guns from 12-inch to 16-inch caliber, $350,000; guns from 6-inch to 12-inch caliber, $150,000; guns up to 6-inch caliber, $50,000.

Mr. PLUMB. In regard to the suggestion which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] makes, that a place directly upon the seacoast, where there will have to be no handling——

Mr. MCPHERSON. Upon the water.

Mr. PLUMB. Upon the water somewhere, he says, where there will be no handling, I think myself the land transportation would be better. He will realize without any suggestion of mine that that thing evens itself up. If you have a place situated upon the water, as for instance Washington, you have got to carry your raw material, your forging, to the water in order that it may be transported by water to Washington; and therefore there is no more necessary saving in the handling and the transportation of the material to such a place. When, as is the case now, the iron works are chiefly in the interior and away from navigable waters, whatever is produced there that the Government desires for this purpose has to be transported by rail to some point on the coast, or on the water, and it may take a double transportation. I do not know exactly what the relation of the Frankford arsenal is to the navigable waters which come to the city of Philadelphia. I have no doubt that easy arrangements for transportation to and from the river and the bay can be readily made.

Mr. HAWLEY. This does not seem to me to be by any means an important or essential point in the bill. These heavy guns, if we decide to embark in the enterprise, as I believe we shall and must, will be manufactured in their several pieces at some one of the great steel establishments in the country. That may be near the sea-shore or a great river, but it is as likely to be somewhere else. Perhaps at Cleveland, perhaps up at Troy, perhaps at the Bethlehem Works at Bethlehem, Pa., perhaps over at the Cambria Works, Johnstown, Pa., or at the Midvale Steel Works, near Philadelphia. There are a dozen establishments that ought to be competing for the contracts.

But, then, the transportation of the forgings is not a serious problem. It can easily be done by rail.

The finishing factory will of course have to deliver guns running from 5 tons up to 110, and the only matter of transportation is that it should be near water that will bear steamers or barges sufficient for such burdens. Frankford arsenal is convenient enough in that respect. The Senator knows well the communication through the Delaware and Raritan Canal with the waters of New York city, reaching either the proving-grounds at Sandy Hook or the war vessel at the Brooklyn navy-yard. Indeed, Frankford arsenal, 4 or 5 miles above Philadelphia, on the Delaware River, has all needed communications by rail or water with forts or ship-yards.

I was of the opinion that Watervliet would be a good place for the Army gun factory, but I do not regard it as at all material. I am so intensely anxious to see the Government begin the construction of heavy guns that I waive these points. Put the factory where you please, or let the Secretary of War select the place.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this amendment at length, but I desire to be understood in what I have said. At some subsequent stage of this discussion I will have something to say on the subject of coast defenses. I repeat, the amendment offered by me does not involve the question of location, but in order that the Senate may know what the opinion of the Department is upon the subject of location, I will state that I have here a letter addressed to myself by the Secretary of War and dated May 24, 1886, in which the Secretary says that he concurs in the opinion of the Chief of Ordnance that Frankford should be the location of the gun factory for the Army.

I have also a letter from the Chief of Ordnance addressed to the Secretary of War, dated May 24, 1886, from which I read:

The gun factory ought not to be erected at Watervliet arsenal, but at Frankford arsenal, and I strongly recommend that the bill be amended so as to read "at the Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa."

The bill referred to was Senate bill 662, being the bill reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] on the 11th of May, 1886, which I submitted to the Secretary of War for his opinion, and which was by him submitted to the Chief of Ordnance for his views. That bill is substantially the same, except as to amount, as I understand it as the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to this bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is all satisfactory; I withdraw the amendment I offered if the committee are satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DOLPH. One moment. I desire further for information on this subject to read what was said in another communication dated April 21, 1886, to the honorable Secretary of War by the Chief of Ordnance upon the question of location. He says:

With regard to the location of the Army gun factory my own views are and have always been in favor of the Frankford arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa. This location fulfills in a very satisfactory degree the conditions laid down in the report of the House Committee on Ordnance and Gunnery, Report No. 1450, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, namely:

1. Freedom from danger of capture by hostile forces.
2. Proximity to the establishments to furnish the materials.
3. Facilities for transportation both by water and by rail.
4. Proximity to centers of skilled labor.
5. The utilization of existing resources of the Government, so that due regard be had to economy. The board on fortifications indorsed the recommendations of the gun foundry board that there be established two gun factories, one for the Army and one for the Navy, but left the question of location an open one. In the opinion of this office the Frankford arsenal is considered the best location for the Army gun factory.

So we have the recommendation of the Chief of Ordnance for the Frankford arsenal, and that recommendation concurred in by a letter of the Secretary of War.

Now, I come to consider the amendment offered by myself. If it is supposed by Senators that the appropriation proposed by the committee in this bill will be expended in such a manner as to secure a proper and sufficient plant for the manufacture of the heaviest ordnance, I have no objection to the amendment of the committee in its present form. I have no objection as to the amount, because there can be appropriated at a subsequent session of Congress the amount necessary to obtain what further machinery will be necessary for the factory; but what I do desire is that so far as the money proposed to be appropriated by this bill is expended for the purpose of the erection of a gun factory, it shall be expended in accordance with a plan which will eventually secure a sufficient factory for the purposes desired. The gun foundry board estimated as the cost of a plant for a gun factory the following:

Guns up to 6-inch caliber	$50,000
Guns from 6-inch to 12-inch caliber	150,000
Guns from 12-inch to 16-inch caliber	350,000
Buildings and shrinking-pit	350,000

After they had made their report—

The gun foundry board, reconvened by order of the Secretary of War, May 7, 1884, and the Secretary of the Navy, April 29, 1884, was directed:

1. To prepare plans and estimates for the preparation and purchase, both for the Army and the Navy, of plants for gun factories to complete guns from 6-inch caliber to 16-inch caliber, including buildings and shrinking-pit, and to report the full and detailed estimates for the cost of the work aforesaid.

2. To state whether the same can be better and more economically performed in establishments owned by the Government, or by private contract, or by a combined system whereby the said work can be accomplished partly by the Government and partly by private contract.

3. To make specific recommendations as to the best method of procuring steel for guns, and to indicate in what manner appropriations can most advantageously be made.

The board report, in conclusion:

1. The total cost of each gun factory will be about $1,000,000.

The Army committee has restricted its estimate to the special tools for gun construction and to the erection of buildings, as indicated in the previous report of the board, omitting such details as locomotives, cars, railway tracks, pipes for the transmission of power, crane tracks, boilers, engines, &c.

I repeat, that so far as my amendment is concerned there is no question of location involved. I myself believe that Frankford is the best location for the gun factory for the Army. Nor is there any question of amount. I am satisfied, as I said before, with the amount proposed to be appropriated in the bill if it is simply for the commencement of the work, and if it is understood that it is to be expended for the machinery necessary for the plant recommended by the gun foundry board. I only desire to make that clear, and I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts now what objection there would be to saying that this appropriation is made for the purpose of commencing the work in accordance with that plan?

Mr. DAWES. I think the Senator will be satisfied with the amendment as it is, inasmuch as the location is that recommended by the gun foundry board.

Mr. DOLPH. No; the location is not the one recommended by the gun foundry board. It is recommended by the Secretary of War.

Mr. DAWES. It is recommended by the Secretary of War. He is satisfied with the location.

Mr. DOLPH. I am satisfied with the location.

Mr. DAWES. Then the plant which is already there is one which conforms to the same view. The work to be performed is of the same nature as that suggested by the gun foundry board.

Mr. HAWLEY. And so described in the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. And so described in the amendment. The difference between the Senator and the amendment is simply that we do not go on and appropriate sufficient for a large plant, $900,000 or a million dollars at once. Whatever is done will be done necessarily in the line indicated by the gun foundry board, because the work to be performed is in that line. It is for the assembling and finishing of the rough parts produced elsewhere. Then the committee thought that this considerable sum of $6,000,000 and more was about as far as they could ask Congress at once to embark.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall have something to say hereafter on those particular points.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will make haste slowly, if he will content himself with undertaking with the committee to go thus far so long as we do not go across his ideas, I think the Senator will find it is the best way to bring Congress up to his own ideas, and that therefore on the whole the bill in its present shape is about as good as he could expect from so unsophisticated and unlearned a committee as the Committee on Appropriations, and that he had better take it thankfully from them and say that we will make this over the next session if we find that it has not gone right. I make that suggestion to him. I have no criticism to make of the ideas the Senator has thrown out.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I perhaps ought to be willing to take anything thankfully which comes from the Committee on Appropriations and is reported to the Senate by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I presume if we do get anything in the matter of appropriations for fortifications the country ought to be thankful, and we will all be thankful. But for all that I think I ought to have something to say in regard to this question of fortifications, and I propose to say it. I propose to advocate what I think ought to be done, and if I think any portion of the bill or the amendment of the committee should be amended I propose to offer the amendment. One amendment I am authorized to offer.

Mr. DAWES. The Senate did not understand me as trying to get the Senator to suspend any considerations which he might offer? I only suggested to him the considerations which weighed with the committee, not to go as far as he suggested to us now to commit ourselves, but to insist upon appropriations according to the gun foundry board, which would result in two great plants, one for the Army and one for the Navy, with an outlay of a million dollars or more for each. We have at the Washington navy-yard for the Navy and at the Frankford arsenal for the Army now plants of considerable proportions, growing, fit to do all the work required for a year or two, and as they are in the very places suggested by the War and Navy Departments we can not go far wrong if we say we will do this much at this session, but not embark so far into this matter as to make others who must co-operate with us shrink from the undertaking and thereby lose the whole.

Mr. DOLPH. The question of the amount of the appropriation is not involved in my amendment. The question as to committing Congress to the proposition of two factories, one for the Army and one for the Navy, is not involved in the amendment. We have not the question of the construction of a gun factory for the Navy under consideration. We have not yet reached the provision of the bill which is intended to secure a plant for forging the steel ingots necessary for heavy ordnance. We are considering the matter of an appropriation proposed by the committee for the procuring of the necessary machinery for fabricating heavy ordnance. The gun foundry board recommended that there shall be such a gun factory; that instead of the Government erecting a gun foundry at which the steel ingots can be cast and forged and rough-turned and rough-bored, that those shall be procured from private manufactories, and that the Government shall erect a gun factory where these rough steel ingots can be taken and the guns built up, the parts assembled.

The gun foundry board, as I have said, recommended Watervliet arsenal as the location for such a gun factory for the Army, but I think Frankford arsenal is the best location, and Frankford is recommended by the Secretary of War. I make no question as to the amount of the proposed appropriation. It will, however, require a much larger amount than is proposed to be appropriated here to procure the machinery for such a foundry. A large portion of the $400,000 proposed to be appropriated must be necessarily used for the other purposes mentioned, and only a small portion of the appropriation can be applied to the purchase of such machinery.

What I desire is that the expenditure of the money shall not be left to the Chief of Ordnance, that it shall not be left to the Secretary of War alone without direction. If it is to be, of what benefit will have been all the investigations of the several boards and commissions which have been created under the authority of acts of Congress? By the act of March 3, 1883, a board was created who examined this question and reported in favor of a gun factory. The question was submitted to them as to the character of the machinery which should be procured for the purpose of erecting and furnishing a gun-factory. They reported a plan for the factory and estimated the cost of the machinery necessary. I think it would be the part of wisdom now to say that this money shall be expended, so far as it is expended, in accordance with that plan. By so doing we will secure a plant which will be sufficient for the manufacture of 16-inch breech-loading steel rifles.

I am not very tenacious about the matter. I presume the discussion which has been had upon it, if there could have been any doubtful construction placed on the clause, will enable the officers charged with the expenditure of the appropriation to see that the money is intended for the commencement of the work only and cause it to be expended in the direction indicated in the report of the gun foundry board. I can see, however, no objection to my amendment, and I do not understand why it should be opposed.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that this bill recognizes the essential features of that report.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to have that made clear.

Mr. PLUMB. This carries out the essential features of that report. It provides for the purchase of forgings by contract and the finishing and assembling of them by the Government employés, the Government machinery, and under Government officers. In those essential particulars the recommendations of the gun foundry board have been carried out. When we go into the matter of detail in regard to just how the things shall be put together, what is really administration, if the Senator will look at the report of the board he will see they have not gone into that matter very materially, but it might be a question of doubt as to what we would require if we should act upon the plan they propose. And at all events their report has been made two years last December; there have undoubtedly been guns made since that time in a variety of directions; and to tie ourselves down to something that is even two years old, in this age of invention and in the progress of manufactures and of arts, might be the very thing we have been trying to avoid by keeping out of this matter until we thought we had arrived at the sum of human knowledge.

I have no doubt that we shall have at the hands of the Department the very best which their present knowledge, embracing, of course, what the gun foundry board disclosed by their investigation. The Senator from Connecticut told the committee in a very interesting way what he saw abroad and how completely the processes of to-day were changed by those of to-morrow, what great advances have been made in the art of gun-making. Something may have transpired within two years which would enable the Secretary of War to put up something which should be, while accomplishing the same purpose, largely different from that contemplated by the gun foundry board at the time they made their report.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is force in what the Senator from Kansas says. The gun foundry board was a very able and skillful board, and made a very admirable report, but I hardly think there is a member of it who would, without going back to see exactly what he had said, desire to be obliged to-day to say the same things, because, without question, there have been changes. I can think now of a shade of modification these very same men would express. So, while we know this board was a feature of the War Department, and that it was greatly pleased with its report, and all able and intelligent men interested in this question have been urging these ideas on us, we understand that the War Department, if we give it the money, will follow in that general direction, but it ought not to be obliged literally to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to section 2.

Mr. HAWLEY addressed the Senate. [See Appendix.]

Mr. DAWES. I hope we shall have a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to the second section of the bill as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. To enable the Secretary of War to contract with the South Boston Iron Works for the construction of ten 12-inch, muzzle-loading, rifled, cast-iron mortars, each of 31,000 pounds weight, at a sum not exceeding $6,000 each, or six with steel bands, not to exceed $10,000 each, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid for any such guns until after one of the same shall have been completed in accordance with the contract, and shall have endured a firing-test of two-hundred rounds with standard charges adapted to such a weapon; and after such test each of said guns thereafter manufactured, and tested by ten rounds in the same manner, shall be paid for at the price aforesaid, on the completion and satisfactory trial-test of each; all of said guns to be completed within one year from the termination of the firing-test of the first gun.

Mr. DOLPH. I myself am opposed to that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Oregon to yield to me a moment that I may make a report from the committee of conference on the legislative appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, with an amendment; that it asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the said bill and the amendment thereto, and had appointed Mr. COBB, Mr. VAN EATON, and Mr. FISHER the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following conference report; which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 88, 179, and 180 to the bill (H. R. 8974) "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 179.

Amendment numbered 88: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed, insert "$1,970,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 180: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 180, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$52,960;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. S. HOLMAN,
GEO. C. CABELL,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARRIS. What amendment is it that the Senate recedes from?

Mr. ALLISON. The two subjects of difference were the matters relating to the collection of internal revenue and the item inserted by the Senate respecting statistical information relating to marriage and divorce. The first of these was amicably arranged by a division of the sum, so that in lieu of the sum inserted by the Senate the sum of $1,970,000 is inserted as agreed to by the conference.

Mr. HARRIS. What was agreed to by the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate appropriated $2,050,000, the Senate surrendering $80,000 and the House $70,000 of the difference. The other item relating to statistics of marriage and divorce the Senate conferees were obliged to surrender, having had three or four conferences on the subject, the House insisting robustly and continually that they would not consent to this appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the report of the committee?

The report was concurred in.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9798) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; the question being on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to insert the proposed section 4.

Mr. DOLPH. I am opposed to this amendment. I see no good reason why an appropriation should be now made for the construction of further cast-iron guns or mortars. As I understand cast-iron guns have been condemned by all the great powers of Europe. They have been reported against by all the boards that have been recently appointed to examine into the question of guns. We have guns now on hand, according to the report of the Senate Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, as follows:

The Army has in forts and arsenals:

Smooth-bores:
20-inch caliber	2
15-inch caliber	308
10-inch caliber	998
8-inch caliber	210
		1,518
Parrott rifles:
10-inch caliber, 300-pounders	38
8-inch caliber, 200-pounders	81
6.4-inch caliber, 100-pounders	173
		292
Converted from 10-inch smooth-bores to 8-inch rifles	160
Ditto under contract for conversion	50
		210
Smooth-bore mortars		45
		2,065

The committee say of these:

These are all muzzle-loaders. The nine classes require thirty-three kinds of ammunition. They are totally inadequate to the defense of our most important harbors. They may be utilized in the protection of harbors admitting only vessels of light armor and draught, and even there they should usually be supplemented by the modern breech-loading steel rifle, with its more rapid and efficient fire.

The number of serviceable naval great guns is:

Smooth-bores:
20-inch caliber	3
15-inch caliber	76
11-inch caliber	357
10-inch caliber, shell	12
10-inch caliber, shot	21
9-inch caliber	1,011
8-inch caliber, 6,500 pounds	346
32-pounders, 4,500 pounds	378
		2,204
Parrott muzzle-loading rifles:
150-pounders	28
100-pounders	267
60-pounders	75
30-pounders	375
20-pounders	245
Dahlgren muzzle-loading rifles, converted from 11-inch to 8-inch	50
		1,400
Parrott breech-loading rifles:
80-pounders	9
60-pounders	27
30-pounders	5

The committee reports that these guns are worthless so far as defense against modern-armored ships, ships armed with heavy modern guns, is concerned. I would like to inquire of the committee what is the object of making further appropriations for cast-iron ordnance? Cast-iron guns have been condemned by the experience of foreign nations; they have been condemned by our own committees; they are not recommended, as I understand—at least I know of no recommendation of the Secretary of War or the Chief of Ordnance or any other officer whose business it is to make recommendations on the subject—I should like to know why this appropriation should be made and why we should make further guns that are not serviceable.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Oregon is entirely mistaken in his statement that this class of guns has not been recommended by the fortification board and by the Ordnance Department. There is but one opinion, as the committee was informed by the Department and the board, that these cast-iron mortars with a steel hoop are absolutely necessary for defense. They recommend a very large number of them. We further found on examination that probably the South Boston Works was the only establishment——

Mr. DOLPH. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. GORMAN. I am giving the information that came to the committee from the Chief of Ordnance and the recommendations of the fortification board, that rifled muzzle-loading mortars should be constructed for coast defenses.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask what board or committee that was from?

Mr. DAWES. The recent board.

Mr. HAWLEY. The fortification board?

Mr. DAWES. No, the last board.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the last.

Mr. DAWES. The board of which the present Secretary of War, Mr. Endicott, is president.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the one to which I referred as the fortification board. Did they recommend cast-iron mortars?

Mr. DAWES. They recommend seven hundred steel mortars.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nobody recommends any cast-iron nowadays.

Mr. GORMAN. The Chief of the Ordnance Department was before the committee and did not hesitate to say that cast-iron mortars bound with steel would answer the purpose, and he recommended that they be tried. It is also perfectly clear that while there is a great rage for steel mortars all over the world, it is not definitely settled that they are better than the cast-iron mortar with a steel cord and hooped with steel. It was thought very advisable in this state of the manufacture of guns in this country that we should continue this work.

Mr. DOLPH. In the opinion of the committee it is desirable to continue this work?

Mr. GORMAN. And also of the Ordnance Department.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not suppose it is incumbent on the Government to authorize the construction of guns that are not serviceable for the sake of continuing any gun manufactory. The next section of this bill proposes such a contract with the steel manufacturers as will enable them to supply the materials for serviceable guns, for such guns as have been adopted by foreign nations, and for such guns as have been recommended by the gun foundry board, the board on fortifications and other defenses, the Senate Committee on Ordnance and War Ships, and recommended substantially by the Getty board; and it does not necessarily follow that the South Boston Company will be the successful bidder and secure that contract. I see no reason why that company should be favored.

It seems to me that it would be a great mistake, while we with difficulty shall succeed, if at all, in securing a sufficient apppropriation to commence the work of fortifying our coast, of supplying guns for coast defenses and for the Army, to expend money, either a large or a small sum, upon a character of gun that is not recommended by competent boards which have investigated the subject and have reported recently.

I have examined the report of the fortifications board carefully, and I do not remember to have seen in any part of the report any recommendation of any cast-iron guns or guns of the character designated by the Senator from Connecticut a few moments ago as hybrid guns, that is, guns of cast-iron with steel hoops. I do not believe myself in that character of gun. I think the experiment of their manufacture and use will be a failure. I think the materials of which a gun is to be constructed should be homogeneous as far as possible. They should be either all steel or all cast-iron.

I ask the Secretary to read what I have marked on page 11 of the report of the board on fortifications and other defenses, so that we may see what the board does recommend. I have underscored the last sentence.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The material of which the powerful guns needed in the fixed and floating defenses are to be constructed is also a proper subject of discussion if it is intended to secure strength with a minimum of weight which the board deems of much moment, in view of the complication, weight, and additional cost of the gun-carriages arising from the increased dimensions of the gun, and of other vital considerations.

Cast-iron as material has been advocated on account of supposed cheapness and facility of manufacture, but the sole method of arriving at a sound conclusion in this respect is a careful analysis. A comparison has been made between breech-loading cast-iron rifles and Krupp's steel rifles which by no means sustains the claims either of superior economy or facility of manufacture for a cast-iron gun of power equal to one made of steel. On the other hand the difference of weight against the cast-iron appears to be 66 per cent. of the weight of the steel gun, a defect which would greatly interfere with facility of maneuver and rapidity of fire. It would be singular if, after waiting so many years with the alleged intention of profiting by the experience of nations foremost in the manufacture of heavy ordnance, we would begin the long-neglected defense of the country with accepting a material for guns which, after having been tried by leading European nations, has been deliberately rejected in favor of steel. The board emphatically recommends steel.

Mr. DOLPH. I also read from the conclusions arrived at by the Senate Committee on Ordnance and War Ships in their report:

(6) The costly experiments of twenty-five years have reached a stage which justifies certain conclusions. Guns should be made of open-hearth steel, forged, breech-loading, chambered, of calibers ranging from 5 to 16 inches, of lengths ranging from 30 to 35 calibers. Armor and projectiles should be made of forged steel.

That, in brief, is the recommendation of that committee. If there have been two committees who have thoroughly investigated this question, not only in the United States but in Europe, who were competent to investigate it and who have given reasons for their opinions which ought to be satisfactory, I think those committees are what is known as the gun foundry board and the Select Committee of the Senate on Ordnance and War Ships, and their conclusions are adopted by the board on fortifications and other defenses, appointed under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1885.

I am satisficd that this idea of cast-iron guns did not originate with the committee or any member of the Committee on Coast Defenses. It may have come from some other committee, the Committee on Military Affairs perhaps, but I have failed to see, and I should like to be referred to the recommendation of the Chief of Ordnance, the Secretary of War, or of any board that has been appointed to consider the question, for the construction of cast-iron mortars.

Mr. PLUMB. The mortar is not a first-class gun, at least for what might be called the ordinary purposes for which guns of heavy caliber are used, but it still has a recognized place in modern warfare. That was abundantly shown by the use made of mortars during the last war in which this country happened to be engaged. It is true also that cast-iron is not the best material for the making of guns, having reference to the durability and strength of the material, but it is, nevertheless, stated by as good authority as we have in this country that a cast-iron mortar banded with steel performs a very good office indeed. It has the advantage also that it can be produced at a very early period and we can get it soon. The number proposed here is only about one-seventieth, I think, of the number which the fortifications board say we need for finally completing the coast defenses of the country.

In agreeing to this provision the Committee on Appropriations thought it would do the best it could with the material which was within reach, and begin the work of constructing this class of guns, especially in view of the fact that the South Boston Iron Works have undertaken and at very considerable loss to themselves to construct large cast-iron guns, some of which are now under way, for the Government, and who are qualified to do this work, which, as I said before, can be turned out and put in condition to be used within the next two years.

The testimony, which I think can not be disputed, is to the effect that a cast-iron mortar banded with steel never explodes. It may crack, it may become incapacitated for use by the ordinary wear and tear of frequent explosions; but the danger which ordinarily results from the use of a cast-iron gun in action is now removed by wrapping the gun with steel. That has been abundantly shown by the experiments carried on near New York with a gun made and wrapped in that way, a cast-iron mortar wrapped with steel. It has been used very largely, as much as any mortar probably would be required to be used in action, with the result only of cracking it but not of scattering the parts in such a way as to be dangerous to parties who might be working it.

While, as I said, this is not the highest type of gun, yet such guns have a recognized place, and the committee thought inserting a provision for constructing only ten of them was not going very deep into that class of construction, but would result in giving us something of use until the time we may get something better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert as a new section, the following:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby are, authorized jointly to make contract with responsible steel-manufacturers, after suitable advertisements, to continue not less than thirty days, in newspapers most likely to reach the manufacturers addressed, for the supply of rough-bored, rough-turned, and tempered steel in forms suitable for heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare, for Army and Navy purposes, in quantity not to exceed 10,000 gross tons, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, subject to inspection and tests at each stage of manufacture and including all the parts of each caliber specified: Provided, That no money shall be expended except for steel accepted and delivered; and each bidder shall contract to deliver yearly a specified quantity of each caliber, the time of delivery of the smaller calibers to commence at the expiration of not more than eighteen months and the largest calibers at the expiration of not more than three years from the date of the execution of the contract; and all the forgings shall be of American product and manufactured in the United States; and one-half of the material purchased under this provision shall be for the use of the War Department, and one-half for the use of the Navy Department, in the armament of ships heretofore or hereafter authorized by Congress; and for the purposes of the foregoing provision the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available during six years from the date of the execution of the contract.

Mr. HAWLEY. I invite the attention of the member of the Committee on Appropriations in charge of this bill to a mere verbal amendment which is suggested to me by one more skillful than myself. In line 6 I suggest to insert after the word "tempered" the word "forged." It is implied everywhere that these are to be forged, and if you leave it without that word some fellow will be claiming that he has the right to offer a cast-iron gun.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to that change.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move to insert the word "forged" between the word "tempered" and the word "steel," in line 6.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Beginning in line 24, the amendment reads:

And for the purposes of the foregoing provision the sum of $6,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available during six years from the date of the execution of the contract.

I would suggest striking out the words "the foregoing provision" and saying "this section." The provision before this is the proviso of the section.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; say "this section."

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendment is in line 25, to strike out the words "the foregoing provision" and insert instead the words "this section."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I am in favor of this amendment if there is nothing better to be had; but I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question before the vote is taken. There seems to be no doubt that American manufacturers are willing to undertake the manufacture of cast and forged and tempered steel ingots for the manufacture of the largest guns; and the board on fortification and other defenses recommend that there should be made for the purpose of securing such material an appropriation of $15,000,000, to be divided between the Army and the Navy. That would give $7,500,000 to the Army, if divided equally, for the purpose of contracting for the furnishing of gun metal.

I hold in my hand a report made at the present session by the commission on ordnance and gunnery of the House, of which Mr. RANDALL was chairman, appointed to report on this question of securing for the Army and Navy gun material, in which, on page 2 of the report, I find the following:

(2) That various companies are willing to undertake the operations of casting, forging, rough-boring, rough-turning, and tempering the parts necessary to make guns of the largest caliber, provided they receive "sufficient remuneration."

The whole question of all-steel high-powered guns in the United States hinges on what is "sufficient remuneration." The replies of the various companies indicate what they considered this to be.

The Bethlehem Iron Company requires contracts to the extent of 6,000 tons per year for a period of five years.

That would be 30,000 tons.

The Tredegar Company, from 1,000 to 2,000 tons per year for "a long term of years."

The Cambria Iron Company, 2,000 tons per year for a period of five years.

Which would be 10,000 tons.

The above are for calibers up to 16-inch, 102-ton guns.

For calibers up to 10-inch, the Midvale Steel Company requires an order of 3,000 tons for one year; for calibers up to 12 inches, a gross order of 5,000 tons.

The figures furnished by the Cambria and the Midvale Companies are about $800 per ton, and may be taken as about what would now have to be paid; that is to say:

For 10-inch guns, 3,000 tons of steel, $2,500,000 will be required.
For 12-inch guns, 5,000 tons, at a cost of $4,000,000.
For 16-inch guns, 10,000 tons, at a cost of $8,000,000.

While the Secretary of War by this amendment is to be authorized to contract "for the supply of rough-bored, rough-turned, and tempered steel in forms suitable for heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare for Army and Navy purposes, in quantity not to exceed 10,000 tons," an appropriation of only $6,000,000 is made.

Of course the Secretary can only contract for the amount of steel this appropriation will purchase. The appropriation will induce American manufacturers to bid for the contract, but the cost of the plant necessary for forging the steel ingots required for the manufacture of large guns, and the risks of the manufacturer in expending the large sum required for such a plant, will to a greater or less extent enter into this contract and into the cost of every ton of forged steel that is furnished under it. Now, I submit to the Senator from Connecticut whether we will not be compelled to pay a much larger price for the steel gun-metal furnished under the contract authorized by this amendment than we should be compelled to pay if we should appropriate the whole seven and a half or eight million dollars in order that we might get the 10,000 tons of metal at once, and if in such a case it would not be very poor economy in Congress to cut this appropriation as recommended to $6,000,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think I can throw some light upon it. The two bills, Senate bills 662 and 663, that were offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] and referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses, and reported favorably with some amendments by that committee, were just the outcome of these various boards and the result of consultations innumerable. They provided $8,000,000 in each case and 10,000 tons in each case. The bill 662 was by instructions of that committee proposed by me as an amendment to the fortification bill, and in general substance is here; but the figures are made $6,000,000 instead of $8,000,000. Out of that $8,000,000, however, in the bill 662, about $1,000,000 was to go to the plant of a finishing factory. That reduces it down to $7,000,000. Again, the Committee on Appropriations struck out all that we said in that bill about armor, leaving that to be done next winter. It has to be done; but we are very thankful that they put the guns in.

I telegraphed and had a consultation last evening with an eminent manufacturer, who talked to me not as a manufacturer alone but as an American, and he thinks the contract can be made under the $6,000,000, because they will not have to get all the machinery necessary for forging, rolling, and adapting the various forms of armor, but they will be devoted under this provision to guns alone, and we then can make a contract. If they are cut off anywhere, they will not agree to furnish quite the 10,000 tons, but the main object will be reached. I think a contract can be made with some of the leading manufacturers under this amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to go just as far as it is wisdom to go, just as far as we can economically expend the money; but after a good deal of conversation and after eliminating some items of expense alluded to by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the whole committee were of opinion that it was wise to put it at $6,000,000. If we shall be unable to make a satisfactory contract before next winter, it will be perfectly competent then to enlarge the amount; and I suggest to the Senator from Oregon whether on the whole, to meet different views and different conceptions of duty at this point and in the inaugurating of this policy, we had not better remain at the point of $6,000,000, as all of the committee agree.

Mr. HAWLEY. One thing more in answer to the Senator from Oregon. This bill gives more than $6,000,000 to the purposes of bill 662, because a part of the $400,000 in the section for finishing is to be devoted to this purpose.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Massachusetts I think did not understand me as opposing this amendment. I am heartily in favor of the amendment, if it is the best we can get. The suggestion I made was whether we should not pay for the plant and get less than 10,000 tons of material.

Mr. DAWES. We shall be here in four or five months again.

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I am instructed by the Committee on Coast Defenses to offer an amendment to the bill which has been printed and laid on the tables of Senators for some time. I offer it as an additional section to the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

For the construction of fortification and other works of coast defense, in accordance with the recommendations of the board of fortifications or other defenses, appointed by the President of the United States under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, $2,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I am aware of the impatience of the Senate at any further discussion upon this bill or amendments to it; and if the object sought to be accomplished by this amendment were less important than it is I should be willing to allow the vote to be taken in silence. But the necessity for providing defenses for our seacoast and protection for our shipping, and our great commercial cities is so urgent that at the risk of wearying the patience of the Senate I must ask to be permitted to present in a general way what is sought to be accomplished by this amendment and the reasons which induced the Committee on Coast Defenses to offer it.

It is proposed by the amendment which has just been adopted and which was first reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and by the amendment under consideration, to commit Congress to the proposition that the fortification of our coasts shall now be undertaken, and to provide for the commencement of the work, and also to adopt in a general way a plan for the fortification of the coasts, namely, the system recommended by the board on fortifications and other defenses, appointed under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1885.

The subject of coast defense embraces so many topics and so much of technical learning that a full presentation of it, even if I possessed the ability to make it, and I do not, would occupy the attention of the Senate longer than would be justifiable at this late day in the session. It comprehends the question of ships, of armor, of guns, of fortifications, of mines, of torpedoes, of torpedo boats, floating defenses, explosives, and projectiles, and the best material for and the best mode of manufacture of each; in short, almost every question connected with fortifications and a navy sufficient to defend our coasts against the attacks of modern ships of war.

Fortunately many of these questions have been made the subject of examination and report by the several boards which have been constituted under the provisions of acts of Congress. The Secretaries of War have in their annual reports for several years past urged upon the attention of Congress the defenseless condition of our coasts and recommended that the work of fortifying our principal ports should be commenced at once; and various officers of the Army and Navy have in official reports and in other ways made valuable suggestions in regard to suitable and efficient coast defenses.

As we have just heard from the Senator from Connecticut, by reason of the improvements which have been made in guns and armor, our fortifications, which are stated by the board on fortifications and other defenses to have been in 1860 equal to those possessed by any nation in the world, have become worthless and unable to cope with the armored war vessels armed with heavy modern breech-loading rifled guns.

I take it for granted that on both sides of this Chamber we are agreed as to the necessity of fortifying our coasts. The truth is that we have no guns capable of resisting an attack of a modern ship of war, and if we had them we have neither ships nor fortifications prepared to receive them where they could be effectively used to repel a naval attack. Our entire Atlantic and Gulf coast, from the northern boundary of Maine to the southern boundary of Texas, a distance of 3,000 miles and over, is wholly defenseless. Our great centers of wealth, of commerce, and of manufactures are without protection. A single modern ship of war could, before we would be able to improvise a defense, destroy property of a value greater than the necessary cost of fortifying our entire coasts.

I have here a statement which I take from the report of a speech made recently by Hon. JOSEPH WHEELER, of Alabama, in the House of Representatives, a statement in which the unprotected situation of the cities along the Atlantic and Gulf coast and the Pacific coast is described. The statement is as follows:

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.

These cities have a population of 1,772,962. One of these vessels could float in 30 feet water off Coney Island, beyond the range of any guns in our forts, and throw projectiles into the business part of the city of New York and to nearly every point in the city of Brooklyn.

I would like to ask what would be the effect if a shell weighing 2,000 pounds should drop and burst at the corner of Wall street and Broadway, and what would be the further effect of a few hundred such shots in New York and Brooklyn. And yet such an occurrence is at this moment a mechanical possibility.

BOSTON.

This city has a population of 369,832. An enemy's vessel could lie in 30 feet of water 5 miles from the State-house in Boston and throw these massive shells into Lynn, Chelsea, Charlestown, the navy-yard, East Boston, Boston, Cambridge, South Boston, Roxbury, and Dorchester.

PORTLAND, ME.

This city, with a population of 35,080, could be shelled by any one of the vessels described in the table, lying off to the northeast of the city, or to the southeast, in more than 30 feet of water, at distances varying from 3 to 4 miles.

NEW BEDFORD.

This city has a population of 26,845. Any vessel with such an armament as I have described could lie off in the outer harbor, at almost any point to the southward of the city, in 27 or 30 feet of water, at any distance the commander might select, from 2 to 6 miles, destroy the bridge to Fairhaven, and either exact a heavy contribution or lay the city in ruins in a few hours.

PROVIDENCE.

The harbor at this point has numerous shoals, which, in the absence of a pilot, would render it impossible for a hostile ship to approach it safely nearer than 6½ miles (Conimicut Point), but the high-powered guns I have referred to could readily destroy the vast and important manufacturing industries which center at Providence, with its population of 104,857, from even a greater distance.

NEW HAVEN.

This city has a population of 62,882. Vessels could rest securely 4 miles from the city, in 30 feet of water, and destroy it in a very few hours.

NORFOLK.

The population of this city is 21,926. Vessels drawing 26 feet of water can approach to within 7 miles, and, with high-powered guns, shell every foot of the city.

BALTIMORE.

This city, with a population of 332,313, is, in a great measure, protected by the difficulties of access, but it would be possible for vessels drawing not more than 15 feet to sail abreast of the city, and some of the vessels carrying guns of 10 miles range draw but 10½ to 15 feet.

WASHINGTON.

The capital of our country was once in the hands of British troops. It is 200 miles from the ocean, but vessels drawing 19 feet can sail to the city. Its population is 159,871.

RICHMOND.

This city has a population of 63,600. It is 150 miles from the mouth of James River, which has 13 feet of water to the city.

CHARLESTON.

This city has a population of 49,984. There are many points not more than 7 miles from the city from which vessels drawing 25 feet could shell the city.

SAVANNAH.

This city, with a population of 30,709, could be easily protected. Only very light-draught vessels can approach nearer than 10 or 12 miles.

PENSACOLA.

This city has but 6,845 population, but it is important on account of its excellent harbor. A position could be taken in 30 feet of water south of Santa Rosa Island, the distance being not more than 5 miles from the city.

MOBILE.

This city has a population of 29,132, and could very easily be protected, but at present there is water sufficient to float vessels drawing less than 16 feet to within 4 miles of the city.

NEW ORLEANS.

This city has a population of 216,090. It is 110 miles from the sea, but the largest vessels could sail abreast of the city. The control of the jetties would be a strong element in the defense of the city. Small craft not drawing over 5 feet could enter the lake in rear of the city.

GALVESTON.

The population is 22,248. Vessels drawing 30 feet could select any position not more than 3 miles off and shell the city.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The population is 233,959. The harbor, which is one of the finest in the world, could in the present condition of the defenses be entered, but even if this could not be done, vessels carrying high-powered guns could rest outside the bay in 30 feet of water, at a distance of 6 or 7 miles, and shell the city.

I have referred to the larger cities, but it might be well to mention that our smaller seaports are equally defenseless.

Each of the following-named cities could be shelled by the foreign vessels I have named:

PACIFIC COAST.

Port Townsend, Steilacoom, Seattle Harbor, Olympia, New Dungeness Astoria, Kalama, Portland, Newport, Empire City, Crescent City, Trinidad, Mendocino, Benicia, Vallejo, Santa Cruz, Monterey, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, and San Diego.

GULF COAST.

Brownsville, Clarksville, Brazos Santiago, Apalachicola, Saint Mark's, Tampa Bay, Cedar Keys, and Key West.

ATLANTIC COAST.

Saint Augustine, Jacksonville, Ferdinanda, Saint Mary's, Port Royal, Georgetown (S. C.), Smithville, Wilmington, Beaufort, Plymouth, New Berne, Edenton, Annapolis, Hampton Roads, Lewes, Atlantic City, Little Egg Harbor, Perth Amboy, Bridgeport, New London, Stonington, Bristol, Newport, Fall River, Vineyard Haven, Nantucket, Provincetown, Barnstable, Plymouth, Lynn, Marblehead, Salem, Gloucester, Rockport, Newburyport, Portsmouth, Saco, Bath, Camden, Bucksport, Bangor, Belfast, Rockland, Eastport, and Calais.

I mention these places merely for the purpose of corroborating the statement I have previously made relative to the defenseless condition of all our seaports.

In addition to the foregoing I also ask the Secretary to read in connection with this matter of the defenseless condition of our Atlantic and Gulf coast an extract from a letter from Bvt. Maj. Gen. Q. A. Gillmore, United States Army, to the Chief of Engineers, dated July 15, 1881.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

It is an error to suppose that the channels leading into our most valuable harbors are too shallow to admit a modern fleet.

Depth of draught is not a measure of offensive power and never can be. The most powerful batteries are carried on a moderate draught of water. The English turret cruisers Inflexible, Agamemnon, and Ajax, armed with 38-ton and 81-ton guns, throwing projectiles of 700 to 1,700 pounds weight, draw but 25 feet when fully equipped and ready for sea, and high naval authority asserts that armored cruisers of a very formidable type, capable of navigating the ocean with safety and dispatch, can be built on a service draught of 23 to 24 feet. Moreover, the practice of naval construction at the present time unmistakably tends to light-draught vessels, thus destroying that partial security against armored fleets which all our comparatively shallow harbors were formerly and very properly thought to possess.

It seems improbable that many such unwieldly monsters as the four-gun turret ship Dreadnaught and the twelve-gun broadside ship Alexandria, which, together, cost the English Government over $5,000,000, exclusive of armament and outfit, will be built in future.

Disregarding, however, any additional danger to ourselves from vessels of lighter draught than those now afloat, there are among the present armored fleets of Europe only ten cruisers drawing more than 27 feet of water, and only three drawing more than 28 feet, while there are more than half a hundred drawing 24 feet or less.

There are more than a dozen fine harbors on our Atlantic coast—Portland, Portsmouth, Boston, Newport, and Hampton Roads being among the number—easily accessible to the largest war vessels hitherto constructed or contemplated.

There are more than half a dozen other harbors, among which may be specified New Bedford, New London, New York, and Key West, into which a few of the deepest draught men-of-war can not enter. But there is not one of them that does not possess ample depth to pass half the armored cruisers of Great Britain, including vessels armed with the 38-ton and 81-ton guns; all the German armored vessels except one; more than two-thirds of those of the Italian navy; all belonging to the Russian navy except two; all belonging to the Austrian navy except three; all belonging to Holland and Turkey without exception, and a large portion of those belonging to the French and Spanish navies.

The aggregate population clustered closely about these twenty harbors for armored vessels is nearly 3,000,000, while the value of public and private property exposed within easy and destructive range of a hostile fleet can not be far short of $2,000,000,000. The losses that might be inflicted upon these communities in a few hours, in their present unprotected condition, would exceed more than tenfold the entire cost of suitable, permanent defenses for the whole country.

No account is here taken of that incalculable and far greater injury which would be entailed by even the brief presence of a victorious hostile fleet in our waters, keeping the whole coast in alarm, and deranging and destroying the business and industry of the people.

There is yet another numerous class of harbors, with still shallower channels of entrance, into which a draught of 22 to 24 feet can be safely carried, many of them being the centers of extensive commercial and manufacturing interests, which are exposed to the attacks of the lighter draught iron-clad cruisers.

It appears therefore that our entire Atlantic and Gulf coasts from Maine to Texas, a distance of more than 3,000 miles, is peculiarly at the mercy of a hostile naval power, and that our largest centers of population, commerce, and manufactures, where the greatest values are accumulated, and hence where the greatest temptations are offered and the greatest injury could be inflicted in the briefest interval of time, are within easy reach of the most destructive engines of war born of modern invention and science.

Mr. DOLPH. The Pacific coast is equally defenseless. The harbors of San Francisco and Puget Sound will admit of the entrance of the largest ships of war afloat, while more than one-half of the vessels of the navies of the great powers of Europe could enter the mouth of the Columbia River and reach Portland at most seasons of the year. The fortifications and guns on the Pacific coast—at San Francisco, at San Diego, and at the mouth of the Columbia—are like those on the Atlantic coast, utterly useless for purposes of modern warfare. We have not to-day, as was substantially stated by the Senator from Connecticut, a single fort that could not be demolished with ease by a projectile fired from a modern steel rifle of the smallest caliber. We have not to-day a ship of war that could not be pierced through and through by a projectile fired from a 5-inch steel rifle, or even from a rapid-firing gun.

We have to-day in the Army no modern guns. There are, I believe, two steel breech-loading rifles of small caliber in process of construction for the Army as experimental guns, the construction of which was authorized by a provision contained in the fortification appropriation bill of 1883, in accordance with the recommendation of the Senate Committee on Ordnance. We have not to-day in the Navy any high-power modern guns or any steel rifles except those already constructed and in process of construction at the Washington navy-yard, and elsewhere by contract, for the armament of the new cruisers.

This is not the worst feature of the case. These things can not be furnished in a day. It will take years to provide them. According to the report of the gun foundry board, which is approved by the board on fortifications and other defenses, it will take from one to three years to prepare a plant sufficient to forge the steel ingots required for the construction of a 16-inch steel rifle, and it will take two years thereafter to assemble the parts and manufacture the gun. It will take many years for the two plants, which it is proposed to secure by the two bills which have been reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses to authorize the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War to contract for the supply of ingots for steel guns and armor and steel for other purposes for the Navy, to cast and forge the ingots which will be required for the guns necessary to fortify our principal seaports.

It will take years to construct the foundations for the gun emplacements, and the magazines and engine-rooms of the fortifications. If we are to have fortifications, modern ships, and modern guns in time of war, we must provide them in advance. For an army we may wait until an emergency arises which requires it and depend upon the patriotism of the people to respond to the country's call for its defense.

With a small standing army and a sufficient number of officers educated in the theory of their profession and with some experience in the field we may be able to do as we did at the breaking out of the civil war, speedily organize and equip an efficient army.

The same thing may be said of the Navy; but there are some things that can not be provided as readily as an army; there are some things that can not be improvised. The time was, and that not more than fifty or seventy-five years ago, when the great nations of Europe required six months to get ready for war. Now their armies and navies are in constant readiness, and war is often proclaimed at the cannon's mouth before the manifesto has issued. Modern wars are fought and ended and the unsuccessful nation pays the cost in less time than it would take us to build a single fortification or a single ship of war or even to manufacture a single modern gun.

The great nations of Europe are fortifying their coasts with the most formidable defensive works that human ingenuity can devise. They are providing themselves navies with modern ships of war, armored ships, armed with the most powerful guns that have been invented. The time has not arrived when the nations of the earth shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks. "Peace is the dream of philosophers, but war is the history of man."

The defenseless condition of our seacoasts, the unprotected condition of our shipping and our great cities, are not calculated to procure us immunity from insult or to command respect abroad. They are sources of national weakness and of national danger; and to-day there is no duty more imperative on the American Congress than that of providing for the national defense. We should be prepared not only to defend our coasts, but to punish an insult to our flag wherever it floats.

The times are ripe for undertaking the work. The people demand it. Why do we procrastinate? We have the experience of the great nations of Europe that have spent years and expended millions of dollars in experimenting with guns, with armor, and with ships. We have appointed boards to examine the questions of ships, of armor, of guns, of fortifications, and other defenses, and we have their reports, and we know enough about the subject now to undertake this work in accordance with plans that will admit of the adoption of any improvement which may be hereafter made in guns or in armor.

I agree with the Senator from Connecticut; for I, too, do not regard it as a matter of regret that since the war we have been engaged in other matters for the development of our country, and have spent comparatively nothing in the manufacture of modern guns, or of armor, or of ships of war. We have undoubtedly saved large sums by so doing. We may take advantage of the experience of other nations; we may study their failures, and their successes, and so far as the character and type of ships and armor and guns are concerned we may commence the work at the point which they have attained after a quarter of a century of costly experience.

The objects to be gained by coast defense are the protection of our shipping, the fortification of the great cities that line our coasts, with their costly public buildings, their business blocks, their fine residences, and their accumulations of manufactured and agricultural products, they being also centers of extensive systems of inland transportation by water and rail, and the providing of fortified harbors of defense for our merchant marine, both foreign and coastwise, in case of war. Why, sir, in case of war with a foreign nation possessing a modern navy, or even with a nation possessing a single modern war ship, our extensive coastwise commerce, extending over 4,000 miles of coast, not including the coast of Alaska, would be seriously interrupted, if not wholly destroyed. And in order that our merchant marine should not be entirely destroyed in case of war, it will be necessary to provide fortified harbors of refuge into which our ships could retire, because it would be utterly impracticable with any navy we can ever hope to possess to protect our extensive coastwise commerce by a navy alone.

We require fortified harbors of refuge for the vessels of our Navy, our unarmored cruisers, because while they might be able, on account of their greater speed, to escape from armored vessels of the enemy, they would require fortified harbors into which they could retire for the purpose of securing coal and other supplies. It will be seen that the importance of a harbor when considered in connection with coast defenses does not depend alone on the value of the property exposed to destruction, the amount of commerce that centers there, or the amount of shipping in the port, but the question of providing fortified harbors of refuge for our merchant marine becomes an important factor.

This brings me to the consideration of the report of the board on fortifications and other defenses. That board has named twenty-seven ports as the ports at which fortifications are most urgently needed. They are New York, San Francisco, Boston, the lake ports, Hampton Roads, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Portland (Me.), Rhode Island ports in Narragansett Bay, Key West, Charleston (S. C.), Mobile, New London, Savannah, Galveston, Portland (Oreg.), Pensacola (Fla.), Wilmington (N. C.), San Diego (Cal.), Portsmouth (N. H.), defenses of Cumberland Sound at Fort Clinch, defense of ports on the Kennebec River, Maine, New Bedford, Mass., defense of ports on the Penobscot River, Maine, at Fort Knox, and New Haven, Conn.

The board did well in placing San Francisco the second on the list. I do not think they did as well in placing Portland, Oreg., or rather the mouth of the Columbia River, the eighteenth on the list.

As I have already said, the question of providing fortified harbors of refuge should be taken into consideration when we undertake to determine at what ports fortifications are most urgently needed. I think the board underestimated the commerce of Portland. In addition to its foreign commerce, the vessels engaged in the transportation of wheat and flour, and salmon and wool and lumber, it has a great and rapidly increasing coastwise commerce, which, when the resources of the Northwest are further developed—and they are now rapidly developing—and when Alaska has been occupied and its resources developed to some extent, will increase to great proportions. Again, look at the condition of the coast. From Cape Farewell, the northern boundary of Washington Territory, on the Pacific Ocean, to the southern boundary of California, is 1,630 miles. The distance from San Francisco to the mouth of the Columbia River is 550 miles, and in all that distance there is not a harbor into which the larger vessels engaged in the coasting trade of that coast can enter.

I think, therefore, it is important to provide for the fortification and defense of the mouth of the Columbia River, not alone to protect the commerce of the Columbia River and the cities of Portland and Astoria, which might without sufficient defenses be reached by a hostile armored vessel, but to provide a fortified harbor of refuge for the vessels engaged in our coastwise commerce. Portland should have been placed higher on the list, and Puget Sound should have been added to it.

Mr. FRYE. Great Britain will have a place all fixed up for you.

Mr. DOLPH. I was just going to allude to that. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] in discussing in the Senate the bill for the admission of Washington Territory during the present session called attention to the foresight and sagacity of the British statesmen who secured for Great Britain a portion of the waters of Puget Sound and of the islands that are encircled by them. He called attention to the fact that at the southern end of Vancouver's Island Great Britain has a navy-yard and a dry-dock larger than any possessed by the United States on the Atlantic coast, while just south on the American shore were the cities of Port Townsend and Seattle and Tacoma and Olympia entirely uprotected, the United States never having thrown a shovelful of earth toward constructing a fortification upon Puget Sound.

The Senator might have gone further and told how the British Government by large subsidies has secured the construction of a transcontinental railroad entirely upon its own soil, which gives it facility for massing large bodies of troops rapidly upon the Pacific coast. He might have stated that the harbors upon the British side in Puget Sound are large enough for the navies not only of Great Britain but of the world to float in safety. He did state that Great Britain had at the time of his remarks stationed there one of the vessels that shelled Alexandria, with a distinguished British admiral in command. He might have told you—for such is the fact—that Great Britain keeps constantly there from one to three vessels of war, a menace against the United States. I clipped from a city paper the other morning something which I will read. It is taken from the National Republican of Saturday, July 24, 1886:

OUR NORTHERN NEIGHBORS ARE AT IT is the heading.

HALIFAX, N. S., July 23.

A party of royal engineers, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel O'Brien, left here last Monday for British Columbia. They go to look over the ground with a view of reporting to the imperial authorities as to the best manner of fortifying the Pacific coast.

The Straits of Juan de Fuca, running east and west, separate the American possessions from Vancouver's Island, and that strait and the canal De Haro form the boundary between British Columbia and the United States. South of this boundary line there are two entrances to the bays and harbors of Puget Sound, upon which are situated the cities I have named. One is Deception Pass; the other is Admiralty Inlet. Deception Pass is a narrow inlet through which the tide ebbs and flows with great velocity and which could only be passed by large vessels of war at favorable stages of the tide, and may be easily defended. The defense of Admiralty Inlet would be more difficult. The distance between Wilson's Point, which is on the mainland, and Admiralty Head, which is upon the island opposite, is 4 miles. I think the largest vessels of war could float in any part of the channel, but with the increased range of modern guns it would not be difficult to fortify that channel by batteries on either side. Two miles is considered an efficient range for land batteries, and would be sufficient to insure the destruction of almost any vessel whose armor could be pierced by modern guns mounted upon land fortifications.

It must be apparent to every one that unless the entrances to Puget Sound are fortified, in case of a war with Great Britain, and probably in case of a war with any foreign country, we must give up Eastern Washington, or Puget Sound, and the cities upon it, with all their wealth and commerce, to the enemy.

In this connection, I submit a letter from Brig. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, then commanding the Department of the Columbia, to the Assistant Adjutant-General, Division of the Pacific:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE COLUMBIA,
Vancouver Barracks, Wash., July 7, 1885.

SIR: I desire again to call attention to the importance of the fortifications at the entrance of Puget Sound.

In company with Colonel Mendell, Major Jones, and Captain Powell, of the Engineer Corps, I have recently visited the principal points that have heretofore been mentioned in several communications from these headquarters, and am fully impressed with the necessity of the Government taking such action as will secure proper defense to the great commercial interests of Puget Sound. These are constantly increasing every year, and have now reached such magnitude as to become of national interest.

Many reports have been forwarded and are now on file in the War Department, and particularly in the office of the Chief Engineer of the Army.

Last year I detailed a board of experienced officers, consisting of Major Rodgers, Captain Taylor, and Captain MacMurray, to examine the subject, and their report was forwarded to division headquarters.

Many valuable points have been reserved, but I regard the two main entrances to Puget Sound as of the first importance for present consideration, namely, Admiralty Inlet and Deception Pass.

Suitable ground commanding the entrance to Deception Pass has been reserved by the Government. That at Admiralty Head, Point Wilson, and Marrowstone Point has been reserved only in part, and a sufficient sum should be appropriated, in addition to that required for defensive works, to secure a permanent title for the Government.

One objection to any action being taken toward the defense of this inlet has been the distance between Point Wilson and Admiralty Head, about 4 miles, but this it is believed can be greatly overcome now by the use of modern appliances.

I recommend that the attention of Congress be called to this subject in time for action during the coming session.

The British Government is now expending a very large amount of money in completing its navy-yard and dry-docks at Esquimalt, near Victoria, British Columbia, and has kept during the past ten years from a single ship-of-war to a small fleet in these waters, and I think it advisable that our Government should take an equal interest in the establishment of a naval station in this part of the United States.

Several reservations have been made on the Straits of Fuca and Puget Sound for naval purposes.

What point is best suited for all the requirements of the Navy could probably best be determined by a board composed of naval officers.

Lake Washington, near Seattle, has many advantages for such a purpose, it being a lake of fresh water of great depth, and in close proximity to the deep water of the sound.

I request this communication be referred to Colonel Mendell for remark.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NELSON A. MILES,
Brigadier-General Commanding.

To the ASSISTANT ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
Division of the Pacific, Presidio, San Francisco, Cal.

It seems to be settled that a complete defense can only be made with modern guns of high power, mounted upon fixed or floating batteries. Theoretically it is possible to defend our coast by a navy consisting of a sufficient number of modern war-ships. Practically it can not be done. To do so it would be necessary to possess a navy so large that we could concentrate at every one of these twenty-seven ports which should be defended according to the report of the board on fortifications or other defenses and other ports which are not included in their list, a navy larger and more powerful than any naval force which could be brought against them. It will be seen at once that the number of ships required for such a character of defense would be practically beyond the ability of the Government to provide.

The defenses recommended by the board consist of armored turrets revolving or fixed, armored casemates, barbette batteries, mortar batteries, and floating batteries. Floating batteries are recommended for the ports of San Francisco and New Orleans. They are recommended at San Francisco because the city is situated so near the sea that a modern ship of war could anchor outside the harbor and throw projectiles into the city. It is necessary for the defense of the port therefore to have these floating batteries to meet and repel the enemy outside the harbor. They are recommended for the defense of the mouth of the Mississippi because owing to the nature of the soil sufficient foundation for turrets and land fortifications can not be there obtained.

As was said by the Senator from Connecticut, it is not deemed practicable to thoroughly defend a harbor by means of land fortifications alone, because modern ships of war with such armor as they carry would be able in the night-time, or even in the day-time, to sail by our fortifications, get beyond the range of the guns and destroy the cities our fortifications are intended to protect. It is therefore necessary to have mines or clusters of torpedoes as obstructions in the channel to detain the armored vessels of the enemy within the range of the heavy guns of the forts until they can be effectively used upon them. These mines must be protected by shore batteries specially designed for that purpose. The mines will be operated by electricity. The operating room and the cable which extends from the operating room into the water must be protected by armor. Electric search-lights will also be required, so that at night an enemy will be detected if he undertakes to remove the torpedoes or grapple for their connections.

As was stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, modern guns have arrived at such perfection that they throw a projectile weighing 22,000 pounds and have a range of 11 miles. It is said that the 10-inch cast-iron smooth-bore gun, which was the largest gun we possessed in 1860, had a muzzle energy of 2,000 foot-tons, while the modern steel rifles have a muzzle energy ranging from 20,000 to 35,000 and 40,000 and even 61,000 foot-tons of muzzle energy, and the projectiles have increased in size more than twenty-fold.

I read just now in discussing another amendment a statement showing the number and character of guns possessed by the Army. We have in the Army 2,065 guns, all smooth-bore muzzle-loading cast-iron guns with the exception of the few steel-lined converted rifles, and all comparatively worthless. We have in the Navy 3,285 guns of the same character, of little value. The only modern guns we have are the modern breech-loading steel rifles, which have been recently constructed for the armament of our cruisers. These are 5-inch, 6-inch, 8-inch, 10-inch, and 10½-inch breech-loading, built-up, forged-steel rifles of the latest type.

We have constructed and in process of construction two steel breech-loading rifles of 5-inch caliber, twenty-one of 6-inch caliber, eight of 8-inch caliber, two of 10-inch caliber, and one of 10½-inch caliber, making thirty-four in all. That is our means of defense so far as guns are concerned.

So far as our forts are concerned, as was said by the Senator from Connecticut to-day, they are not only unsuited for defense but they are in such a condition that they would be positively dangerous to the occupants in case of a naval attack, and would be readily destroyed by projectiles fired from a modern gun of the smaller caliber.

Our present Navy consists of one first-rate, the Tennessee, of 4,840 tons displacement; eleven second-rates, the Trenton, Lancaster, Brooklyn, Pensacola, Richmond, Hartford, Omaha, Lackawanna, Vandalia, Shenandoah, and Powhatan, varying in displacement from 2,100 to 3,980 tons; and nineteen third-rates, the Juniata, Ossipee, Quinnebaug, Swatara, Galena, Marion, Mohican, Iroquois, Wachusett, Kearsarge, Adams, Alliance, Essex, Enterprise, Nipsic, Yantic, Monocacy, Alert, and Ranger, varying in displacement from 900 to 1,900 tons.

The Secretary of the Navy in 1884 reported that out of this number the Tennessee, the Lackawanna, the Powhatan, and the Wachusett would be condemned when surveyed, and that it was estimated that there would pass out of the service within six years the Brooklyn, the Hartford, the Iroquois, the Kearsarge, the Pensacola, and the Richmond.

There should be added to these thirty-one vessels four vessels of the fourth-rate of small displacement, the Michigan, the Palos, the Pinta, the Despatch, and the Thetis.

We also have two torpedo rams, the Intrepid, undergoing alterations at New York, and the Alarm at New York out of commission.

We also have fourteen single-turreted iron-clad monitors, which are all of them reported as being out of repair and requiring more or less repairs to make them serviceable. We have also launched, and awaiting appropriations to complete them, five double-turreted monitors.

I hold in my hand a table, taken from the speech already referred to of Hon. JOSEPH WHEELER, made in the House of Representatives, showing the number of guns afloat ranging 10 miles or upward owned by foreign nations, with the names, the maximum armor, the draught of ship, the number and caliber of guns, and also guns afloat ranging from 9 to 10 miles, which I submit:

It will be seen that the list is large and every one of these powerful guns could be brought to bear upon the important cities which dot our seacoast.

I also have from the same source clipped a statement of the naval strength and annual expenditures for naval purposes of different countries, which I submit in connection with the statement I have already made of the present condition of the guns of the Army and Navy and of the ships of our Navy.

This amendment is intended to enable the Secretary of War to commence the foundations for fortifications. In the judgment of the board on fortifications or other defenses this work should be carried on pari passu with the work of providing guns for the fortifications.

I have here a joint letter of the Chief of Engineers and the Chief of Ordnance, submitted at my request at the time I proposed to offer for reference to the Committee on Coast Defenses an amendment for this purpose. These officers evidently understood that my proposed amendment contemplated an appropriation for furnishing guns and armor, as well as foundations; but the communication itself contains some things that I have not seen elsewhere, and which I consider a valuable contribution to the general fund of information upon this subject. These officers call attention to the necessity of making an appropriation for foundations at the same time appropriations are made for securing metal for guns. I ask to have the Secretary read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Personal.]

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., April 29, 1886.

SIR: In submitting to you the proposed amendment to the fortification bill, should this when it comes from the House need modification, we beg leave to add a few considerations which we hold to be pertinent to the object and necessity of coast defenses, meaning by that term coast batteries with their armament, and leaving out of consideration, for the moment at least, such auxiliaries as torpedo boats and floating batteries.

And first, lest public opinion be led astray by the fallacy that a coast as extensive as ours, fully 4,000 miles in extent, could be defended by any naval force which the resources of the country would ever create, we will begin here by stating that this serious error has arisen and been nurtured from the example of England (which has heretofore and for the future will ever owe its protection from invasion to the navy), without discriminating between the radically different conditions and circumstances of the two countries. England has coast batteries, armored casemates, and has constructed one turret at Dover, but these coast batteries are to prevent sudden descents of a hostile navy upon her dockyards and important seaports.

Their objects are local, and such defenses would never prevent the landing upon a coast of an army, but for the powerful navy which for this purpose it has been the intention to keep at a strength superior to the force of a single hostile power or even to a probable combination of powers. We have also seen in past wars that her efforts have been persistently and successfully directed to the destruction of her adversary's naval power as the pledge of her own security.

Her proximity to the Continent, joined to the necessity of distributing her land forces over various stations and colonies throughout the world, would leave her defenseless against invasion from her powerful adversaries but for a predominance, and that a large one, of her naval power over any other nation. The small extent of her coast renders a complete defense by a navy practicable, as it is also the sole means upon which she could rely for such object.

Our situation is radically different; our distance from any powerful nation renders an invasion in force improbable and even impossible, and an invading army if landed must finally succumb to the large force we could assemble (since our strength would not be frittered away by the necessity of protecting colonies and foreign stations), or would be compelled to re-embark. What temptation, therefore, would an enemy have to make war against us? The answer is evident and it is, the occupation of our large seaports if left undefended. But if hostile fleets be prevented from reaching these cities or effectually bombarding them, what prize is left to an enemy's efforts?

With every important seaport that is fortified against naval attack we have so far diminished the chances of war. How many should be so fortified in order to eliminate the probability of war against us is a question which the statesman as well as the soldier should be called upon to answer.

Wars nowadays have been made so costly that the successful party relies upon making the defeated one pay expenses; but what basis to a foreign power would there be for such calculation, when invasion becomes impossible and our rich seaports shall be secure from naval attack by batteries and submarine mines?

So far a navy for defense has not been invoked, and it is plainly seen that the defense would be complete by simply barring by other means the way to the principal seaports.

The fortification board in its report, page 7, states:

"It is proper to discuss briefly the objects to be secured by a defense of the coasts and the nature of the attack to which these are most exposed.

"To the last named the answer would be a naval attack. An attack by land, if attempted in force, must be resisted by the armies of the country, and the mode of doing this it is not necessary here to consider.

"The objects against which a naval attack would be directed are:"

These are enumerated, as first, the important commercial ports. "In the second place, vessels in the foreign trade must be protected—this at sea could be performed only by the navy—but when these arrive upon the coast, they should find fortified harbors of refuge provided for their security."

On page 9, the report goes on: "The defenses, as to character and kind with reference to armament, should be fixed and floating, one or both, according to locality, armed with powerful cannon needed to repel attack from the most formidable ships.

"In the phrase 'floating defenses' first used, the armored sea-going ship of the navy is not referred to. We have none of that kind, and if hereafter built in sufficient number and power they would act offensively and not be confined to the defense of ports. The floating defenses mean floating batteries designed specially for operating in harbors or close to the land, armored more heavily and armed with heavier guns than any probable adversary. Of considerable less draught than the armored sea-going ship they could, by operating among the shoals, avoid ramming, and even torpedoes. To gain such advantages speed must be sacrificed; but it is quite evident that for the defense of harbors and bays the advantages of extra thickness of armor and of superior power of gun more than compensate for that loss.

"These batteries are costly, and their use should be restricted to cases of necessity; as, for instance, where the port is so near to deep water that a bombardment may not otherwise be prevented; also in localities where the nature of the foundations forbids the construction of fixed defenses, or where the width of the channel is too great to be well swept from shore batteries."

For the reasons assigned in the last paragraph floating batteries were recommended as parts of defense at New Orleans and San Francisco.

In the estimates made by the board, page 29 of the report, is found the following: "An appropriation for the building of floating batteries, the type to be selected by a joint board of Army and Navy officers." * * *

The board also recommended as a useful auxiliary the employment of torpedo boats in the active defense of harbors.

"Their use will be quite general: First, in disturbing blockades and preventing these being made close, as no fleet would like to lie over night within striking distance of a station of these boats; second, in attacking an enemy's ship enveloped in fog or smoke; third, in relieving a vessel pursued by the enemy; fourth, in defending the mines by night and day against attempts at countermining, and in many other ways not necessary to recapitulate."

The board steadily adhered after a deliberate study of the question of coast defense, taking into consideration also all modern appliances of moment useful for attack and defense, to the principles laid down by preceding boards from 1820 to the present time, that the defense of the coast could be made complete by the construction of batteries on shore armed with guns powerful enough to pierce the ships of the period, assisted and supplemented in exceptional cases already referred to by floating batteries; and to these should be added obstructions in the channel to detain the hostile fleet under the fire of the guns on land.

The Navy was not to be relied upon for the defense of ports, and for this decision there were many reasons: First, the immense number of ships that would be required to protect such extent of coast and to be in sufficient force everywhere to meet an enemy's fleet which might strike anywhere. Second, the exceeding great cost per gun in comparison with land defenses. Third, the risk of being disabled by storms at a critical moment and the uncertain issue of a naval engagement. This is especially the case at the present time owing to the free use of self-moving torpedoes and other modern destructive agencies. Fourth, the greater cost of keeping in repair, and the expenses of going out of and into commission.

The land defenses may take the forms of armored turrets, armored casemates, and earth batteries, in every case mounted with modern heavy guns of caliber sufficient to penetrate armored vessels; and to these are added lines of submarine mines operated by electricity to serve as obstructions and detain the fleet under fire.

While the board was very emphatic in recommending forged steel as the material for guns, their opinion as to the material for armor-plates was not so decided. On page 9 you will find as follows: "The materials used in construction for the armor might either be iron or steel, although the latest experiments indicate the superiority of forged-steel plates. While the board is of opinion that forged-steel plates should be used, it also recommends that immediate experiments be undertaken to determine the most suitable armor for turrets and casemates."

Our engineers claim for rolled iron plates some points of superiority over steel plates—and it has been suggested that a test should be made of separate iron and steel plates combined in a composite shield, as it is argued that such form might combine the best qualities of resistance of the two metals.

We will remark here that similar tests are made continually among the most advanced nations to test the qualities in their contracts for armor—and are specially required in this country where the manufacture of armor will require such action to bring it up to the high standard of resistance required.

It was the idea of the board that the construction of other parts of the batteries should advance pari passu with the manufacture of armor and guns, in order that these should be utilized so soon as they were ready. The following are the words of the report, page 6: "That there may be no delay in mounting the guns as fast as completed, the work upon the extensive foundations for the gun emplacements, as well as magazines, shell-rooms, engine-rooms, and other constructions necessary for the service for the guns, should be commenced at the earliest moment."

We will conclude by stating in brief: That land batteries armed with modern heavy guns, in conjunction with lines of submarine mines across the practicable channels of entrance—these lines being defended by the fire of the batteries against attempts to remove the mines—afford with few exceptional cases the requisite protection against the passage of hostile fleets.

The exceptional cases are the heads of the passes in the Mississippi River at which places the foundations for heavy batteries do not exist, and at San Francisco where the distance between some of the batteries is too great to admit of a good cross-fire from them. In both of these cases the defense may be supplemented with floating batteries of peculiar construction with extra heavy armor, thicker than a sea-going vessel could carry.

Torpedo-boats, although not essential to security, would be useful at many points along the coast.

The preference in preparations for defense, if any are to be postponed, it is needless to state should be given to those which are essential.

One advantage of land-batteries over armored ships consists in the greater thickness of armor and the ability to increase that thickness without reconstructing the works, whenever the increase of penetration of projectiles may demand additional protection to the guns.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.
JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers.

Hon. JOSEPH N. DOLPH, United States Senate.

Mr. DOLPH. I call the attention of the Senate again to the quotation made in the letter just read from the report of the board on fortifications or other defenses. It is as follows:

That there may be no delay in mounting the guns as fast as completed, the work upon the extensive foundations for the gun emplacements, as well as magazines, shell-rooms, engine-rooms, and other constructions necessary for the service of the guns, should be commenced at the earliest moment.

This amendment is offered to meet the views here expressed in order that this work of preparing the foundations for the defenses to receive the guns may be commenced at the same time that we commence to provide the gun material. The two ought to go together. The Committee on Appropriations should have reported them together, and I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment offered by me, at least if not as offered in some modified form, so that the work may be commenced.

I desire to call attention to the recommendation of the board on fortifications and other defenses as to what should be appropriated for this purpose, and I insert in my remarks, as the question is of sufficient importance to justify it, the consolidated estimate of the board on fortifications or other defenses of the expense of the fortifications at the twenty-seven ports included in their list.

* Torpedo gunboats.

The board say:

Certain portions only of the whole amount above indicated as necessary are needed at once, namely:

A. An appropriation for gun steel sufficient to induce contracting steel works to prepare for and begin the manufacture of steel forgings for guns of all calibers, $8,000,000.

We have provided for that substantially. We appropriate $6,000,000 by the amendment to this bill already adopted.

Now comes the balance which are unprovided for:

B. An appropriation for a gun factory with plant sufficient to machine, assemble, and finish the guns, $1,000,000.

We have in part provided for that by making an appropriation for the purchase of machinery for the arsenal at Frankford, near Philadelphia.

C. An appropriation to inaugurate the building of masonry foundations, engine-rooms, shell-rooms, magazines, &c., necessary to the reception of the armor, guns, &c., $4,000,000 for the first year and $2,000,000 annually thereafter until completed.

All that is proposed by this amendment, all that is asked by the Committee on Coast Defenses for this purpose, is one-half of the amount recommended by the board.

D. An appropriation for armor and structural metal, $2,000,000 annually until completed.

E. An appropriation for gun-carriages, $1,000,000 annually until completed.

F. An appropriation for the building of floating batteries, the type to be selected by a joint board of Army and Navy officers, $3,000,000 for the first year and $2,000,000 annually until completed.

G. An appropriation for submarine mines and their adjuncts, $1,000,000 for the first year and $500,000 annually thereafter until completed.

H. An appropriation for building torpedo boats, $1,500,000 annually until all are built.

Summing up these recommendations, the board presents the following project for annual appropriations.

Appropriations recommended.

Purpose.	Appropriation for first year.	Future annual appropriations until work is completed.
A. Gun metal	$8,000,000
B. Gun factory	1,000,000
C. Masonry, &c	4,000,000	$2,000,000
D. Armor, &c	2,000,000	2,000,000
E. Gun-carriages	1,000,000	1,000,000
F. Floating batteries	3,000,000	2,000,000
G. Submarine mines, &c	1,000,000	500,000
H. Torpedo boats	1,500,000	1,500,000
Totals	21,500,000	9,000,000

It will be seen that the board recommend a total of $21,500,000 for the first year, and $9,000,000 annually thereafter until this work is completed, and they say that the work of providing the foundations should proceed pari passu with the work of providing the guns. The estimate is $13,500,000, or, without the estimate for the gun factory, $12,500,000 is recommended for fortifications not including the estimate for providing the gun metal and for the gun factory. The Committee on Coast Defenses has modestly asked of the Senate, and all that I am asking by this amendment, is $2,000,000 out of the $12,500,000 estimated, in order that the work of providing foundations may be proceeded with at the same time with the work of providing the guns, so that when the guns are constructed there may be some place in readiness to receive them. If we are going to enter upon the matter of coast defenses and of providing guns for the Army, I think the Senator in charge of the bill will agree with me, I think he does agree with me now, that we had better make this appropriation in order to commence this branch of the work.

I had intended, but the Senator from Connecticut saved me the trouble, to refer to the reports and recommendations of the several boards and committees on this subject. I shall not do it. I will only state that as the reports of the several committees and boards who have investigated the subject of coast defenses, and of ordnance, ships, &c., show the United States has no navy worthy of the name, not a single armed vessel of war, no forts capable of resisting attacks of vessels armed with modern guns, and no modern guns except a few constructed and in process of construction for the armament of new cruisers.

There is not a plant in the United States capable of forging a steel ingot required for the manufacture of a steel rifle of over 8 inches caliber. The United States is metallurgically independent of all other nations so far as the construction of ships, armors, guns, and projectiles are concerned. We possess the metals necessary to cast and forge steel ingots of the best quality suitable for the construction of modern steel rifles of the largest caliber. Our citizens possess the knowledge and experience, or will soon acquire it, if sufficient inducements are offered, to supply the steel necessary for the construction of modern guns. Our citizens stand ready to provide it, if the United States will guarantee a reasonable return for the investment.

The officers of the Army and Navy charged with such matters are well informed upon all subjects connected with the Navy and coast defenses. Their recommendations accord with the conclusion arrived at by the great European powers after years of costly experiment. Competent boards have recommended the character and types of guns, armor, fortifications, and other defenses, and have recommended a plan for the same. Public sentiment demands the commencement of the work, the condition of the Treasury justifies it, the national honor and national security demand it. The cost is not great compared with the importance of the objects to be secured. Congress should assume the responsibility at once of commencing the work and making the necessary appropriations for that purpose.

Mr. President, owing to the lateness of the hour and the natural impatience of the Senate at this late day in the session I shall not dwell upon this matter further. I hope the amendment will be adopted. If it is considered that the amount is too large I hope it will be reduced and at least some appropriation will be made by which we shall adopt the plan of the board on fortifications or other defenses for the defense of our seacoast, and authorize the commencement of the work. No matter how small the amount is, if the appropriation is made much will have been gained by adopting a general plan.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I shall trust to the good judgment of the Senate not to sink this little bill by overloading it; and I will take no time of the Senate to give the reasons why I hope so.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to state that this was unanimously reported by the Committee on Coast Defenses; that there was no dissenting member of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this subject I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I do not know how he would vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but I am informed by his colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] that he thinks he would vote "nay" on this question. I will, therefore, vote "nay" myself.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Harrison,	McMillan,
Cameron,	Dolph,	Hawley,	McPherson,
Conger,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Manderson,
Mitchell of Oreg.,	Riddleberger,	Spooner,	Whitthorne.

Chace,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Ransom,
Fair,	Logan,	Morrill,	Sabin.
George,	Miller,	Pike,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer an amendment from the Committee on Appropriations. I move to add as a new section:

SEC. —. To enable the Secretary of the Navy to provide and erect additional tools and machinery for the finishing and assembling of heavy ordnance at the Washington navy-yard, $200,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. In the fortification-appropriation act of the last session of Congress there was the following provision:

For the armament of seacoast fortifications, including the manufacture of heavy guns and carriages for the constructing and testing experimental gun-carriages; for the purchase or manufacture of a multicharge gun, and testing same—

And then it goes on with other items—

Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Upon an investigation in relation to this gun by a committee of the House of Representatives they made a report, which I shall not take the time of the Senate now to read, but it was recommended that $100,000 be appropriated for the purpose of properly testing this gun. The appropriation being a lump sum, and not sufficient to cover all the items contained therein, the gun was not tested or constructed.

An amendment was offered in the Senate for the manufacture of two guns of this character, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and reported favorably by the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], who is now absent. I offer for him the amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

For the manufacture of two improved Haskell multicharge guns of 8-inch caliber, $100,000; of which guns one shall be made of steel, at a cost not to exceed $60,000, and one principally of cast-iron, at a cost not to exceed $40,000; said guns to be made under the supervision and according to the directions of the projector; this appropriation being in lieu of the unexecuted provision for the multicharge gun in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885.

Mr. DAWES. The reason why that gun was not purchased was because of the fact that the board of engineers, considering the quality and purpose and promise of the gun, came to the conclusion that although at one time it promised great results, yet those results at less expense have in the opinion of the commission been achieved by a longer bore or caliber gun and by a slow-burning powder, so that they think they obtain a better result without the use of that gun than with it. The matter is not absolutely certain, but in the present doubt about it both the board and the Ordnance Department were of opinion that it was not wise at this moment to purchase another of these guns.

The committee heard the inventor of this gun and heard the Ordnance Department upon the subject, and had before them written documents upon it. The conclusion they came to was that they would not at this time make this purchase, not condemning the gun outright, but because so much doubt is thrown upon the ultimate utility of the gun by more recent invention that it was not wise.

Mr. SEWELL. The Senator from Massachusetts in charge of this bill has several questions mixed up. I doubt if the Department has made a report against this gun unless the Senator can produce it. The board that investigated this gun wind up by saying that they do not approve of it entirely, but that is not a new thing in the Ordnance Department. It is well known to the Senate that the Ordnance Department very rarely approve of anything that they do not originate, and that if you want to have advanced improvements in arms and armaments you have in many cases to force them on the Ordnance Department of the Army.

The board can not finish this report without giving its earnest testimony as to its belief in the sincere integrity of Mr. J. R. Haskell, and expressing its admiration for his courage and energy. Believing thoroughly in the principle of his invention, he has, unaided by the Government, wrecked his fortune and impoverished himself and family in his efforts to provide a powerful weapon for the national defense. He stands high among all who know him, and no higher anywhere than with the members of this board, who have for years watched his struggles under adverse circumstances to perfect his invention.

The committee which investigated this matter in the House of Representatives made a strong report in favor of the multicharge gun, and on that report the Secretary of War was ordered to have this gun constructed and the tests made of the gun. It is not a new thing. The gun has been constructed at the expense of Mr. Haskell and has been tested, and in that test the 6-inch bore multicharge gun exceeded in range and penetration the ordinary 9-inch guns, at the same time using 10,000 pounds less pressure to the square inch. The theory of it is that the discharge from the multicharge gun brings less pressure on the gun than is involved in the expansion of the material.

I beg to say that this inventor has spent years of his time and I believe about $300,000 of money to perfect this gun, and having given him last year an appropriation we owe it to him that that appropriation shall be continued.

Recognizing the fact from the votes of the Senate that the cast-iron guns will not be appreciated hereafter, as I do not think they ought to be, I am perfectly willing to modify the amendment, and take the responsibility in the absence of the chairman of the Military Committee to modify the amendment by providing for the manufacture of one steel gun at $60,000. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept the amendment so modified.

Mr. DAWES. I will read from the report of the board on fortifications which has been made to this body what led me to the remark which the Senator from New Jersey criticised:

> The great improvements in the quality of steel and in the manufacture of slow-burning powders, with the resulting increase in the length of bore and weight of the charge, have already within a few years past led to a marked increase in the velocity and energy of the projectile without impressing an undue strain upon the walls of the gun, and it is this condition of the art which has set aside that which at one time promised to be a useful invention—guns manufactured upon the multicharge principle, such as the "Haskell" and "Ripley." The board can not recommend the manufacture or purchase of either of these guns. From information which appears to have been carefully compiled and laid before the board, the Haskell multicharge gun would much exceed in weight and cost a single charge gun of the same power.

Mr. SEWELL. Yes, and it will exceed in power and force at the same time. The paragraph which was read by the Senator in charge of the bill might be more forcibly applied to section 4 of the bill as reported from the committee——

> To enable the Secretary of War to contract with the South Boston Ironworks for the construction of ten 12-inch muzzle-loading, rifled, cast-iron mortars—

A gun which has become entirely obsolete, and of which I suppose we have five hundred lying along the coast at the present time. Still the committee will report an absolute contract in a section of the bill without giving even the Secretary of War discretion, and naming the price to be paid.

Mr. DAWES. It is in his discretion.

Mr. SEWELL. I take that back. It is in the discretion of the Secretary of War, but it is an absolute direction for the purchase of a gun which has become practically obselete, fixing the price. Still an obligation of the Government entered into last year, when this gentleman had to spend money to make preparations, to change his plans in order to carry out that clause in the appropriation act of last year—an obligation of the Government of that kind will not meet with the approval of the committee.

I submit a modification of the amendment reducing it to one gun.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> For the manufacture of one improved Haskell multicharge gun of 8-inch caliber, $60,000; the gun to be made under the supervision and according to the direction of the projector; this appropriation being in lieu of the unexecuted provision for the multicharge gun in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey read from the report of some committee, a House committee perhaps, a high compliment to Mr. Haskell. It was a deserved compliment. The man has exhibited a great deal of inventive genius, a great deal of energy, and has spent a large sum of money upon what at one time promised to be an invention of considerable value; pardon me if I make it clear to the most unprofessional mind.

He proposed to put nearly an ordinary charge of powder in the base of the gun, the projectile upon that, and then at intervals running above the shot to have a series of pockets, as it were, to be screwed into the gun, containing powder, and the shot as it passed each pocket would discharge the powder within that pocket, and so continue to renew the pressure upon the shot as it went out. That was to save the explosion of a very large amount of powder at one time in the base of the bore, and to get a greater velocity by a less strain upon the gun. The practical difficulty is if you construct it of cast-iron you have all these blocks and warts upon the side of the gun, which make a very curious-looking weapon of it, and the result is an unequal crystallization, and what the technical men call veins of weakness in it.

Another incident of the invention is its very slow process to load. In the first place the first charge and projectile are to be put in the base, and then these several little infant guns which issue along the side of the gun again are to be loaded and attached. In the mean time the battle is supposed to be going on. It is rather a slow operation. No doubt a 6-inch gun on the Haskell principle would get great speed and a great deal of force, but the fortification board——

Mr. SEWELL. It gives greater force than any other gun that has ever been tried.

Mr. HAWLEY. No doubt the 6-inch gun if you had time to load it and fire it would give more force to the projectile than an ordinary 6-inch rifle, unless you take one of the ordinary 6-inch steel rifles now and do the same thing by that, just attach these little bags of powder to that, and then you would beat the Haskell gun.

But during all the time that Mr. Haskell has been prosecuting this work with a great deal of energy and science the art of gun-making has gone on until, as the Senator from Massachusetts has explained it, we now make a steel gun and slow-burning powder, which powder continues to burn all the time and presses forward the shot while in the chamber of the gun and gets a still greater result than the Haskell gun out of a very much simpler weapon. A steel modern-forged gun on the Haskell principle 6 inches bore would give as much power or more than an 8-inch forged steel rifle. The 8-inch forged steel rifle would give the same power that a 6-inch Haskell would with this improvement upon it.

I think unfortunately for Mr. Haskell the progress of the military art has left him. I sympathize with him. He is an ingenious, excellent, faithful man.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I think I have read somewhere of a famous gun—

> That whether aimed at duck or plover
> Kicks back and knocks the owner over.

I am not sure that I have that classical quotation right; but I should like to know at whom this gun is to be aimed. If it is to be placed somewhere I should like to know where. I should like to know in what direction it is going to shoot. It looks to me like it is going to kill more people in Virginia than anywhere else.

This is a bill to make a gun ostensibly, with the amendments put in here by the committee. What do you want with a gun? Whom do you propose to fight with your gun? It is a conceded fact that England does not ask you for anything but to subject yourselves to serfdom and to allow yourselves to be made the purchasers of her manufactures. Do you want this to go and fight Mexico with? Take the guns you have. I think we can whip her with what we have on hand.

This bill gives to England all she could ask, and giving her that you do not need any guns on the Atlantic Ocean. I know that this is controverted here. I know it is said that free trade is not specifically mentioned in the bill. Neither are the Ten Commandments; neither is the Lord's Prayer; yet we know they are in existence. We know that free trade is howling around over this country, and we know that New England to-day, protection as she is, is only for protection so far as protection protects the manufactured article and not the raw material.

This bill says that we will invite people from the other side of the Atlantic Ocean to come here and establish factories and to make their own plant and to bring with them all the material that they shall choose to bring, and that the United States Government shall make under this bill a contract with them to take what they shall manufacture. That may satisfy some manufacturing States, but it does not satify those who have to go down into the mines and bring out the ore.

A few years ago we could not sell the iron ores west and south of this capital because, it was said, they were too largely intermingled with manganese; they did not make the best iron, and the best iron was required to make the best guns. Since that time we have Bessemer steel, we have other grades of steel, and now we have in two States of the Union south and west of the capital more manganese than there is in all Sweden, to which the Senator from Connecticut referred to-day, and we can make all the steel that is required to manufacture all the guns that this country may want a hundred or five hundred or a thousand years to come.

You propose to let in the manganese, the ores from foreign countries, on condition that a syndicate shall follow them, or shall, forsooth, come ahead of them and join a syndicate here to manufacture guns at a named place, as it was in the original amendment.

Whom do you propose to fight with these guns, I repeat, and what do you propose to fight for? I have never yet known a country to go to war for mere sentiment, (unless it was half or one-third of this country of our own,) except to promote their commercial interests. You give them by this bill all that they ask for. The very moment that you allow the moth to commence eating into our cloth you adopt in America the principle which Lord North suggested to the council that surrounded him when the Boston tea was thrown overboard. Once inaugurate the principle, in other words, and you will soon find the consummation.

Mr. President, I did not propose to argue this question, but I propose to give the reasons why I shall vote against this and all similar bills. If we are American people, united by a common interest, that interest being protection to American industries, then let us know it; but if we are American people divided up into selfish factions then let us know that.

The people whom I in part represent I say can furnish all the iron ore that is necessary to make all the guns that this and all the countries of the world will need for general warfare for a century, for a thousand years to come.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be sorry to have the Senator labor under a misapprehension. I am afraid he has not looked at that text of the bill. The bill is too strict in my judgment, requiring that every single item of the project shall be from American material; that all the forging shall be of American product and manufactured in the United States. I am afraid under this we could not use a Swedish bloom if we wanted to. I am afraid we could not use a little foreign manganese or spiegeleisen. We can furnish all the ordnance, and the bill provides that we shall.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I shall be very much obliged to the Senator if he has correctly informed me that I am mistaken. I should like to be certain that I am.

Mr. HAWLEY. "And all the forgings"——

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not understand that forgings mean raw material.

Mr. HAWLEY. "And all the forgings shall be of American product and manufactured in the United States."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. "All the forgings shall be of American product," but I could draw from my pocket an amendment of his which better states it. All the forgings shall be of American product, but I think the Senator is possibly mistaken when he undertakes to say that the gentlemen who are invited here from abroad to fix their plant on this side and make a contract with the Government to the extent of making one or two guns can not bring the forgings, as he calls them, of one or two guns. That is the way I understand the bill. I know Senators here differ from me. I have talked to half a dozen of them today about it.

But, Mr. President, that is not the question. We do not want any doubtful legislation on this subject. I do not want any doubtful legislation on it, for one. If I represent anything here it is peculiarly the principle of protection, protection to that which American labor produces. If we want to have that specified in the bill, it is very easy to put it there. I do not see it there.

I do apprehend danger to come from this measure. I do apprehend that it means what I saw here two years ago—the introduction of Spanish ore as ballast to American steamships to be introduced along the Atlantic coast to fill the blast furnaces of New England because, forsooth, Virginia and all the other States in the Union which are now underlaid with these same ores can not get their ore there at the same rates of transportation, because one has water transportation and the other must come by railway.

I say, sir, that I present these views only as the reason why I shall vote against the bill with this amendment on it. I am for coast defenses. I want to see this Government not only able to take care of itself at home, but if necessary to go upon the seas and challenge any country in the Old World. I voted to-day and would vote to-morrow for an increase of the naval establishment, but I want America to make her own navy; I want her to employ her own workmen; I want her to expend her own money among her own people, and if she means protection when she says so, that she will protect herself against the world by just such processes and just such methods as these.

I may be mistaken about this, but I would rather see the English written in plain, fair, square, monosyllabic sentences. I do not see in this anything more than a right guaranteed to these people under the very name and the word between themselves and the Government to come here in the discretion of a Secretary of the Navy or a Secretary of War to establish a plant on this side of the Atlantic and bring with them all the raw material that they may want, and make for us the guns that we shall never need if we can concede free trade to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] as modified.

The amendment wes rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

TREASURY SURPLUS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 126) directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the question is taken I ask the Senator from Iowa whether it is his purpose to go on to-night?

Mr. ALLISON. I shall of course accommodate myself to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the joint resolution up?

Mr. BLAIR. It is not up. I ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is to take up the joint resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a statement.

Mr. BECK. I object until the pending question is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky objects.

Mr. BECK. Until this motion is disposed of.

Mr. BLAIR. Then let the joint resolution be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senate either that we may go on to-morrow morning with the vetoed pension cases, as has been suggested and of which I gave notice of my intention to move to-morrow morning—either to go on with those to-morrow morning or that we may have a night session and dispose of them to-night. ["No," "No!"]

Mr. KENNA. We do not want to do either. As one gentleman——

Mr. BLAIR. Then I will say that to-morrow morning at the conclusion of the morning business I shall move to take up the vetoed pension cases in their order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Vermont to withdraw his motion for the purpose of passing a bill which is upon the Calendar. It will only take the time to read it, there is no opposition to it, and it is a local measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 29, 1886, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 28, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] yesterday voted "ay" on the substitute of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] for the interstate-commerce bill, and afterward changed his vote to "no." He is recorded as not voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a recollection of the gentleman from Louisiana changing his vote. The correction will be made.

The Journal was then approved as corrected.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will state it after the Clerk reads the few lines from the Washington Star of yesterday afternoon, which I have sent to the desk. It is headed: "Commerce Committee's last meeting."

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. REAGAN then stated to the committee that he thought the interstate-commerce bill too important a measure to be passed in a hurry without proper discussion, and as there would be no time to give it such consideration this session he would ask the consent of the committee to make a statement to the House, withdrawing it from consideration until next winter. The committee approved of this course, and Mr. REAGAN will withdraw the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will explain the reason why I rise to this question of personal privilege. I endeavored yesterday to get the floor, but was not recognized, so that I might make a statement to cover exactly what is stated in the Evening Star of yesterday afternoon upon information obtained through the reporters of that paper. I consider this is a question of personal privilege, because after the adjournment of the committee and after the House got into session at 11 o'clock I stated to a number of members that the interstate-commerce bill would not come up till next session; that the chairman of the committee on his own motion at a meeting of the Committee on Commerce had stated just what is stated in the Evening Star as it has been read from the desk. Some members on this side, known to me, were not here and present to vote, being probably absent from the House on account of what I had stated. My colleague [Mr. BINGHAM] has just made a statement to the House as to how he would have voted had he been here.

I call the attention of the House to this because I consider it a personal matter. The understanding in the Committee on Commerce was complete, and not one member of that committee, so far as I have learned, had any idea by any kind of notice or statement from the chairman of the committee that he would call the bill up. Members went and asked him and he made no explanation. And I would like him for his own sake and for the sake of the members of the committee who were not informed of what he was going to do after he had informed the Committee on Commerce that he would not call up the bill—I would like him to state why he departed from what his word had stated he would not do.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, for a moment.

Mr. REAGAN. I think a word of explanation is necessary from me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] says he yields for a moment. Does he yield the floor?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I yield for an explanation.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not ask the gentleman to yield the floor to me, and I do not take it from him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he yielded the floor, and he said he yielded for a moment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will let the gentleman have the floor in his own right to make an explanation, if he can make an explanation of his conduct.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not yield to the gentleman from Texas merely for the purpose of making an explanation. He can yield the floor or retain it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I yield the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. After the Committee on Commerce had made its formal adjournment until the first Tuesday of the next session I mentioned to the members of the committee present that the question was an important one whether we should call up the interstate-commerce bill, and that I would like to hear an expression of opinion from them. The opinion expressed by the members of the committee present, I think by about all of them, was favorable to the postponement of the consideration of the bill till the next session, through the apprehension that it would necessarily have to go into conference, and it was not probable that we would get a final agreement at this session of Congress, and if we could not that it was perhaps better it should go over till next session. That was the view I entertained of the subject at the time, and which I suggested to the committee.

When I came upon the floor and the matter was suggested to several members here, I found there were protests against that course, and as we approached the conclusion of the consideration of the bill forfeiting the Northern Pacific land grants a number of members came to me and urged very earnestly the absolute necessity of acting upon the interstate-commerce bill at this session.

I felt impelled by the suggestions made by gentlemen on the floor to call the bill up. When the opportunity came for calling it up I had no time to go about and notify the members of the committee whom I had told that I believed I would adopt the course of postponing the bill. That was the language I used in conversation with the members of the committee—that I believed I would do so. It was not a proceeding in committee. There was no vote, no action by the committee, but informally, in conversation after the committee had adjourned, I suggested that I believed I would adopt the course of asking to have the bill postponed. As I have stated, the urgency of members upon the floor that it should not be postponed induced me at the last hour, or almost at the last minute, before the consideration of the land-forfeiture bill was concluded, to determine to call up the interstate-commerce bill. In doing so I felt that members of the committee would perhaps be somewhat surprised, because of the previous informal understanding that it was to be postponed. But, Mr. Speaker, while these are the actual facts as they occurred, I desire to add that no one could have been really taken by surprise. The members of the committee were, every one of them, upon the floor, and every one of them who was present voted. There was not a full committee present. When the matter came up I made a proposition to take a vote upon the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce and accept the bill which received a majority vote as a basis for amendment; but that was objected to. I have stated now the circumstances under which I called the bill up after there had been an informal understanding in conversation that I would probably pursue a different course.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the conversation in the Committee on Commerce was not informal. Every member who was present at the time knew that the chairman of the committee had said that he would come in here and say to the House that he wished the bill to go over until next winter so that we could have an opportunity to debate it fully. Now, sir, the members of the committee fortunately were present in the House when the gentleman proceeded to call the bill up, but that does not excuse the course of the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VAN EATON. Is there any limit to this debate? If not, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman makes the point——

Mr. VAN EATON. I do make the point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order that this is not privileged. The Chair is clearly of opinion that it is not a privileged matter.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the statement which the gentleman has made does not excuse him for not having notified his fellow-members of his intention to call the bill up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees no question of privilege whatever involved in this matter.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, because it involves the truth of my statement to my fellow-members in regard to this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is called to order by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON], who makes the point that this is not a privileged matter. The Chair sustains the point of order. The rule states distinctly what are questions of privilege.

JULIO R. SANTOS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, in response to the House resolution of the 10th instant, a report from the Secretary of State, and accompanying papers, relating to the imprisonment in Ecuador and subsequent release of Julio R. Santos.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 27, 1886.

The SPEAKER. The papers accompanying this message are very voluminous, and unless some gentleman desires to have them printed they will be referred in the first instance to the Committee on Foreign Affairs without being printed.

There was no objection.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the joint resolution (H. Res. 201) for printing the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CAPT. DOMINICK LYNCH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 1630) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Capt. Dominick Lynch, United States Navy, with Senate amendments; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were severally referred as follows:

The bill (S. 2451) for the relief of Mrs. Julia De Quindre—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2311) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Berkley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2708) for the relief of Maria L. Strong—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING, OXFORD, MISS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 2794) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection and construction of a public building at Oxford, Miss.," approved July 12, 1882.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be taken up for present consideration. It has been fully considered by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read.

Mr. MORGAN. I now ask that the report of the House committee be read.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, saving my right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether the Federal courts are regularly held at this place.

Mr. MORGAN. They have been for twenty-five years.

Mr. PAYSON. Are they now?

Mr. MORGAN. They are now.

Mr. PAYSON. What is the population of the town?

Mr. MORGAN. About 5,000. The courts have been established there for very many years.

Mr. WILKINS. This bill simply increases the limit of cost, and provides for completing the building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 246) to pro-
